What did she mean by that? Was she hinting? Was there a sly insinuation that some who write about the flaming time of 1860 sprinkle their pages with caustic criticisms of the Yankees? Well, maybe I had better not press that inquiry. Probably she meant only to pay a compliment to the amiable spirit of the author of this book, and in that she is right. There is not a drop of acid in the bowl. It is all pure sweet cream. Reading it is like walking along one of the flowery roads around Natchez, overarched by venerable trees, bordered by blooming vines, in whose leafy and fragrant recesses the birds are singing, with here and there a vista that gives a glimpse of the great river in the distance rolling onward to the sea. The author of this book has caught the spirit of romance that clings to those picturesque hills and vales and century-scarred bluffs, and the beauty of the scene is diffused over this book from the beginning to the end. You see the happy rollicking girl amid the roses of her stately home; the merry young woman whose sky of hope is as bright as the one that bends above her as she gallops with her gallant lover along the lanes; the shrewd match-maker when the cunning planter brings the young folks together; the pickaninnies scampering along the roadside to greet the kind-hearted master; the wedding; the mutual devotion of the couple; the rising tide of success; the beautiful fidelity of the young wife, hardly out of her teens, as the helpmeet of her husband as planter, soldier, congressman, senator, cabinet officer; the gaiety of Washington society; the mutterings of the coming storm; the rending of sacred ties of friendship—O well, it is all there, told in a charming style. It is the finest picture of the Old South that I know. It is a notable contribution, too, to American history. The author leaves us on the threshold of the greatest tragedy of modern civilization, the so-called Civil War. The storm signals from Boston to New Orleans are flying and snapping in the rising wind. There is the roll of the drum and the shrill music of the fife, and the call of the bugle, and the rallying of the patriots, and the waving of the flags. No guns have boomed, but they are in position! It is an epic of the Southern revolution. And all of it without an unkind word about the Northern people! Mrs. Rowland has the historic mind. In this she beats Macaulay. He could not write history to save his life without letting it be seen which side he was on; but though the author of this book is herself a Southerner and was intensely in love with her heroine, if you did not know, it might puzzle you to find out from the book what her own politics are. Impartial, holding the balance evenly; and she a woman! How she did it puzzles me, for try as I will to "forgive and forget" those fiery days, some of the 1860 spirit seeps through in spite of me. I have a sly suspicion that is what milady had in mind when she made her remark about the absence of any unkindness in Mrs. Rowland's book; though she was too polite to make a personal application. However, she did not live in the wake of Sherman's march—in fact she had not reached this planet when the war raged around us. But she is right, so is Mrs. Rowland, in leaving out all the bitterness engendered by the strife of former times. I'll admit all of that, and with such amiable examples to encourage me, I'll try and do better.

Didn't I tell you what book I am writing about? Well, well, it is "Varina Howell, wife of Jefferson Davis, by Eron Rowland." It is published by Macmillan Company and it ought to be in every American library for its value as history. It has been highly commended by a distinguished writer in Boston. That is enough.

The garden is blooming—peas, potatoes, cabbages, beans, beets, the whole thing growing; rooster crowing; hens cackling, gobbler strutting, birds singing! I'm all right, thank you. Hurrah for the universe!

MISSIONS AND AMORY METHODISM.

The great cause of missions takes high rank in the program and activities of the Amory Methodist church. Through the foresight and generosity of Brother E. D. Gilmore, a loyal and devoted member of this church until his death last November, an annuity of $1,600 is to be applied to the support of two foreign missionaries. In addition to this work provided for in the foreign fields, this generous and unselfish layman provided for a full-time worker in the home field at a salary of $1,800 per year. The rest of the church, wishing to share with Brother Gilmore and his good wife, who survives him and shares equally with him in this great work, decided to supplement the above amount and employ two full-time workers in the foreign field. After much correspondence by Mr. C. M. Harrison, an honored son of the late lamented Rev. K. M. Harrison and a loyal member of the Amory church, and a little skirmishing by the writer with the Department of Specials, General Mission Board, we were assigned Dr. W. B. Lewis, a native Mississippian now doing medical and evangelistic work in the Congo, and the Rev. A. Parmentier, of Antwerp, Belgium. The salaries of these two missionaries amount to $2,250, and it is good to be able to say that the full amount has been contributed and is on deposit in the bank of Amory, subject to the check of J. F. Rawis, treasurer of the Board of Missions.

Our people are delighted with the idea of Specials. We have the pictures of Dr. Lewis and Brother Parmentier. We hope some day to have a group picture of Dr. and Mrs. Lewis and little daughter, Zada Jane. We expect to frame these pictures and hang them in some appropriate place in the church, and we feel that soon our church will feel by these people that they are our very own.

Needless to say that our January-February cultivation movement for missions and other activities concerning the cause of missions proved a success. What has already been said is sufficient evidence.

Our church also supports the Dual Special with a regular monthly offering. Through this channel it is helping more effectively to spread the "Good News" throughout the rural sections.

This great missionary program of Amory Methodism has just begun, but we are rejoiced at the thought that it is to go on indefinitely. It will be like the leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal. No doubt but that these means shall become the power of God unto salvation to many who are now "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." C. A. PARKS.

Amory, Miss.

A solemn yet a joyful thing is life,
Which, being full of duties,
Is for thee of gladness full.
And full of lofty hopes.

GRENADA COLLEGE TO BE ENDOWED.

At its recent session, the North Mississippi Conference appointed a commission to submit plans for the endowment of Grenada College to the approaching district conferences. The following members met in Jackson, Miss., on March 23: Judge Percy Bell, Judge J. G. McGowen, Senator John W. Kyle, D. H. Hall, Rev. V. C. Curtis, Rev. J. T. Lewis, and Rev. J. H. Holder. After careful dellberation the following paper was adopted and ordered given to the press:

The commission appointed by the 1927 session of the North Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to devise and present to the district conferences of 1928 a feasible plan for the endowment of Grenada College recommends the adoption by each district conference of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the North Mississippi Annual Conference to be held in 1928 be requested to authorize the Board of Education of said Conference to incorporate and to issue bonds in the sum of $300,000, to the payment of which the faith and credit of said Conference shall he pledged, said bonds to be given to the board of trustees of Grenada College as and for an endowment of said college, the details and conditions of said bonds and of their delivery to be determined by said boards.

Resolved, second, That said Conference be requested to levy an annual assessment as a part of the general budget of the pastoral charges of not more than $30,000, in lieu of all existing assessments for said college, to pay interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for the retirement thereof.

We believe this plan is not only necessary for the endowment of Grenada College, but that it is the only practicable plan we can devise. We present the following facts and arguments as to the necessity and feasibility of said plan:

Grenada College is the only four-year college for women owned by Mississippi Methodists. Louisiana and Tennessee have none, and Arkansas and Alabama have one each. The field is large and the opportunity great.

In 1910, the college property was valued at $80,000, with a debt of $22,500. It now has endowment funds that offset the total indebtedness, and the net value of the property is estimated at $400,000.

It has more than paid operating expenses. All donations hy the church have been used in buildings and equipment. Since the present prices for board and tuition were fixed, five members have been added to the faculty, and all salaries have been raised except that of the president. Additional endowment is needed to care for the increased expense.

Its work is standard, its alumnae are admitted to graduate study in leading universities without conditions and also granted professional license as teachers. However, it cannot become a member of the Southern Association of Colleges until it has a minimum of $300,000 endowment. It must have this membership or lose its rating as a four-year college.

This endowment can be secured through a bond issue, and the interest and sinking fund can be provided by increasing the present assessments on behalf of Grenada College by $6,000 per annum. Hence our plan given above, and our earnest desire that our people rally to the support of our college for women in this hour of its great need. We believe they can more easily pay the interest than the principal of an endowment at the present time. A similar plan has been used by the Baptists in Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas; by the Presbyterians of Mississippi and Tennessee; and by the Methodists of Florida and Louisiana. The property is too valuable to lie idle; the school is too important to be closed. We ask that most careful consideration be given the plan at the approaching district conferences.

PERCY BELL, Chairman.

IN THE HEART OF LOUISIANA.

The third evangelistic conference was held in the Opelousas area, comprising eighteen churches in six charges. This came in the midst of the Standard Training School at Opelousas. It proved a good time when the workers could be gathered together for the consideration of the main issue in church work, soul saving.

The evangelistic address was delivered hy Rev. C. D. Atkinson, our Conference Superintendent of Sunday Schools, who chose for his theme, "Personal Evangelism." It was a searching address, and caused us to reflect as to whether we were actually engaging in this most important part of the kingdom's work. This is our high calling in Christ Jesus, to become a soul-winner. Why not keep it to the front all the time?

The following were present: Preachers—Andrus, Atkinson, Boddie, Hoffpauir, Knight, Lutz, McLellan, Reames, Suddith, and White. Lay Leaders—Butler, Schell, and others; quite a number of the good women who are active workers in the Sunday school. We could not get along without them.

At the close of these meetings, we go to the "mourners' bench" and offer prayer for the revival. What better place to go to than the altar? It is the place where the revival fires will have to begin to burn. You ought to hear some of the boys pray. It reminds us of the good old times when a fellow got hold of the horns of the altar and brought down the fire. Victory is in the air when we are burdened in prayer. On with the revival! Fight the devil. Show no spirit of compromise. Souls are to be saved with a full salvation, which means God's presence, God's power, and God's love in the heart.

Rev. I. T, Reames announced that revival services would soon hegin at Eunice, in which he will be assisted by one of his own boys, Prof. Floyd Andrus, who has lately heen licensed to exhort and recommended for license to preach. Blessed is that pastor who can find such an efficient helper among his own young men! Things are propitious for a great revival at this place. The people are working and praying unto this end.

Rev. D. B. Boddie will run a "double-header" during pre-Easter week. Services will be held at Ville Platte in the afternoon and Opelousas at night. White and Knight will assist him. We are expecting a great victory at both places. Indications point to a great revival of heartfelt religion.

Our Standard Training School at Opelousas gave fifty-one credits. The interest was at high tide, and many attended the sessions at various times.

Rev. Claude H. Mayo, of the Melder charge, announces a Cokesbury Training School at Hineston from April 15 to 20. Also the following schedule of revival meetings: Zion, June 11 to 15; La Camp, June 18 to 24; Fellowship, June 26 to July 6; Forest Hill, July 14 to 20; Melder, July 22 to 29; and Camp Grounds, July 31 to Aug. 4. Let prayers he made unto God for these important meetings.

Rev. George D. Purcell, of Oberlin, writes us: "The storm of last Thursday damaged the church at Reeves, almost wrecking it. We raised a fund sufficient to have it straightened out, and the contract was let to a competent man who is to put it in first-class order. We are expecting the lumber to-night for the new church at Oberlin. We have bought the two vacant lots by the church, and now have a plot of ground 185 by 168 feet on which to huild." Good for George. He is hringing some great things to pass. Next we will be hearing about some great revivals in those churches.

ALBERT S. LUTZ, Presiding Elder.

CONCERNING THE SUPERANNUATES.

To the Preachers.

My Dear Brother: I am writing you this letter to urge you to carry out the program, as far as possible, that is given in the "Pastor's Guide."

April and May are the months that we have to use for the superannuates. Please do not allow anything to get in the way of this campaign. Urge the committees to see every member and get a subscription if possible. It is up to the preacher and the church members as to what we do. This is our last chance.

You, your wife, or your children, perhaps will will some day be a claimant on this fund.

When this campaign is over, have the treasurer of each church in the charge to make a report to you the amount collected, and the amount subscribed, making a list and sending to me, and sending the money to Dr. Luther E. Todd, St. Louis, Mo.

I will send self-addressed postal cards, in due time, on which you may report to me.

Cordially,

J. M. MORSE.

To the Laymen.

Dear Co-Worker: We are in the midst of the "Clean-Up Campaign" for the superannuates. I am sure that you are going to do your best. Please stress the question to your people and urge them to raise the entire quota for your church.

It is a downright pity that this great cause has been so fearfully neglected by so many of our churches. Let's bring the Mississippi Conference up to first place on the list. See that your two-minute speakers call attention to the cause at the Sunday school, the Epworth League, and the preaching hour. Ask your pastor to preach a strong sermon no the subject.

Each church is expected to raise this quota or at least one-fifth of the amount unpaid. At least twenty charges will pay out this year, and we believe all of them will finally.

Do not be discouraged. Continue the agitation, take the collection; get all the cash and subscriptions you can.

I supplied your pastor with subscription envelopes. Call on him for them.

Cordially,

J. M. MORSE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD MEETING.

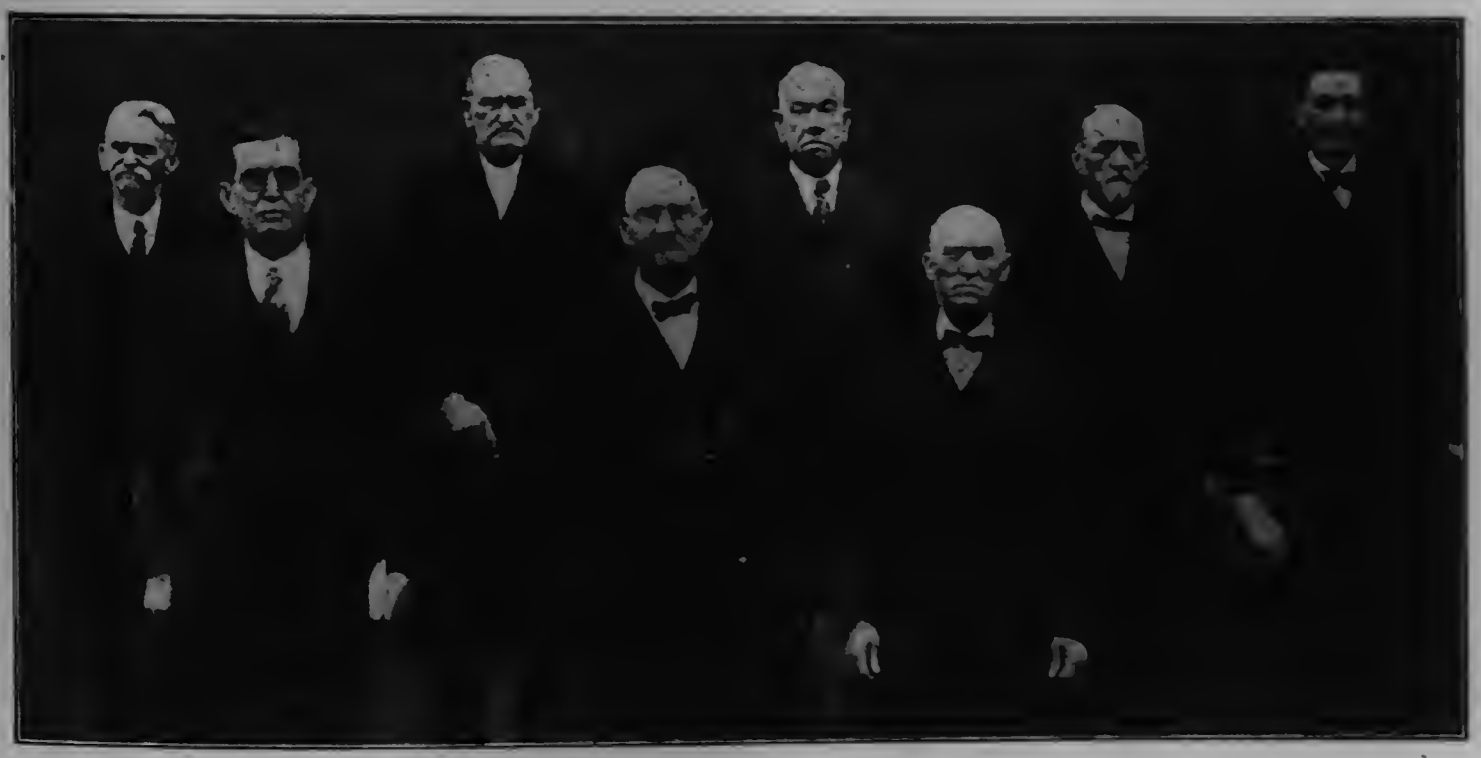
A meeting of the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board is called by authority of the president, Dr. W. W. Drake, in the Haas hotel, Alexandria, La., April 10, at 5:30 p. m.

W. H. GILES, Secretary.

When the Church responds so generously to the crying need of others, how can she ignore the distressing deprivations of her superannuated preachers?

Right now Southern Methodism is on trial before the world. We have preached Christ to mankind and urged that He be taken as the Savior and Guide of every life. In Him we move and have our being. Out of Him we are nothing but a lot of noise—"sounding brass and tinkling cymbal."

But the very soul of our Christ is loving regard and a helping hand for those who are aged, infirm, and in need of succor. It is regrettable that none of His twelve disciples had to be superannuated, for then He would have charted the way for us under such conditions. But the soul of Him is guide enough.



Some Superannuates of the Louisiana Conference—1927

One cannot think of Jesus at a Southern Methodist Conference, unmindful of the importunity of a John bearing witness from the depths of superannuation. What a ringing call He would make to the lay members, urging them to action in John's behalf. He would not listen to plaintive crying from His broken-down preachers from year to year, and quiet His soul by singing with others: "E'en Down to Old Age," etc.

No, Jesus would act not merely by voting for a high-sounding resolution, but by an inspiration that would cause the voters to do something besides "resolute." Jesus did not attend any of our Conferences in person, but let us hope He was at all of them in spirit. We must prove to the world that we are the true representatives of Him.

IF THE SERVICE OF PREACHERS MEANS SO MUCH TO THE CHURCH, HOW CAN SHE CAST THEM ADRIFT IN OLD-AGE INFIRMITIES TO EXIST ALMOST AS MENDICANTS?

THE RESURRECTION.

By Jonathan H. Brooks.

(This poem by a colored student at Tougaloo College, Mississippl, won third prize ln a recent national contest.—Editor.)

His friends went off and left him dead
In Joseph's suhterranean bed,
Embalmed wlth myrrh and sweet aloes,
And wrapped in snow-whlte burlal clothes.

Then shrewd men came and set a seal
Upon hls grave, lest thieves should steal
His llfeless form away, and claim
For him an undeserving fame.

"There ls no use," the soldiers sald,
"Of standing sentrles by the dead."
Wherefore they drew their cloaks around
Themselves, and fell upon the ground,
And slept like dead men, all nlght through,
In the pale moonlight and chllling dew.

A muffled whiff of sudden breath
Ruffled the passive air of death.

He woke, and raised hlmself in hed;
Recalled how he was cruclfied;
Touched both hands' fingers to hls head,
And lightly felt his fresh-healed slde.
Then wlth a deep triumphant slgh
He coolly put hls grave-clothes hy—
Folded the sweet white wlnding-sheet,
The toweling, the linen hands,
The napkin, all with careful hands—
And left the horrowed chamber neat.

His steps were like the breaking day;
So soft across the watch he stole
He did not wake a single soul,
Or spill one dewdrop hy the way.

Now Calvary was loveliness;
Lilies that flowered thereupon
Pulled off the white moon's pallid dress,
And put the morning's vesture on.

"Why seek the llving among the dead?
He is not here," the angel said.
The early winds took up the words,
And hore them to the lilting blrds,
The leafing trees, and every thing
That breathed the living breath of spring.

THE SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENC.

The Shreveport Dlstrlct Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in annual sesslon at the Mangum Memorial Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., Tuesday, March 20, at 9:30 a.m., Dr. W. W. Holmes, presidlng elder, in the chair.

The devotional for the openlng service consisted of singlng of hymns, a fervent prayer by Brother S. L. Rlggs, of Cedar Grove, and an interesting Bible message hy Brother Alonzo Early, of Belcher, who used Paul's Epistle to Philemon as the Scripture reading.

The chairman called the conference to order, and the conference elected Brother Don E. Dulaney secretary. Dr. Holmes made a brief introductory statement, outlining the program of the conference, which he scheduled to complete wlthin one day of three sessions.

Conference committees were appointd, and the roll of superannuates was called. Brother B. T. Crews, Brother S. J. Davies, and Dr. S. A. Steel reported, evidencing their continued falth and joy in the Lord. Telegrams of sympathetic interest and greetlngs were sent to the following superannuates who were unable to attend on account of illness: Brother W. F. Henderson, Sr., Brother S. S. Holladay, Brother J. G. Sloan.

The roll of local preachers was called, their characters passed, and license renewed.

Brother Jack Holland Midyett, of Grand Cane, was granted a local preachers' license.

Brother Harry W. Brown, former financial secretary of Noel Memorlal, was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission into the traveling connection.

Reports of the traveling preachers in charge of the Shreveport churches showed progress and activlty throughout the district. Among the outstanding accomplishments is the completion of the Park Avenue Methodist Church, of which Brother R. T. Ware is pastor. The missionary campaign has been well handled in the district, and many of the churches have made substantial gains in membershlp. Revivals are being planned throughout the distrlct. Rev. Dan Kelly, general evangelist, ls at present conducting an active campaign at the Cedar Grove church.

The vital causes of our great church were presented. Brother R. W. Vaughan, superintendent, represented the cause of our Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, expressing the need of a liberal Easter offering. Brother C. D. Atkinson, Louisiana Conference Sunday School Superintendent, spoke ln the interest of Sunday school work with especial reference to training work. He emphasized the Standard Tralning School to be held at Alexandria, April 10-11. Dr. George Sexton, president Centenary College, spoke in the interest of our school, showing its progress and worthy activities. Rev. D. B. Raulins, president Mansfield College, emphaslzed the importance of interest in our girls' school. He wants our girls to attend the school, our sympathy and criticism, and sufficient money to endow and equip the school.

Dr. R. E. Smith, of Centenary College, was called on to speak. Doing so, hc made a very significant statement wlth reference to the need of our support ln meetlng the $300,000 bond issue as a manifestation of genuine confidence and loyalty.

Brother J. G. Snelling, Conference Missionary Secretary, reported optimism on the part of the General Board for success in securing the necessary funds from the free-will offering to enable them to carry on. Praises! Brother Snelling also gave a very interesting and challenging report on the Memorial Home.

Mrs. H. B. Wren, Dlstrict Secretary Woman's Work, reported progress in the work of the societies along many lines.

H. H. Baln was called and made a brief report on District Lay Acitivities, urging the organization of Wesley Brotherhoods in all the churches.

The following delegates and alternates were elected to the Annual Conference: Delegates—Dr. H. B. Wren, W. A. McKennon, R. H. Nelson, R. T. Douglas, T. S. Matthews, Tom Hickman, Mrs. Fred Russ, J. C. Joyner, Mrs. C. A. Lloyd, Mrs. A. M. Shaw, R. T. Moore.

Alternates—Mrs. A. J. Bonnette, Mrs. I. H. Pitts, J. C. Coyle, Dr. T. B. Tooke, Mrs. L. A. White, N. L. Hudson, Dr. T. O. Brinkley, J. P. Honaker, A. J. Scott, T. F. Sledge, Mrs. B. A. Gorton.

Brother J. B. Grambling, Epworth League Board president, made an urgent appeal in the interest of Epworth League activities, with special reference to the Mansfield Assemhly to bc held June 12-19, asking that special care be exercised in the selection of delegates. He urged that Epworth League Anniversary Day be observed in the churches as planned. A report of the achievements of the League was encouraging.

Dr. N. E. Joyner, Conference Secretary of Education, was called and spoke in the interest of our educational campaign, urging the payment of all pledges.

The work of Rev. A. W. Turner in the interest of prohibition was commended, and resolutions unanimously adopted requested the selection of a presidential candidate who is in favor of maintaining the Volstead law.

Two outstandlng events of the conference were the mornlng sermon by Dr. S. A. Steel, on "The Crucifixion of Our Lord," and the evening sermon by Dr. Frank L. Wells, pastor First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, in interest of the superannuate cause. These were hoth wonderfully impressive.

Resolutions of special commendation were ananimously adopted on behalf of Dr. W. W. Holmes, now serving the fourth year as presiding elder, and Mrs. Holmes.

The secretary was also commended for his service.

The benediction was pronounced by Dr. W. W. Holmes, and the conference adjourned.

DON E. DULANEY, Secretary.

THE LOUISIANA PASTORS' SCHOOL.

The last session of the Louisiana Annual Conference appointed a Board of Managers, and instructed the board to arrange for a Pastors' School to be held during the coming summer. The Board of Managers, appointed by the Board of Education, the Board of Missions, the Sunday School Board and the Epworth League Board, consists of W. W. Holmes, A. W. Turner, W. W. Drake, C. A. Morgan, and Robert E. Goodrich.

The Board of Managers met with Dr. Stonewall Anderson in Shreveport, early in the year and adopted the outlines of, and planned for, the Pastors' School. The details of the plane have about been worked out and we are hereby announcing to all our preachers, and the laity as well, the general facts of interest.

The school will be held July 9 to 20, and the school will be housed in Centenary College. All who attend the summer school will use the college dormitories and dlning hall. The courses chosen for the school have been selected with the hope of meeting our common needs. The faculty ls composed of the very strongest talent that our church can produce, and is composed of Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe, Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Dr. F. S. Parker, Dr. Allen Manchester, Dr. C. A. Bowen, and Dr. Thomas Carter. There will be no tuition or matriculation fees. The only expense will be transportation, books and lodging. The rate for board and room in Centenary College will be $1.25 a day. This is an exceptionally moderdate rate charged by the college, and it should be an inducement to those who would otherwise be kept away through fear of expenses.

Further announcements will be made later on, but this general statement is now glven out that our Louisiana preachers and church leaders may know that our school ls to be held, and that they may begin now to make plans to attend.

There will be no undergraduate courses offered this year.

ROBERT E. GOODRICH.

J Jumped for Joy when bedtime came,
K Kissed good-night all around;

"I'm last of all to go to bed,
But here's a nap for me!"

FRISK DECIDES.

By Florence Isaacson.

Vivian petted her faithful playmate, the old shepherd dog, and then stroked the silky hair of the little puppies. She seemed very cross about something.

"I'm not going to stay home and take care of the baby this afternoon," she said. "Would you, Frisk? Suppose you wanted to go over to your chum's and play, and some one told you you would have to mind the baby. Wouldn't you be cross, too? I'm just not going to do it."

So after lunch Vivian started off toward the gate. She was not as happy as she might have been, for down in her heart she had a tiny guilty feeling. Mother was busy and the baby was cross, but she had planned for a couple of days to go over to Molly's and she just couldn't give up the thought of it.

"Come on, Frisk," she called, "come on. Bet I can beat you to the gate." But she didn't beat. The swift-footed Frisk was at the gate ahead of her.

As she went through the gate she called Frisk, but Frisk only wagged her tail and stood still.

"Well, come on!" Vivian said impatiently. But Frisk did not move. However, she gave a pitiful bark and looked back toward the box on the porch.

"Well," said Vivian, "what's the matter? Why don't you come, if you want to? You surely don't want me to go alone, do you?"

Frisk ran back to the porch and looked at her tiny puppies a moment. Then she looked at Vivian, giving another plaintive little bark.

"All right," said Vivian, disgusted; "if you'd rather stay at home with those puppies than go with me and have a good time, why, all right," and she shut the gate and went hippity-hopping down the road.

"That silly dog," she said to herself, "staying home to take care of those babies when she loves to go along so much."

She slowed down to a walk and began to think.

"I wonder if I should have stayed at home," she thought.

Then she stopped and sat down on the edge of the road.

"Mother is awfully busy," she said to herself. "Maybe I ought to go back."

Then she got up and started to walk homeward.

"Well," she said, "if Frisk can stay home and mind her babies, guess I can stay home and mind ours. I can't let a dog do her duty better than I."

Just as she had gotten the baby to sleep and was thanking dear old Frisk for showing her her duty, Molly came running up the walk.

"Oh, Vivian, mother said that your mother was busy. I knew you would want to stay home and mind the baby, so I came over and brought my new ball."

So Vivian had a lovely afternoon after all, and she was much happier than she had been when she had meant to think only of her own pleasure.

AN INDIAN SHERLOCK HOLMES.

It would be a pity not to preserve the following anecdote, which illustrates that accuracy of observation which is often observed among the red men of the West.

An Indian, on his return to his home one day, found that a piece of venison which he had hung up to dry had been stolen. After taking his observations he set off through the woods in pursuit of the thief. When he had gone a short distance he met some persons, of whom he inquired whether they had seen a little old white man carrying a short gun, and accompanied by a small dog with a bobbed tail?

They had seen such a man, and when the Indian said the man had stolen his venison they asked how he could describe so exactly a man whom he had not seen.

The Indian answered: "I know the thief is a little man, because he used a pile of stone to stand on in order to reach the venison, where it hung. That he is an old man I know by his short steps, which I have traced over the dead leaves in the forest. He is a white man, for he walks turning out his toes, as an Indian never does. His gun I know to be short by the mark the muzzle made on the bark of a tree against which he leaned it. As for his dog, I can tell it is small by its tracks, and that its tail is bobbed I discovered by the mark it made in the dust where it sat while his master was taking down the meat."—Selected.

TOM'S COME-UPPANCE.

By Kate S. Gates.

Tom's teacher was unexpectedly called out of town one afternoon, so school was dismissed an hour earlier than usual.

"Great luck," thought Tom to himself as he started for home. "I'll just go round to Billy Foster's and get the book he was telling me about; he says it's a thriller. I can get it half read through before dinner if mother or dad doesn't want the lawn mowed or the garden weeded. Seems as if they wanted something done all the time. They will not be looking for me home now. I'll just sneak in quietly and go up attic to the playroom. If they don't hear me or see me, I'll be all right. A fellow doesn't want all his spare time taken up working."

To tell the truth, Tom was a bit of a shirk.

"He reminds me of Tony Lumpkins," Uncle Tom said once. "Tony declared he did not mind disappointing other folks, but he could not abide being disappointed himself. Tom does not seem to object in the least to having other people do for him, but he does dislike putting himself out for others."

So this afternoon Tom went around to the back door and crept quietly upstairs, and in a few minutes he was in the playroom buried deep in his book.

It certainly was a thriller, and Tom was right in one of the most exciting places when he thought he heard his sister calling him. He almost held his breath, but answered never a word.

A few minutes later he heard his mother call.

"Where are you, Tom? I want you at once," she said.

She called at the foot of the stairs, at the front door, at the back door. Tom heard her every time but did not answer. Then all was still.

"I'm in luck this time," he said to himself. In a twinkling he was again oblivious to everything but his book, until he found to his surprise that it was dusk, and he suddenly realized that he was very hungry.

So he went downstairs intending to slip out the back door and then come in as if just getting home.

But the back door was locked, and no one was to be seen upstairs or down. Tom did not know what to make of it. Finally he discovered a note on the dining-room table at his place.

"Dear Tom," it read. "Uncle Tom has just come in his car to take us all to Bear's Hole for a picnic supper. Sorry we could not find you so you could go. Billy said you came home early; guess you fell asleep on the way. He is going with us in your place. Gertie."

"Well—I'll be jiggered!" said Tom trying hard not to cry. For a ride with Uncle Tom and a picnic supper at Bear's Hole were great fun.

"And I might have gone just as well as not and read that old book some other time, only I thought they probably had something they wanted me to do. I guess, as Aunt Martha says, I got my come-uppance this time all right. And hereafter when I hear any one calling me, I'll be Johnny on the spot directly."—Zion's Herald.

SUPERANNUATES.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

That's a tremendous word and has a tremendous meaning—"beyond" or "above" the years. Paul spoke of his "often infirmities." Age surely did not lighten them nor did his keen sense of responsibilities afford a healing balm. Sick and tired and worn, in that Roman dungeon which has become an altar whose light gleams afar, he is sustained by a faith that is a study and wonder for the ages.

The passing years are wondrous teachers. Some of the lessons they teach live only in the silent reaches of the soul, unspoken, because they are too deep for utterance. If age did not show and prove the worthlessness of much that youth held to be the very essence of life, it would be unbearable. "Count me worthy, Master," that having learned at least some of life's meaning, the old may say, let me not fail to profit thereby, until the cypress twines about 'Finis.'"

Yes, we are old and tired and worn, scarred and seamed, bent and gray, and some say "forgotten," but still ready for service, and glad to serve when a call comes. Years of toil in and for the church have unfitted the old man for activities in other fields. He may earn a few pitiful dollars now and then in unaccustomed labors, but they seem strange to him. The money standard of the world at large may be ever so real to others; his estimate of worth is larger, on another plane. He gladly receives the pittance the church bestows and wonders why the portal of its liberal heart is not flung wide open to supply the needs of the likes of him. He reads of much preaching concerning him and his class, but converts are few.

"Why is a woman like an umbrella?" asked Tom Henderson.

"Because," replied Sandy Brown, "she always has to shut up when—"

"No; guess again."

"Because she stands in the hall and—"

"No; it's nothing about standing in the hall or anywhere else."

"A woman is like an umbrella because nobody ever gets the right one. Why is—"

"No; that is not the answer."

"Is it because she fades with age?"

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

"I am. Is it because it's a good job when you have her in the house?"

"No."

"Because you can't find a pocket in either?"

"No. Have another guess."

"I won't. A woman isn't like an umbrella."

"I knew you couldn't guess it. It's because she's accustomed to reign."—Exchange.

Editorial

THE LAST MONTH—AN URGENT APPEAL.

We very earnestly call attention of all our pastors to the fact that May is the last month in which subscriptions may be sent in on the club plan.

We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of the Advocate's receiving a large number of clubs before the expiration of the offer. The response thus far has not been what we hoped it would be, and what it must be before the end of the month if the Advocate is to be saved serious financial embarrassment.

We know there have been, and there are now, special appeals before all the churches that may have interfered with work in behalf of the Advocate. But we trust the brethren will give at least some time this month to the circulation of the official organ of the church, the circulation of which will help every interest of the church. We ought to receive at least 100 clubs between now and the end of the month—and they can be secured if earnest effort is made.

Brethren, the need is very great and we plead for your energetic co-operation.

Since the previous report, the following clubs have been received:

Mississippi Conference.

Rev. A. S. Oliver, Decatur, 42.

Miss Ottillie Swan, Moss Point, 20.

Rev. A. M. Broadfoot, Meridian (East End), 54.

North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. J. T. Lewis, Water Valley, 21.

Rev. L. C. Wasson, Route 7, Lexington, 21.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE CAMPAIGN UNDER WAY.

The committee of 215 met at Millsaps College on Thursday of last week to perfect final details for the $650,000 campaign for Millsaps College. Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of the board of trustees, opened the meeting and presented Dr. B. E. Eaton, who served as chairman. The principal address of the morning was made by Bishop Warren A. Candler. We have heard Bishop Candler many times, but we do not think we ever heard him deliver a greater address. Every section of the two Conferences was represented by preachers and laymen, and the deepest interest was manifest. The students entertained the visitors at noon with a "pep" meeting, which was greatly enjoyed. In the afternoon, after lunch in the college dining room, addresses were delivered by President Key and Mr. Vaughn Watkins. When this $650,000 becomes available for new buildings and equipment, Millsaps College will have entered upon a new era of its development as one of the great educational institutions of Methodism.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

"We have paid off the debt on our new church at Montrose, Miss.," writes Rev. D. E. Vickers. Fine!

Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, connected with the Louisiana Child Finding Society, with headquarters at Alexandria, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Tuesday of last week.

On March 25, Rev. C. C. Wier, the pastor, began a series of pre-Easter services at Winnfield, La. The services will continue through Easter Sunday, the preaching being done by the pastor.

Rev. J. B. Holyfield, of Hermanville, Miss., informs us that he and Rev. M. W. Porter, of Petal, Miss., have exchanged pastorates, Brother Porter desiring a lighter work on account of his health.

Rev. D. B. Boddie, pastor at Opelousas, La., is conducting pre-Easter services at Opelousas and Ville Platte this week, being assisted by Rev. C. B. White, of Marksville. Brother White is Brother Boddie's "son in the gospel."

Rev. E. R. Smoot, pastor at Tchula, Miss., one of our best-known evangelistic preachers, has recently been with Rev. J. L. Carter in a fine meeting at Mount Olive, Miss. He has also recently assisted Rev. J. V. Bennett, at Belzoni, Miss.

The debating team of Southern Methodist University will debate with a team at Tulane University, this city, on the evening of April 18. From Tulane, the team will go to Emory University and Vanderbilt University. Rev. Frank J. Pippin is a member of the team.

The Missionary Society at Ruleville, Miss., observed the request of the Council and held a consecration service on Wednesday, March 14. The service was conducted by Mrs. Stansel. Fourteen members of the auxiliary and several visitors attended the service, which was very helpful.

Mrs. H. S. Crow, of "Crow's Nest," Hanna, La., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, states that she has read the paper nearly all her life. Mrs. Crow's mother was a first cousin of Bishop Candler.

A note from Rev. E. G. Kilgore, Memphis, Tenn., informs us that he has been sick during the past two months. Several times he thought the crossing was near, but each time he rallied; and now he is able to sit up a little. We are sure his friends will remember him in their prayers.

Revival services will be held at the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., during the week after Easter. The preaching will be done by the pastor, Dr. Robert E. Goodrich, and the music will be in charge of Mr. Walter Jenkins. Dr. Goodrich recently assisted in a meeting at Oxford, Miss.

Dr. Halford E. Luccock, contributing editor of the Advocates of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been appointed professor of homiletics at Yale Divinity School. He will not be a candidate to succeed himself in his present position at the approaching session of the General Conference at Kansas City.

Rev. J. Loyd Deceli, presiding elder of the Jackson District, announces that on account of the great sorrow that has come to the heart and home of Rev. and Mrs. S. B. Watkins, in the death of their daughter, the Jackson District Conference has been changed from Florence to the Glendale church in Jackson. The date is the same.

Rev. J. W. Thompson, pastor of the Broad Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., requests us to say that Rev. R. A. Thornton, 215 Jackson Street, Hattiesburg, is open for engagements to conduct revival services with the pastors of the Mississippi Conference. He recommends Brother Thornton as a safe preacher who will do good work in any church.

The official board of the First Methodist Church at Minden, La., by unanimous action at one of their meetings this year, raised the pastor's salary from $4,200 to $5,000. The church has increased its membership about fifty per cent within the past two years; and the attendance on the public services has grown threefold. Rev. Leon I. McCain is the pastor.

Rev. L. W. Smart, pastor of the Waterproof charge, Louisiana Conference, is making use, through the courtesy of the editor, of the Tensas Gazette, published at St. Joseph, La., to give the news of his churches to the public. Under the caption, "The Tensas Church Herald," considerable space is given each week to church news. This is a "Smart" idea.

Mr. James M. Gearheard, father of Rev. A. J. Gearheard, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, now pastor at Charleston, W. Va., died in Peoria, Ill., on March 30, and was buried in the Masonic cemetery, New Orleans, last Sunday morning. In addition to Rev. A. J. Gearheard, he is survived by three other sons and three daughters. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

Annie Lee, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. S. B. Watkins, died at the Baptist Hospital in Jackson, Miss., Friday, March 30, at 1:15 p. m. She was nearly fourteen years of age, and being the oldest child was ever a help and joy to the parsonage home. Brother Watkins is in his second year at Florence, Miss., where the body of his beloved child was laid to rest Saturday afternoon. A suitable memoir will be furnished later.

The Sunday school of the First Methodist Church, Memphis, Tenn., of which Mr. John R. Pepper is the distinguished superintendent, constantly reaches out in its ministry far beyond its own walls. Hundreds of visitors from all over the country and from foreign lands visit the school, and Mr. Pepper receives many letters concerning the work from all parts of the world. Mr. Pepper makes prompt reply to all these letters, feeling that he may be of service in the work of the kingdom.

Rev. J. C. Wasson, of Acona, Miss., in sending in a club of twenty-one subscriptions to the Advocate, for which we sincerely thank him, says: "We have a very delightful work here—a very fine people and growing in grace. They pounded the pastor when we first came to the circuit, but since then they have been very good to him. On this circuit we have about 200 members and three churches. We have over $100 for the missionary free-will offering. We are trying to carry out the program of the church, which we think is a great program. Pray for us over here."

Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, gives us this sad news: "Brother and Sister Royal, of Natalbany, are passing through a great trial and sorrow. Some weeks ago, their little girl, six or seven years old, had a stroke of paralysis, caused by an abscess on the brain. Following the advice of New Orleans physicians, they have taken her to Boston to have her treated by Dr. Harvey Cushing, at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. Dr. Cushing is a world-renowned surgeon for such troubles. The readers of the Advocate are requested to pray for the family."

Rev. A. J. Martin, pastor of the Pearl River charge, Louisiana Conference, gives us the following interesting news: "We had an unusual six-day revival at the little church at Bush. This is the third meeting on the charge this year, the pastor doing the singing and preaching. We began at Bush on Tuesday night with an attendance of forty; on the last night we had 112. On the first night we had eleven in the junior choir, and on the last night, thirty-three. We raised our full missionary quota and all other obligations to date. We also organized a Senior Epworth League. Last but not least, we received eleven into the church."

THE JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference will be held in Jackson at the Glendale church on Bailey Avenue, April 18-20. The opening sermon will be preached on Wednesday evening, April 18, at 7:30 o'clock, by Rev. T. O. Prewitt, after which the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered.

The following committees will serve:

License to Preach: F. L. Applewhite, W. A. Terry, H. C. Castles.

Admissions: B. F. Lewis, J. O. Ware, H. G. Roberts.

Orders: H. S. Spragins, S. B. Watkins, L. F. Alford.

Quarterly Conference Records: M. H. McCormack, Jr., Mrs. Mamie B. Mahaffey, L. G. King.

Other committees will be named at the opening of the conference. Rev. C. E. Downer and his faithful people are making due preparations for the conference and we hope that all members of the conference will come and help make this a time of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Our Conference representatives and other visitors are welcome.

REPORT ON WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

(The following are extracts from a report by Henry G. Hawkins, President of Whitworth College, Feb. 28, 1928):

1. The total indebtedness of the college when I took charge, October, 1925, was $27,466, of which $20,000 were building debts, $7,466 operating debts, including $2,118 due on I. W. Cooper's salary. The present indebtedness of the college is $28,122, or $656 more than at the time when I took charge. i do not know what securities besides the president's home were used as collateral for the indebtedness which stood when I came, but new collateral which has come into the possession of the college during my presidency amounting to $14,500 is part of the security for the indebtedness at the present time. I refer to notes of Mrs. Cora Lee White, $500; G. L. Hawkins, $10,000; E. J. Bomer, $4,000. The salary indebtedness to I. W. Cooper estate, $2,118, has been paid, and during the period $9,873 was expended for repairs and improvements. It is evident that but for the expense incurred in repairs and for balance paid on I. W. Cooper's salary, the indebtedness would have been greatly reduced. As a result of these repairs and improvements, the conditions in the dormitories and elsewhere are much nicer than they had been before.

2. Also, the fire insurauce carried on the property has been more than doubled, and during the first two sessions $2,599 was paid in insurance premiums, besides $773 during the present session. The total insurance carried at the present time is $141,000, as against $66,000 previously.

3. During the period, $1,170 was spent on science equipment, a large proportion of which was for a new laboratory desk and a gas machine.

4. Five hundred and forty-one dollars was expended upon additional furniture or equipment of rather a permanent sort, such as a horse-power mowing machine, an electric coffee urn, tablet arm chairs for recitation rooms, and some new blackboards.

5. Three new Underwood typewriter machines have been purchased, and five old ones have been exchanged for new ones, making eight virtnaliy new machines in the equipment of the office and commercial department. Also, the commercial department now has a phonograph used with records which promote swiftness and regularity of the students in striking typewriter keys. Two hundred and twenty-five dollars of this new equipment was purchased during the present session.

6. About 1,000 volumes have been added to the library. One ornamental fountain, and one ice-cooling drinking fountain have been erected on the inner campus.

7. Three metal filing cabinets have been added to the office equipment, and a card system of permanent records of students has been introduced. Our card has attracted attention, and quite a number of schools have written to us for samples.

8. All twenty-six of the pianos owned by the college have been kept tuned and in good repair.

Protection Against Old Age

9. During the present session we have added to the equipment of the college three Jersey cows, and 150 Leghorn hens. The money outlay in these is about $450.

10. Considerable improvement has been made upon the fencing of the garden lots of the college, and the garden lands themselves have been much improved, because we adopted the policy of having all the leaves on the college grounds poured into the garden. About $100 has been expended in shrubbery and fruit trees.

11. During the present session there is a saving in salaries, not because these have been reduced, but because not so many heads of departments were necessary after we took Junior College rating. Of course, naturally, with experience we have learned to curtail expenses in a few other directions. Our plumbing bill is less this session than heretofore, and our new method of handling the laundry means a saving of $250 per session.

12. All accounts against the college to date have been paid, including fuel for remainder of the session. I estimate that it will require $17,000 to pay salaries and other remaining expenses of the present session. We have on our books accounts due by students on this session, $12,429, besides $1,432 which should be collected on the accounts of 1926-27 still due. We are to receive for our Commercial Department $250, and $125 from the Presser Fouudatiou, and we should realize from the current Annual Conference assessment $7,000. Our balance in banks at close of business last night was $2,850. If we could collect in full from our patrons, all these resources would amount to $24,086, or $7,086 more than enough, according to my estimation, to cover the current expenses of the session.

13. Mrs. E. W. Reid, of Magnolia, Miss., has sent me recently a written agreement to pay an annual scholarship fund of $300 to be used in assisting poor but worthy students in their education.

14. I suggest that the written thanks of the Board of Trustees be sent to John E. Thomas, Executive Secretary of the Presser Foundation, 1713 Sansom Street, Philadelphia, Pa., for the music scholarship of $250, assigned for the 1927-28 session to Whitworth College, and that hope be expressed for renewal of the scholarship for 1928-29. This is the first time Whitworth music department has been recognized in this way.

15. The above record has been made under very trying conditions. I came to the college just after the deaths of the president and the secretary, and not a single student's account of the session had been put in writing. I came to the college with it unaccredited, and with efforts being made by my predecessor, Dr. I. W. Cooper, to meet the requirements of the accrediting agency, the Southern Association; on account of this effort Dr. Cooper had employed the most expensive literary faculty that had ever before been employed in the history of the institution. These salaries had to be paid during that session, 1925-26; and also duriug the session of 1926-27 the effort was continued with a facuity similarly expensive.

16. The attendance of boarding students during the present sessiou has been a little larger than last session, and the enroliment of girls in the present freshman ciass from the city of Brookhaven has been probably the largest that the college has had in twenty years, possibly the largest ever had. This result was brought abont by the fact, I think, that the college, after taking Junior relation, became accredited at once by the State College Commission.

17. Also, the Southern Association of Colieges and Secondary Schools admitted Whitworth to membership at its session at Jacksonville, Fla., last December, which gives us good rating everywhere.

18. According to audit made, the corpus of the endowment, Aug. 31, 1927, was $49,659. Since then $5,666 has been collected, which, after paying expenses incurred in collecting, adds $5,000 to the corpus of endowment. This does not include $17,500 of notes allowed by the donors to be used as collateral security in the indebtedness referred to in section 1 of this report. If this should be added, the total endowment would be $72,159.

We have in unpaid pledges about $115,000. I recommend that the campaign for endowment be resumed definiteiy with fresh vigor.

MRS. MATTIE R. STEPHENSON quietly and peacefully entered upon her heavenly reward at sunset, in the evening of Feb. 23, 1928. The place of her birth was Oak Ridge, Warren County, Miss., and the date, Sept. 11, 1858. She was the youngest of twelve children which were born into the home of her parents, Absalom and Rebecca Grant. Only one of them survives her, Benjamin W. Grant, of Baton Rouge. She was reared in a Christian home and fulfilled in her life the expectation created by this fortunate fact. In early childhood she became a member of the Methodist church at Oak Ridge, Miss., and ten years ago transferred her membership to the First Methodist Church of Baton Rouge, La. On Jan. 18, 1882, she was married to John T. Stephenson, who died in April, 1893. Mrs. Stephenson was the mother of four children, two of whom died a number of years ago, the other two being residents of Baton Rouge, La., L. C. Stephenson and Mrs. F. M. Brent. There is one little grandson, L. C. Stephenson, Jr. Her life was that of quiet service, a lovely example of a true home-loving woman, to whom the family meant life and happiness, with room always in her heart for those who needed her help. Her death was to her home a loss irreparable, but her memory is a precious inheritance. Her many friends loved her for her gentle, gracious ways, and felt the influence of her calm and unreserving Christian faith. Love for God and his house was early instilled into her mind. To these ennobling and inspiring sentiments she held steadfastly to the end. In her home the light of her Christian life shone with especial splendor. A crowning characteristic of her true spirit and pure life was her devotion to her children, and their thought of her and care for her, with daily ministrations of love, brightened and gladdened her last days. She taught them tenderly and successfully the way of truth, and bore clear and convincing testimony to the last to the power and goodness of God. She defied the terrors of death with a sure trust in Christ and with a bright and full anticipation of Heaven. A lovely Christian peace came to her after weeks of illness, and a host of friends gathered to join in the simple service that was held to give thanks to God for her Christian victory. The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Dr. Frank L. Wells, in the First Methodist Church, in Baton Rouge. Borne by the hands of those who knew and loved her, her body was laid to rest in Roselawn cemetery, till the resurrection, till the day break and the shadows flee away. In addition to those already mentioned, she is survived by a sister-in-law, Mrs. Mollie W. Grant, and a niece, Mrs. W. N. Brent, of Baton Rouge. The powerful though silent influences of such a Christian life bear perennial harvests which death cannot destroy. We cannot presume with our faltering words to console the broken-hearted; we can only commend them to God and the word of his grace. "She sleeps the sleep God gives to them he calls his own beloved, holy, serene and deep."

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has seen fit in his infinite wisdom to call to his reward REV. J. B. RANDOLPH, of Columbus, Miss., who at one time was the beloved pastor of the Como Methodist church, our hearts are saddened by the passing of this faithful servant of God; and,

Whereas, his beloved wife organized the Wesley Bible class of the Como Methodist church some sixteen years ago, we, the members of this class, wish to express to Mrs. Randolph our deepest sympathy in this dark hour of sorrow, and pray that she may be sustained and comforted by the grace of Him who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind.

Whereas, Mrs. Randolph was the first teacher of the Wesley Bible class, we, the members of the present class, wish to assure her of our love and appreciation of the splendid work she did in organizing this class and to remind her that her work still lives and is bearing fruit for the advancement of our Lord's kingdom.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Randolph, also to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed by the Committee: Mrs. Frank Wall, Mrs. E. G. Taylor, Mrs. Belle Williamson, Travis H. Taylor.

PROGRESS AT PRICE MEMORIAL, GREENWOOD.

Dear Dr. Carley: If I may, I would like to have a little space to report our Cokesbury Training School taught here by Brother Mohler the week of March 4.

This school reached more than twenty of our people, a good number taking credits. For us to make an estimate of the good accomplished in our school by this training class as we now see it after three weeks' deliberation would sound extravagant. But I will say this, that in sixty days or sooner we will have a standard C type school. When the school began, we had only about sixty points on the C type program.

Our great need at Price Memorial is trained leaders, and that may be true in some other Methodist churches. I believe we will stack up with the average. Every one of our teachers holds one or more credits in the Sunday school training work, and one has her Gold Seal diploma, but we are not satisfied with this—we are going on to perfection. We don't want to be with the average bunch.

The Sunday School Board is making a great contribution to the Sunday school work in the local church by this training work they are putting on, and the pastor and people who are not giving the Sunday School Board their sympathetic co-operation are standing in their own light. The Sunday School Board needs all of your fourth Sunday offering, and at Price Memorial we stress the fact that this is Mission Day and that the offering goes for that cause.

Brethren of the North Mississippi Conference, give Brother Gladney and Brother Mohler a chance, just one week, in your school and watch the results.

Dr. Carley, pardon me for this long letter, but wanted to say this.

Yours in Him,

J. O. DOWDLE.

SOME VALUES OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY TO THE LOCAL CHURCH.

(A paper read by Mrs. Kate Baskerville at the Jackson zone meeting, March 1.)

To-day so many benefits are derived by our churches from the local auxiliaries that perhaps some of the younger members will be surprised to know that, in the earlier years of the Missionary Society's existence, its chief function was to raise money to support missionaries, enlist volunteers for the foreign field, pray for work and workers—all most important.

I would here pause to pay tribute to our early loyal local leaders. When a young girl, I taught one year in a mission school in Mexico. The workers there expressed themselves as feeling unworthy of representing the self-sacrificing women in the home land, but greatly helped by the prayers of the societies at home.

At the present time, the work of the auxiliaries extends over a wider field, the various committees affording worth while work for all the members. The social service committee ministers to the needy, brings cheer with flowers, books and visits to sick and shutins, often by entering homes that have grown indifferent to the call of public worship and by sympathy and tact exerted at the telling moment, helping to bring a whole family into the activities of church life. It is beautiful to think of these visits and attentions being paid to our older members, who are kept at home by advancing years, in our modern, busy, rushing life, they might otherwise feel forgotten by their own church.

The society does much for the comfort and attractiveness of our parsonages, and helps in various ways to welcome the incoming minister and his family. Then, too, there are many little touches of beauty to the church that only a woman's hand and brain make possible. New needs for her service are constantly arising.

The missionary programs contain many interesting features, bringing information concerning people of our own and foreign lands. How the mission study class does open up new fields of interest! Once the enthusiasm is aroused, its growth is insured. To make it all most real and worth while, atlas, history, encyclopedia and other reference books are called into use.

I know a woman whose duties kept her closely at home. It came about that in answer to the call of duty, she had to center her church activities on the Missionary Society. But every program was made the most of by her keen interest; the mission study books were not just read each year, but mastered. She read many missionary periodicals, and through all of this, she came to have a wide range of interests and information. Years brought changes, and in time larger fields of work were opened to her, both for her country and her church. But a "close up" shows she was kept young in heart and interest by the work done in her own auxiliary during a number of trying years.

The social feature of the work is coming more and more to its own. God has given us social natures. Who can place a value on Christian fellowship? There is nothing in the whole realm of social life to be compared to the joy of Christian cooperation. Busy ofttimes, lonely women who would not brush aside duties for mere social pleasures, return from these gatherings with brighter eyes and a clearer mental vision. Even those who have a full calendar of other interests find in God's house a more restful, uplifting form of fellowship.

One often hears of the hunger of the working women and girls in our large cities for personal contact with other people. One solution of their problem is for them to know that there are circles for different ages and a welcome waiting for them in our churches. There is something timely in Edgar Guest's recent poem, "The Missing Man." It strikes a responsive chord in many hearts:

"There was a man I once knew well,
Who had no stock and bonds to sell;
No subdivided acres which
In seven years would make me rich;
No sets of books to fill my mind
With knowledge of the deeper kind.
No self-improvement courses in
The mystery of 'How to win.'
Whene'er he called it was to say:
"Well, how are all your folks, today?'

"I wonder where this man has flown?
I wish he'd make his presence known;
Whene'er he came to visit me,
He asked no gift for charity,
He never asked me to subscribe
To funds to feed an Indian tribe
Or carry on deep sea research
Or lift the mortgage on his church;
Whene'er he called it was to chat
In fellowship of this and that.

"I watch to see him pass my door,
But unto me he comes no more,
For every caller now I find
Has dotted lines he wishes signed;
Oh, good old friend, I fancy you
Suspect that I have work to do,
And that is why you stay away,
But come again to me, I pray,
That I may say: 'Well, after all,
One man still pays a friendly call.' "

By our sincere interest in our friends, let's make our intercourse of the uplifting kind; our missionary gatherings make a natural starting point.

The Bible study, prayers, songs, bring new visions to our women, often meaning more than the Sunday morning service, for sometimes the busy mother then finds it difficult to throw aside home duties. Then, there is an advantage in feeling it's "our" meeting. Spiritual life is developed by giving expression to one's feelings, and this growth will be felt in the home, for as Hudson Taylor says, "If father and mother, sister and brother, even the cat and dog, are not happier and better for your being a Christian, it is a question whether you are one." There is no such thing as a selfish Christian. I am grateful to Mark for telling of there being other little ships on the storm-tossed sea of Galilee when Christ stilled the storm at the disciples' request. His blessings ever reached out to others besides the ones in any certain boat.

One reason I am stressing the spiritual value of our gatherings is because in most every auxiliary there are members who feel that to pay the dues and help with the pledge fund is being a good member. I am thinking now of a woman in one of our Southern cities. She is blessed with great tact and charm, a real manager, yet with money and leisure at her command, she seems to be honest in feeling that in meeting all financial obligations she has done her full duty by her auxiliary.

Naturally the supreme work of our Missionary Society is to help carry the true light into darkened lands. Our spiritual growth, yea, our very spiritual life, depends on how as individuals and auxiliaries we heed the command, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Oklahoma Lady Gives Interesting Account of Long Use of Black-Draught In Her Home.

Sageeyah, Okla.—"I have taken Black-Draught ever since I was a child, and can recommend it as a splendid medicine for family use," says Mrs. Cora Maberry, of this place. "My mother used it, in bringing up her family, and after I had a home of my own, I continued to use it, as I thought it was especially good to give the children.

"My children did not mind taking Black-Draught, and so when they got upset with stomach spells, or were constipated, I gave them Black-Draught tea.

"If I found that they were taking cold, I was quick to start giving them Black-Draught, as it helped them to throw off the impurities which caused the trouble.

"My children are all grown now and have homes of their own, but I still keep Black-Draught in the house and use it myself when I wake up in the morning feeling dull and 'headachey', and have a bad taste in my mouth.

"Black-Draught is a simple remedy for constipation, and I prefer it to others because it is purely vegetable. I always feel better after I have taken a course of it."

Doctor at 83 Found People Preferred His Prescription

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. If grown people want to use them no one can deny them the privilege, but they should never be given to children.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs? All drug stores have the generous bottles.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. B. C. Taylor, Conference Superintendent of Adolescent Work, in sending in his program for the State-wide Conference, says: "My hope is that this may he one of the finest meetings we have had at all. This program ought to appeal to the Young People."

Dr. W. Winans Drake, chairman of the Conference Board, has secured a good delegation from his Sunday school. These outstanding workers will contribute much to the success of the Conference. Three of them are Elementary specialists, Mrs. Ad. Thompson, Mrs. Ben McLure, and Mrs. Cupp.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder of the Minden District, has called a "Set-up" meeting for his Winnfield Standard Training School for April 4, at 3 p. m., at Winnfield. This school promises to he one of our hest for 1928. It was held in Rochelle last year.

Friday, March 23, we were in Opelousas, reached there in time to attend the special group meeting for prayer called hy the presiding elder. At night we had the closing exercises of the Stnadard Training School, which issued twenty-one credits in the Bihle course, sixteen in Pupil Study, eight in Primary Work, and six in the Cokeshury course, making a total of fifty-one. The enrollment of this school was sixty-three. The interest in this school was better than last year, and much credit is due the pastor, Rev. D. B. Boddie.

Mrs. H. J. Norris, superintendent at Oak Ridge, sends in a good report on her school. She says: "At the last Workers' Council each teacher present took a book to read on her special line of work."

Sunday, March 25, I visited the Pineville Sunday school. This school will no doubt he well represented at the State-wide Conference. They are in the midst of a great revival.

In the afternoon we visited Winnfield and had a fine conference with the District Secretary, Dr. F. C. Wren, and the pastor, Rev. C. C. Wier, who is planning an interesting pre-Easter service for his congregation.

We hope all delegates to the State-wide Conference will bring, first, a willingness to share with others their best; second, a mind to learn, and third, a spirit of co-operation.

Mr. A. McGuirt, Mangum Memorial, Shreveport, writes: "Our school is doing the best work now it has ever done. Our sixty officers and teachers are wide awake and full of the Spirit."

The name for "Children's Week" has been changed to "Childhood and Youth Week." Only twenty schools in our Conference observed this week in 1927 with a report. May we not hope for larger observance this coming year?

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Giadney, Sardis, Miss.

The Sunday School Day program for the B type school is an impressive pageant. The title is, "Teaching Them To Observe All Things." The Sunday school, the church, the Conference organization, and the district organization are united in giving a knowledge of Jesus Christ to the unsaved. The hymns, except one, are taken from the Methodist Hymnal, and specific instruction is given for giving the pageant. A few of the schools are planning to give this pageant Easter Sunday night. Each school will need fifteen programs. The work is half done when the programs are ordered and the pageant is properly apportioned. Begin with much prayer and press on until the message is presented. Delay speiis defeat. We are confidently expecting at least 80 per cent of the schools to observe this day, and we are asking that an offering of ten cents per members be made. Do this and we promise the Conference to go into places where the need is hard to describe.

Report blanks will be sent to every

The question has been asked, "What are you going to have for the preachers in the Conference Training School to be held at Grenada, June 4-9?" "Principles of Teaching," taught by Rev. A. W. Martin, is for pastors on mission charges. This course is sponsored by the Conference Board of Missions. It is not only for the circuit preachers, but all who want to learn the technique of teaching the Cokesbury courses. The aim of the course is to help the class gain a fresh vision of the teacher as a colaborer with the learner and with God; to aid the members of the class in working out for themselves the educational principles involved in the teaching process; to aid in the general appplication of these principles to the particular problems faced in the Cokesbury training school.

A Bible course, "The Teachings of the Prophets," Rev. J. E. Stephens, instructor. An interesting phase of the course is the developing concept of God. God in that period could reveal himself in such proportion as the prophet could understand, as is the case to-day. This is a neglected but a rich study. Another course that will appeal to many of the men is, "The Home in Society," Mrs. C. T. Court, instructor. Since fathers and mothers are an unescapable element in the inheritance and in continuous environment of each age of childhood and youth, parent education for family guidance is required of parents beyond that which we ask of teachers, doctors, or social workers. No more important course has been offered our pastors, parents, and teachers. We should have at least fifty men and women in this class.

COKESBURY TRAINING SCHOOL AT WATERFORD, LA.

We have just brought to a successful close our first training school in which eleven members have proven eligible for credits. Brother McLellan, as leader, took up the study of "The Small Sunday School," by Sensabaugh, and through his messages, full of interesting information and enthusiasm, has implanted within us the desire to make our own school what it should be—an agency for the winning of souls to Christ and the training for Christian service.

We feel that we have gained much in an educational way, especially as we are on the eve of adding an annex to our church in which to house the Sunday school and be better equipped to take care of the child-life of our community.

The series of inspirational talks has been of inestimable help to the spiritual life of the members, and we feel that each one has determined anew to "give of our best to the Master."

May God's blessings be upon Brother McLellan and our Sunday schools over the entire State.

The Sensation of the Day

Proclaimed the Most Effective, Agreeable Tonic Laxative on the American Market Today.

Herb Extract

(Formerly Known as Herb Juice)

practically unknown three years ago, is now selling at the amazing rate of over a million bottles a year, and being shipped in carload lots to many of the large cities in the United States. It has already proven beneficial and satisfactory to millions troubled with constipation. Authorities claim that constipation is the direct cause of stomach disorders and numerous other complaints of the human system. Hundreds who have suffered with constipation, indigestion, gas on stomach, coated tongue, no appetite, no vitality, and general run-down condition, testify that they owe their health to this marvelous cleanser. It eliminates the poisonous waste from the system, through its free action on the bowels.

If you want to enjoy good health, you must free yourself from the clutches of constipation. You can do this by using Herb Extract (formerly known as Herb Juice). Out of more than a million bottles sold during the past year under absolute guarantee, less than half a dozen bottles were returned—a record probably never before equalled by any other medicine. Every family should have a bottle of this herb tonic laxative handy for use whenever the first sign of constipation appears, for it is said to be nature's most effective tonic laxative and intestinal cleanser. As harmless and effective for children as for adults. Pleasant to take, yet very effective. Try it once. It insures health, and enables you to enjoy hearty meals without ill effects. Get the original and genuine as shown above; results guaranteed. Now sold by leading druggists and dealers in medicine everywhere.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

GLAD NEWS FROM GREENVILLE.

The year 1928 promises to be a year of unusual interest among the women of the Methodist church of Greenville, Miss. We are earnestly striving to make this a year of serious study and survey. About sixty members are engaged in a study of the book, "A Straight Way Toward To-Morrow." Every Monday a meeting is held and one of the programs given as planned by the Missionary Council. It is indeed gratifying and is an incentive to the Society that Greenville is one of the five oldest auxiliaries in the Conference. The church history has been compiled and is now ready for the publisher. We were happy to join our prayers with the praying groups all over the world in the interest of the Woman's Missionary Council in Nashville.

CHAIRMAN PUBLICITY.

ZONE MEETING, IDA, LA.

Zone No. 1, of the Shreveport District, met at Ida Feb. 21, at 10 a. m., for the first quarterly session of the year. A large delegation of about one hundred was present from the following auxiliaries: Belcher, Gilliam, Hosston, Oil City, Ida and Vivian.

Quite a number of visitors were present, including Rev. W. W. Holmes, of Shreveport; Rev. W. F. Henderson, of Cedar Grove; Rev. S. J. Davies, of Shreveport; Rev. and Mrs. W. E. Akin, of Greenwood; Mrs. J. H. Kennington, of Bossier City; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Marshall, of Shreveport; Mmes. J. W. Payton, B. F. Key, J. O. Ragan, of Shreveport, and Mrs. S. L. Riggs, of Cedar Grove. Mrs. Ed. C. Davis, a returned missionary from India, was guest of honor.

At the business session new officers were appointed as follows: Mrs. Alonzo Early, of Belcher, leader, and Mrs. R. E. Davis, of Gilliam, secretary. The program was taken from "New Tasks for New Times," and interesting debates were given on the following questions:

(A) "Is the United States under greater obligation to evangelize the world than others?" Vivian, affirmative, and Belcher, negative.

(B) "Is the United States a Christian Nation?" Gilliam, affirmative, and Oil City, negative.

(C) "Is it wise for congregations to undertake special enterprises?" Mooringsport, affirmative, and Hosston, negative.

The judges (Revs. W. W. Holmes, S. J. Davies and W. E. Akin) were out only a few minutes and announced that Vivian (represented by Mrs. J. M. Alford) made the best speech, Oil City and Hosston won in arguments.

Gilliam, represented by Mrs. R. E. Davis, and Oil City by Mrs. Lahey, brought out such splendid points it was difficult to decide if we really have a Christian nation or not. All arguments showed much time had been given to thought and study.

In conclusion a missionary pageant, "America's Obligation," was presented by the Ida auxiliary.

Following the noon lunch, Mrs. Geo. Marshall sang the favorite "Golden Bells," then Mrs. Davis gave a splendid address on her work in India.

The zone will meet in May with the Gilliam auxiliary.

Secretary.

It has the only light car power plant which actually doubles its rated horsepower.

The Whippet holds the A.A.A. Coast-to-Coast Economy Record with an average of 43.28 miles to a gallon of gasoline. No other car has ever given such a demonstration of economy. It holds, also, many speed, second gear, hill-climbing and other records.

I have always felt that whatsoever my church gave me to do, I should do it with all my might. No man can go anywhere pulling back on the harness. In building the kingdom of God we need the full employment of all resources, man-power, material, intellectual and spiritual, with adequate devotion, downright consecration, the training and cultivation of all faculties. All facts of knowledge, full information and greatest inspiration are necessary for this task. The people hust become acquainted with the nature, the burning necessity and the awful consequences of neglect or failure to do this very thing.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," is still as terrible an accusation as in the days when they saw the house falling down around them. If we save ourselves, we must mend our gait.

An Every-day Story From Women

Gilbertown, Ala.—"For eighteen years I suffered, I believe, with every ailment a woman could have. I was rundown, my stomach was in bad condition, had indigestion, had a roaring noise in my head, was very easily frightened at the least little thing, couldn't wash, cook or work and was in a bad fix, but since taking Dr. Pierce's medicines, the 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery,' 'Pleasant Pellets,' and 'Anuric Tablets,' and using the Lotion Tablets and Suppositories, I work, eat anything I wish, walk 2 miles and am the picture of health. Am doing things I had not been able to do in 18 years. I hope this great man's work will reach the end of the earth as far as suffering women and men are found."—Mrs. Carrie Carlisle, Route 2, Box 29.

FROM OBERLIN, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We began the erection of the long needed Methodist church here at Oberlin, La. We have the lumber on the ground and the piliars built. We hope to have a good church building completed in a few weeks.

We have a small membership—at least 65 per cent of the people here are French Catholics. It is quite an undertaking to build a $5000 church with such small membership. We would appreciate any help that any readers of the Advocate might be able to give us in this much needed work. It will be impossible to complete the building without outside help. We have the lot and building material paid for, but we have not sufficient funds with which to erect the house. Please come to our rescue in this time of great need.

Send your donation either to Mr. Joe Iles, or the pastor, G. D. Purceli, Oberlin, La.

We are getting along very well in all lines of church work, and are looking forward for a good year.

Pray for us.

G. D. PURCELL, P. C.

IF HE SHOULD COME TO-DAY, WOULD WE KNOW HIM?

By M. Helen Stewart.

Mary did not know him until he called her by name; she thought he was the gardener. The disciples did not know him until he revealed himself through some incident as the casting of the net for fish, the revealing of the nail prints, etc. Their hearts burned within them, these on the way to Emmaus, yet they did not recognize him as the Christ. However, they did a courteous thing. "Abide with us, be our guest." And their eyes were opened to know him. To Philip, "Have I been so long time with you and yet thou hast not known me?" At a glance, Mary took him for the gardener; those to Emmaus, a stranger; the fishermen disciples, a casual adviser as to where they would find better luck. They, all, saw him with their eyes, but it took an experience more than that to reveal his identity.

We see him as an historical character, as a martyr to Truth, as a masterful teacher, etc.; all this, but has he ever been known to us through an experience? "If he should come to-day?" Is he not here? Did he not identify himself with humanity when he said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of these ye did it unto me?" T-h-e-s-e, M-e. If we would see him as he would have us see him, will we not see him in humanity, ministering to "these" as ministering to him? How gladly, we think, would we have him as a guest in our home. "Abide, come in and abide." Yet we can have him in our homes as we open them to the homeless, the lonely. How true it is to-day as then, "there is no room for him in the inn." Did we realize the truth that as we minister to those who need us, we are recognizing him, there would be more care for the homeless, the naked, the hungry, the sick, the imprisoned. He is here. Do we see him? Or do we see him without knowing him?

EDITORIAL COMMENT

GRENADA COLLEGE ENDOWMENT.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the plan proposed by the Commission appointed at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference to provide an endowment for Grenada College will meet the approval of the district conferences and be carried into effect as soon as possible. This Commission, composed of eminent laymen and ministers, has gone into the situation carefully and makes its recommendation only after careful deliberation. The plan proposed appeared on page four of last week's Advocate.

Grenada College, under the skillful management of Dr. J. R. Countiss, its able president, has made for itself an enviable reputation in the educational world. It is at present operating as a standard four-year college for women, with all the privileges of such an institution and with full recognition from the standard accrediting agencies. But it cannot maintain this standing without a minimum endowment of $300,000. It is for the purpose of securing this endowment and maintaining this standing that the pending plan is proposed.

We might as well look our educational situation squarely in the face and determine our educational policy by the facts. It is no longer possible for the church to maintain and operate successfully schools that are not adequately endowed and equipped. We may wish it were otherwise; but we have to deal with a condition and not a theory. We must either endow our colleges or close them as recognized and accredited institutions.

If Methodism were poverty-stricken, we might say it would be just as well for us to give up a hopeless fight and leave the education of our sons and daughters to other denominations and to the State. But Methodism is not poor; she is as well able as any other body of Christian people in the world to provide for her own. The only thing that is lacking is the vision of the need and of the opportunity in the field of Christian education. If and when this vision is acquired by our people, the money necessary will be forthcoming—not in driblets and grudgingly, but in large amounts and cheerfully. Without being particularly well acquainted with the resources of the North Mississippi Conference, but knowing the type of people that make up our constituency in that territory, we have no doubt but that the Conference is easily able to do all that is necessary to provide for Grenada College the resources that its present situation demands.

The temper of a people is measured by the way they meet critical situations and take advantage of supreme opportunities. Methodist people have proved their mettle in the past, and we believe they will prove it now. Certainly the chance to do so is at hand.

WHY NOMINATE A WET?

The only reason we can think of why the Democratic party should nominate a wet candidate for the presidency of the United States is the hope that such a candidate would attract enough wet votes from all parties to bring about his election. And that is a mighty poor reason. The United States is constitutionally dry—made so by the overwhelming majority by which the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted. We do not believe any wet candidates now before the people have any outstanding qualifications for the high office above their dry opponents. It must be, then, their wetness that makes them prominent. As we see it, it would be a political blunder as well as a moral tragedy for the Democratic party to attempt to go into office on any such platform. We do not believe the South will support any such effort. The politicians had better not forget that the women have the franchise now. The women of the South believe in prohibition, and they are going to vote a dry ticket. They and many, many thousands of men will put principle ahead of party—they will vote as they pray.

THE LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE MUST ACT.

Race horse gambling is becoming an intolerable burden in Louisiana. One would think that the operation of two tracks in and near New Orleans throughout the winter would satisfy the needs of the gambling fraternity and give them ample opportunity to carry on their morally wrong and economically indefensible business; but it seems not so. Another track has recently been opened in Covington to run on Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays; and still another, according to newspaper reports, is soon to be opened in St. Bernard Parish, just below New Orleans. The Legislature has winked at this evil long enough. It can put this nefarious business out of commission and the time has come for it to act. The good people of New Orleans and of the State are sick and tired of the activities of the gambling promoters that will, if not checked, make this great city a stench in the nostrils of decent people everywhere. Race tracks and other forms of gambling do not attract the kind of people that make desirable citizens.

A FAIR PROPOSITION.

At the risk of going a little out of the way of our usual editorial limits, we venture to make what seems to us a fair proposition to those who are opposing the flood control measure now before Congress on the ground that it does not provide for local contributions to the expense by the territory affected. We submit this proposition especially to President Coolidge, who seems to be determined to make the overflowed lands pay. The proposition is this: If the measure will require payment from the property owners of the thirty or more States whose holdings are valuable because they can run their flood waters off their lands into the Mississippi River and spread them all over the lower valley in the same proportion and on the same conditions that the flood sufferers are asked to pay, then the South will agree to the amendment. Of course the land in the lower valley protected by flood control will be enhanced in value; but it will not become more valuable than the land in the upper valley that is valuable because nature has done for it what the Government is asked to do for the land in the lower valley. What is sauce for the goose ought to be sauce for the gander. (Of course, we do not presume to speak for the South—but we believe this would be accepted as a fair proposition in this section of the country.)

CAUGHT.

Two New York police officers came to New Orleans a few days ago to take back for trial—and probable conviction—a man arrested at a local race track who confessed that he had embezzled $15,800 from a New York bank and had lost it all in gambling. He was identified by detectives at the race track by photographs that had been sent throughout the country by the New York police department. The incident simply tells an old story: A man stole to gamble; he lost what he had stolen; his sin found him out; he has to pay the penalty. So it always is with sin.

ONLY THREE WEEKS LEFT.

Only three weeks more remain for subscriptions to be received on the club plan—the offer expires on May 1. After that time the regular price will be $2 a year. We hope many churches will take advantage of the offer in the time that yet remains. We believe many clubs could be secured if the proper effort were made. A subscriber wrote the other day: "Enclosed please find check for renewal of the Advocate. I have been waiting on my pastor to get up a list, but he has been too slow and I fear my paper has been stopped, as I did not get it last week. We can't afford to do without it." It might be easier to get up a club than some of the brethren think; but even if it is not easy, it can and ought to be done. There is nothing more fundamental in the development of an intelligent, loyal church membership than the circulation of the church paper. Every interest of the church is helped by its weekly visits. The club rate puts the New Orleans Christian Advocate within the reach of practically every member of the church. The rates are:

Clubs of 20 to 50, $1.50 a year.
Clubs of 50 to 100, $1.25 a year.
Clubs of 100 and above, $1 a year.

The church needs the Advocate—and the Advocate urgently needs the finacial assistance that will come with new and renewal subscriptions. The time is short, and what is done must be done quickly.

"SO TEACH US TO NUMBER OUR DAYS THAT WE MAY APPLY OUR HEARTS UNTO WISDOM."

By Rev. A. D. Lemons.

"Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be."

These are the words of an old man, a man who had perhaps lived his threescore and ten years and is looking forward to the time when he shall pass away like the grass of the field. He is meditating upon the meaning of life—is thinking of the swift years that have just passed like a watch in the night. He comments to himself, "A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past." It is fitting that we should consider the words of a wise old man—a man who has experienced all the joy and sorrow; the hope and disappointments; the poverty of the poor and the wealth of the rich; and who has perhaps come as near to finding out the secret of successful and happy living as any person. Some undoubtedly will give cynical, disappointing answers. Others with light in their faces will bid us enter the fray with hope and courage. Regardless of whether their answer be pessimistic or optimistic, hopeful or disappointing, old people usually have a great deal of worldly wisdom to give us. Their ideals have been tempered in the snow and storms of many winters, and their enthusiasm has undergone the baptism of fire. Their powers have been tested. Their talents have been developed. Their characters have been enriched. Their lives have been ennobled by years of sacrificial living. Surely old age has something to offer the youth of the land.

We speak of the youth movement, the idealism of youth, the courage of youth, the beauty of youth, the adventure of youth, the romance of youth; but what do we say of the old person? Do we ever speak of the wisdom of youth, the good judgment of youth, the stability of youth, the sweetness of youth? or do we ever compare youth to the great oaks that have withstood scores of storms? We never think of youth in the terms of wisdom. It is only to old people to whom we impute wisdom.

The average health, character and wisdom of old age is always far beyond that of youth. Let us take 100 young men in the prime of their life at 25 years of age. Forty years later let us take an inventory and see what has become of them. Fifty-six of them are dead. Why did they die? Dissipation, accidents, lack of care of their physical bodies, or for numerous other reasons. Thirty-four are dependent on some one else for a living; five are barely able to support themselves; four are well off, and one may be rich. How they have been weeded out!

What wisdom the forty-four living should be able to give us! We read in popular magazines of those who have succeeded—men who have lived through the years for luck, or for pluck, have come out ahead. The ideal youth in many instances have been crushed out. The romance of youth has met the cold shoulder of disappointment, and the adventure of youth has met—perhaps death. Surely in all the struggle of life some of the unfit morally or physically are weeded out. Therefore we can expect a man who has lived to be 75 or 80 years of age should have some practical wisdom to give to us. We are often told that the great deeds of history have been performed by young men. But there have been more young men than old men. Besides, look what the young have paid for their heroism or perhaps foolhardiness. Can we not for a few minutes listen to the voice of an old man of Israel, who lived some thousands of years ago, and see what he has to tell us of the purpose of life? The attitude of this old writer of the ninetieth Psalm is summed up beautifully in verse 12: "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

In the first place, this short text is a prayer. The reward came in the wisdom of what he asked for.

The reason our prayers are so often answered is because we already know what we need.

A man cannot live a happy, religious life and be rotten on the inside. That is the reason the Psalmist says: "The wicked shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous, for God knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the wicked shall perish." And so we find an old man at the end of threescore years praying for guidance. He takes the reverent attitude toward life. He is not arrogant like many of us younger people, who think we know it all. He has seen his own egotism put to shame.

In the second place, the writer is willing to be taught. He has the teachable spirit. He is in search of knowledge and wisdom. And he has gone to the great teacher of the universe—God. God teaches us through experience. We all would profit by having a more teachable spirit. Life is not so simple that we can go through it without the teachable spirit. It is practically impossible to rise in the world without a college education; and how much more impossible is it for us to live happily or become in any degree educated unless we have the teachable spirit. The teachable spirit not only means that we are willing to learn, but that we are eager to learn. Some people can never be told anything, and for some peculiar reason they learn so very little from experience. The first lesson that every man should learn is, "Blessed are the open-minded, for they shall be wise." The crying need of the times is for open-minded people who are willing to admit that they are wrong occasionally. Narrow-minded people cannot live together very long. They quarrel, backbite, gossip and never realize that they are making perfect fools of themselves.

In the third place, this prayer has a very practical petition. "So teach us to number our days." What does he mean by the word "number"? When I was in the first and second grades I was also in the number class. It was a class that was just learning the multiplication table, division, addition, etc. Perhaps the writer of the Psalm was talking about a systematic arrangement of our time so as to make the most of it while we have it. He had observed the shortness of a person's life, and how it was like a watch in the night; that a whole lifetime was just like yesterday when it is once past. How swiftly the years have sped since you and I were barefooted youngsters, playing by what seems to us the eternal river of time! None of us has accomplished what we started out to accomplish. Procrastination is also the thief of good health and morality. It is a form of carelessness.

Let us look at the central purpose of the wise man's prayer. He desires to apply his heart unto wisdom. What is Wisdom?

Wishdom is the capacity of not merely knowing what is right and what is wrong, but the capacity for carrying it out. An old proverb says, "A word spoken in due season is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Wisdom helps us to get along with our fellow-man without war and strife and hate. It guides us through the problems of economic struggle and competition. It teaches us what the purposes of life really are and how to achieve them. Where disappointment comes it teaches us to be unmoved where otherwise we would be swept from our feet by happenings of the moment. I call to mind one time I was stuck in the Colette River, about seventy-five miles from where I was going; how I waited for hours for some one to help me out; how I pulled off my shoes, rolled up my trousers, and got out in the water to try to better my condition. It was all discouraging. I well remember the comfort that came when I thought that how in a few days the incident would be nothing but past history and I would get pleasure out of telling of it.

The greatest wisdom comes in the understanding of human nature. One of the many reasons why Jesus was perfect was because he had a perfect understanding of human nature. Picture the poor, down-trodden woman who was brought to Jesus by the Pharisees accused of adultery. The accusers asked Jesus if they should stone her to death according to Moses' law. Jesus, in his infinite compassion, stooped and wrote something on the ground and said, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." And one by one the base hypocrites crept into darkness, and Jesus turned to the woman and said: "Where are thy accusers? Go, and sin no more." How humiliating it is to be misunderstood! Criminals are misunderstood. It adds bitterness to their lives. Children are often misunderstood and their lives are warped as a result. Lovers, though drawn together by the truest of love, become separated because of misunderstanding.

Wisdom comes from experience. If you are not wise, perhaps you have never been through hardships. Perhaps you have been forced to make a living by the sweat of your brow. You wish all your young people would go to church. Why? They need most of all to be brought in contact with life so that they will appreciate the blessings that God has surrounded them with—then they would want to go to church. They do not need preaching to so much as they need to be harnessed to a job that will cause them to grow into the knowledge of what responsibility means and what it means to help carry on the work of the world.

So teach us to-day to apply our hearts unto wisdom.

FROM LOS EBANOS.

By Rev. Ben. P. Jaco.

Dear Dr. Carley: The other day there came to our camp out here among the Ebnoys (Los Ebanos) a good letter, hence this one. I write on the grounds of belief advocated by a small boy who heard a speaker say, "it strikes me." He spoke out, "then why do you not hit it back." This is a law of life I have observed. This experience qualifies me to suggest that Dr. Selecman's article on failures among young preachers is not complete, since only a small part of the ground is covered. Of course we must educate them or require that they be educated, but that is only part.

I know that action and reaction must be equal, and that is my way to make successful preachers. That is the way I was made. My pastors, W. J. O'Bryant and H. P. Gibbs, knew how to love, inspire, and lead me. They put me to using the gospel to save men from sin. Then T. W. Dye, and R. M. Davis carefully and most tenderly led me into independent study and analysis of subject matter. With the certain power of the gospel to save men, I could do nothing less than preach it. With a developed purpose and conscious self-mastery, no amount of work could hinder me from undertaking my duty, and no hindrances might stand unmoved from my path. Before these men touched me in the power of love, sympathy, intellect, and brotherliness, I was a failure. The loneliness, helplessness, uncertainty, doubts, heart-breaking burdens of soul, and impending doom, of a call to preach had almost isolated me from human fellowships. These men came to me. Since then I have found scores in the same condition. About fifty of these came into the active ministry of the gospel through tender, careful action that produced reaction in the right direction. They are successes now. From the humbiest places have gone to the top. Some of these were in high school, some lower, but they finished college courses and some now give courses in college.

I undertake to say that when Jesus said, "I will make you fishers of men," he knew he could do it and did. When men like O'Bryant, Gibbs, Davis, Dye, Thames, Steel, Galloway, touched my mind and heart, I could not remain ignorant. I had to study, think, and master subjects in such company. Create about the young preacher active fellowship and he will react. Three years of active influence of Christ upon his disciples made apostles, and gospel masters. A vision of Christ sanctified great learning and made Paul the great preacher.

I have known action of leaders to cause reaction in men called to preach that made them failures. What is needed always is wise, sympathetic, inspiring action on the part of church officials, teachers, and leaders. What we have is what we make, and what we want we can make. The stock has much to do with the output, as Bishop Candler reasoned when he answered a brother as to why we have so many sorry preachers. He said it was due largely to the class of laymen we made preachers out of. But the basic law of action and reaction holds good in all cases.

But, Doctor, there are some hard cases. Now, I have appealed to some mighty big preachers in North Mississippi, like Countiss, Tucker, Holder, Walter Jones, and others to make some big sermons, write them out and send to me to use in Texas. No reaction yet! If I were right close to one of these men with a crate of my Bermuda onions and acted on his noggin with a few jolts, I would hear from him. But I made a fine sermon last week myself. I like to make sermons and preach them, too. I shall thank God all my life that he made me a preacher, and when I go to heaven I shall thank him always for this privilege. Yes, sir, if I had to start life over, I would be a preacher. The action of God's Word, fellowship with Christ in saving men, and the companionship of the Holy Spirit in a preacher's life produce the most glorious reactions in human history.

IN THE HEART OF LOUISIANA.

The fourth evangelistic conference was held in the Oakdale area, comprising eleven churches in five charges. The meeting was one of the very best. The attendance from the surrounding churches was very good. Evangelist H. W. Bromley, from Kentucky, brought us a scholarly and heart-moving message on "Evangelism and Its Results." He was just back from a big Evangelistic Conference at Philadlephia, Pa., and brought an encouraging note of what our brethren up north are doing.

The altar service was deep, heart-searching and abiding. Singer Raiph E. Johnson brought us a great message in song that brought forth many tears. These two brethren are now in the midst of a gracious meeting with Rev. Claude K. Smith at Pineville.

Evangelist B. B. Crimm, of the Baptist church, was with us in the meeting. He is just now holding a stirring revival in the Baptist church in Oakdale. His singer, Rev. H. M. Powell, favored us with a beautiful gospel message in song.

Rev. H. W. Bowman is diligently preparing for a sweeping revival to begin in his church at Oakdale on April 18, under the direction of Evangelist Henry W. Bromley and his singer, Ralph E. Johnson. The indications point to a great revival throughout this area.

The women of Oakdale prepared a most excellent lunch, which we all enjoyed very much. Preachers present: Bogan, Bowman, Bromley, Crimm, Crooks, Hines, Johnson, Lutz, Mayo, Powell, and Smith.

Rev. S. S. Bogan is preaching to large crowds at Glenmore. He is preparing to dedicate his church, as all debt has been cleared. His missionary special was more than doubled over last year.

Rev. L. E. Crooks has arranged for his revivals. The meeting at Alco will be led by Rev. John G. Snelling, our missionary secretary. The meeting at Kurthwood will be held by a Baptist evangelist and a Methodist singer.

Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir will hold pre-Easter services at Bunkie. The record of attendance upon his prayer meetings still keeps to the front and interest seems to be increasing steadily.

Recently at Melville, we had the pleasure of baptizing two precious little children—Carrie Elaine Knight, one month old, and Marguerite Ruth Bergeron, seven months old. Blessings upon the parents of these children! The baptism of children is a beautiful service and fully in accord with the New Testament idea of the church.

The revival interest continues to grow. The revival fires are burning in some hearts. Souls are being saved. Keep first things first. This is the important job. We can expect greater progress as we advance on our knees. On with the revival! Every man to his task. Do your best for the Master.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE W. C. T. U. AT JACKSON, MISS.

Be it resolved by the W. C. T. U. in its regional meeting at Jackson, Miss., March 29, 1928:

1. That we extend to Dr. Mary Harris Armor, Drs. Loyd Decell, R. B. Gunter, James Faulconer, T. J. Bailey, B. A. Copass, Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, and other speakers our sincere thanks for the very splendid and uplifting messages they have brought to us. To the First Baptist Church, our thanks are extended for the use of the Sunday school auditorium, and to the luncheon committee for its gracious service. Also we wish to thank the local press for the generous publicity they have given this meeting.

2. That we, as Christian men and women, rise to this present emergency and concentrate our every effort as Christians to support loyally our Constitution, and declare as citizens of Mississippi our determination to send a delegation to Houston that will vote only for a dry nominee for President to represent the Democratic party. Resolved, further, That we ourselves will not vote for any wet candidate for President.

3. That this body earnestly requests all the ministers of the gospel to preach and to inform their congregations on the importance of voting for only dry candidates for any office, and in every way use their influence for prohibition in this critical hour; that all church papers be asked to co-operate to the fullest extent in keeping this matter before the people of Mississippi.

SUPERANNUATE CAMPAIGN IN THE RUSTON DISTRICT.

As a publicity feature in the Superannuate Endowment Clean-Up Campaign, the pastors of the Ruston District will exchange pulpits on Sunday, April 15, 1928. Each pastor will preach on the subject. It is purposed to have the cause presented in every church during the month of April. Pastors and members are kindly requested to lend hearty co-operation so that we may reach as many as possible.

W. D. KLEINSCHMIDT, Presiding Elder.

CHURCH DEDICATION AT COLLINSTON, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: Please announce the dedication of our church at Collinston on Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, April 15. Dr. T. D. Ellis, of the General Board of Church Extension, will preach the sermon and render this service for us. All former pastors and presiding elders are invited to be with us for this occasion; and we also invite and urge all of our pastors and people circumjacent to Collinston to be with us at this time. We expect the congregations of Monroe, West Monroe, Bastrop, and Oak Ridge to attend and take part in this program.

THE GRAND CANYON OF ARIZONA.

By Rev. A. Inman Townsley.

On canyons' broken—rugged rim,
I gaze with solemn, sacred silence
Into the gray and ghostly gulf!
Transfixed, stand I in awesome wonder:
Now, holy hush steals o'er my soul!
I worship God, in silence o'erwhelmed!

And peering long into the abysmal depths,
I behold its shimmering scenes and sapphire shades!
In amazement supreme, and death-like stillness,
I pause—and ponder—and pray!

What toiling artist-giant hath wrought upon
This ponderous pile, so stately and stupendous?
What Titanic cataclysm—and catastrophe
Hath formed and fashioned this miracle in stone?

Behold, these cathedral spires and lofty domes!
What frowning towers and graceful minarets!
And tier on tier of colossal colonnades
Now burst upon my sight!
Stunned and staggered is my soul
At such celestial scenes;
And reeling—as a wild bird driven by
Whirling storm—I gasp—and seek support!

What magic artist hath mixed these rainbow colors?
What portrait prodigy hath conjured pigments and palette?
What heavenly hues are here, in beauty blended!
Now fleecy clouds bedecked in gossamer garments,
Descend from Himalayan heights of azure blue,
And embrace and kiss the canyons' murky chaos,
Transfiguring it into beatific Cosmos!

These majestic mausoleums out-splendor the Taj Mahal!
These, pompous pyramids o'ertop old Cheops head!
These terraced templed walls awaken envy
In heart of Grecian gods, at Pantheon's altar!
And in glory and grandeur surpass the holy incense,
In King Solomon's gold and marble courts.
Be still—soul—and know that God is here!

The town of Vilvorde, Belgium, about ten or twelve miles outside of Brussels, is closely connected with the history of Protestantism in Europe. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the old castle of Vilvorde was the State prison used especially for heretics. Here the first two martyrs of the Reformation, the two Flemish monks, Henri Voes and Jean Van Esschen, were imprisoned for several months before they were burned at the stake on the Grand Place of Brussels in 1521. Among other martyrs connected with this place, the most famous is William Tyndale, the great English translator of the Bible, who was burned to death in the market place at Vilvorde in 1636. Vilvorde is our newest mission charge in Belgium.

The entire Methodist church in China is engaged in the great evangelistic effort, and leaders in that country are hoping to add 1,400 new members to the rolls of the church before the close of the year.

WHAT THE ADVISERS ADVISE.

By Bishop Collins Denny.

The varied activities of the American Bible Society, official agency of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for Bible production, are of interest to all the members of our church. But, perhaps, our personal interest may be centered on the Society's Brazilian agency, for the work in this great country is in charge of one of our own church members, the Rev. H. C. Tucker, D.D.

The American Bible Society has just closed fifty years of Bible distribution in Brazil. "The population of the country has increased two and one-half times in fifty years," reported Dr. Tucker to the Society, "while the circulation of the Scriptures has increased twelve and one-half times for the same period. Even to-day, there is more unexplored territory in Brazil than there is in the whole continent of Africa."

The outstanding problem which Dr. Tucker finds is how to meet the increasing demands for Scriptures in the growing Christian communities and at the same time pursue the pioneer work and press on into regions where there are no Bibles.

It is not only in Brazil where Bible work must be curtailed because of the lack of funds. At the recent meeting of the members of the Advisory Council of the American Bible Society, on which I represent our church, such an impression was made on us by the revelation of the work and need and providential possibilities of Bible distribution that it resulted in the adoption, by all the represenatives of the twenty-four different denominations present, of the following appeal:

Whereas, the Bible is the basis of all Christian work; and,

Whereas, we believe that all the churches should make official appropriations to the American Bible Society for the wider distribution of the Bible, hailing this opportunity with readiness, knowing that such support is really the strongest aid to their own endeavors in home and foreign lands; and,

Whereas, the budget of the American Bible Society for 1928, unanimously approved by the Advisory Council, does not begin to cover the opportunity open to the Society, but we cannot suggest that the Society should so enlarge its work as to cumber itself with debt; and,

Whereas, we believe that the time has come to set before those who constitute a chief source of income the providential possibilities before the Society, and its financial status; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society be asked to appeal to the churches of Christ in America for largely increased gifts toward the wider distribution of the Scriptures.

THE SEASHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Seashore District Conference met in First Church, Gulfport, Miss., April 3 and 4, 1928, with Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder, presiding. The sessions were well attended and were full of interesting features. Prof. J. Rees Lin brought an address on Christian Education at the night service. Sermons were preached by T. J. O'Neil and S. F. Harkey. Conference and church-wide interests were presented by J. M. Morse, B. F. Lewis, O. S. Lewis, W. D. Hawkins, Dr. J. M. Sullivau, Dr. D. M. Key, and O. C. Hull.

George Albert Broadus was recommended for admission on trial in the Annual Conference. Horace Hinds, C. B. Rogers, H. B. Rush, H. H. Hinton, A. L. Jones, D. R. Weston, Mrs. H. H. Hinton, S. A. Tomlinson, W. H. Wainwright, Mrs. J. W. Sells, Mrs. J. L. Sells, and George L. Carley were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference. Mrs. B. A. Desporte, Mrs. S. A. Tomlinson, T. A. Rawls and Mrs. J. D. Gautler were elected alternates. Horace Hinds was re-elected District Lay Leader, and H. H. Hinton and H. B. Rush were re-elected as his associates.

At the opening of the afternoon session of the second day the funeral of Mr. T. M. Evans was held. He had been an honored member of the local church for many years, and had many times been a lay member of the district and Annual Conferences.

Lumberton was unanimously chosen as the place for the next meeting.

S. F. HARKEY, Secretary.

Report on Temperance and Social Service of the Seashore District Conference.

Be it resolved: First, That we recommend that the present prohibition laws be more rigidly enforced and that our representatives in Washington be urged to use all possible diligence in forestalling any attempt to repeal or modify our prohibition laws.

Secondly, That we go on record as opposing any wet candidate for President of the United States; and as opposing any wet or wet sympathizer as a candidate for any public office, large or small.

Thirdly, That the temperance lessons in the Sunday school be stressed.

Finally, That we recommend that the Social Service activities of our church be more diligently pursued and not neglected by our members,

The above report on Temperance and Social Service was adopted by a rising vote, and the secretary was requested to mail a copy to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

S. F. HARKEY.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE CAN RAISE ITS SUPERANNUATE QUOTA.

My Dear Brother: March, April and May have been set apart as the months in which we are to raise the Superannuate Fund. Please do not allow anything to get in the way. This is our day.

Each church in the Mississippi Conference can put over the "Clean-Up Campaign." The objective is 100 per cent payment on the quota. Have your committee see each member and friend of the cause.

Your bishop, your presiding elder, and the director have no "big sticks" to try to drive any one; but we are tremendously anxious that every pastor shall do his best this year for this long neglected cause. We will be humiliated if we do not do better.

I am only doing what you directed me to do at the Annual Conference in November, 1927, and I trust that you will bear with me in my zeal for this worthy cause. And please do not consider me presumptuous in urging the same on you.

I am under your authority. I beg your co-operation, and with every piece of literature and every letter sent out to you, I have sent a prayer for you in your work.

I suppose that you know the balance of your quota. You will find it in Table 4 of your Conference Journal.

Put your very best service into preaching on the subject and urging your committees to action. "Be not weary in well doing," but push on to victory.

I am sending the subscription cards, which you will keep until the campaign is over; see that a correct list is made and sent to me. Let each treasurer keep envelopes intact. This is important, as it will be the record for your charge. It all depends on the effort we make as to the results.

Do not be discouraged, but remember that we are "Laborers together with God." Let us take care of those who have made Methodism possible, who have preached the Word of God, and who have believed what they preached. Some preachers may not be interested in the campaign, but they will not be superannuated long before they will think about it.

Brother, give your people the information about these old, used-up preachers and you will be surprised at the response.

Very cordially,

J. M. MORSE.

THE BATON ROUGE DISTRICT'S CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM.

One of the two conferences on Evangelism to be held in the Baton Rouge District was splendidly attended when preachers and laymen of the southern portion met with Rev. J. W. Booth in Istrouma, Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock. There were fifteen preachers present besides a fair representation of the laymen and laywomen.

Our presiding elder, Rev. L. W. Cain, presided and introduced the speakers. The opening message was brought to us by Rev. H. S. Johns, chaplain of the penitentiary. The next speaker brought us a most inspiring message on "Evangelism and Youth." At the close of the above address by Dr. Frank L. Wells, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Baton Rouge, the ladies of the Istrouma church served us a delightful plate luncheon.

The conference convened again at 1 o'clock, and Miss Ora Hooper, the district rural worker of the Woman's Missionary Society, spoke on "Evangelism in the Woman's Missionary Society." Rev. A. M. Wynu, pastor of the Zachary and Slaughter churches, spoke most helpfully on "Personal Evangelism." Mr. W. S. Holmes, of Baton Rouge, was scheduled to speak to the conference on "Evangelism in the Sunday School," but sickness prevented him from doing so. Rev. J. H. Bowdon led the discussion on this subject, and several of the other brethren spoke in the discussion that followed.

The conference was most helpful and will bear fruit in the days that lie out ahead of us. Rev. J. D. Watson brought the conference to a close with a stirring address on "The Elements of a Real Revival."

TUPELO PAYS SUPERANNUATE QUOTA

Dear Dr. Carley: I have just received the following message from Rev. Carroll Varner, our pastor at Tupelo, Miss.:

"'My Board last night agreed to borrow the balance due on Superannuate Endowment quota, and to-day we are sending to Dr. Todd $1,750, putting us out."

Wouldn't it seem as "bread from heaven" to the "Forgotten Men" of Methodism if a large number of our strong churches would follow the lead of the church at Tupelo?

Please give this space in your next issue and feel that it will stimulate others to do likewise.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The district conference for the Vicksburg district will convene in the Methodist church at Port Gibson, Miss., on Tuesday, May 8, at 7:45 p. m., which time Rev. J. B. Cain, pastor of our church at Fayette, Miss., will preach the opening sermon.

The first business session will be held Wednesday morning, beginning at 8:30 o'clock.

Committees have been appointed to serve during the conference as follows:

License to Preach—G. P. McKeown, O. S. Lewis, I. H. Sells.

For Admission—B. M. Hunt, Otto Porter, J. B. Lewis.

Local Preachers—J. L. Neill, J. B. Cain, J. T. Weems.

Lay Activities—S. W. Sharbrough, H. H. Crisler, J. G. Anders.

Quarterly Conference Records—J. H. Grice, A. King, H. A. Wood.

J. T. LEGGETT, Presiding Elder.

When so many secular corporations are humane enough to pension their retired employees, should not the Church be Christian enough to make such provision for her superannuated preachers?

Preachers do not complain for lack of riches. They do not want them. They gave themselves to the Church knowing that they could not expect more than a mere living. They are able, as a rule, to have this while in active service, but the woe begins with superannuation.

The Church demands much of her preachers. They must go where sent, move when told, wear respectable clothes, keep out of debt, accept what is paid without recourse, and devote themselves wholly to the ministry. What other man subscribes to such conditions for his life work?

Think of the expense of preachers in preparing for the ministry. Think of the constant moving from place to place. Think of the meager salaries going to practically all of them. Think of the deficits suffered on these salaries. But, withal, think of the mighty work they do in the communities they serve. What would have been without it?

Don't you think, therefore, when these men wear out and have to go to the "scrap heap," that the Church should rise in her great power and provide enough for them to have a roof that does not leak, clothes without patches, food that is not stale, medicine that is not "begged," etc? The Clean-up Campaign to raise the Superannuate Endowment quota balances—is the Church trying to do this?

THE CHURCH SUCCEEDS BY WEARING OUT PREACHERS, BUT WHEN SHE LEAVES THE PREACHERS SHE WEARS OUT TO LIVE IN DIRE POVERTY, HER SUCCESS BECOMES A MOCKERY.

KEEP THE IMPORTANT FACTS CLEAR.

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr.

About two months ago forty-one pastors and officials of the church of the South addressed au "Appeal to Industrial Leaders of the South." The occasion for the appeal was stated to be "the necessity for the improvement of certain social and economic conditions, especially in the textile industry, but existing also in other industries. These are, to speak briefly, the isolation of population in the mill village; the long working week, extending in many industries even to fifty-five and sixty hours; a certain amount of the seven-day week which still exists in some industries; the employment of women and of children between 14 and 16 at overlong periods of labor; low wage standards in some industries with consequent depressed standards of living, and the general absence of labor representation in our factories."

The signers declared their belief that "all these conditions can be steadily improved, and urged the industrial leaders holding positions of responsibility and vantage to take the initiative in their improvement, in order that by friendly co-operation of employers, employees, churches, educators and officials of the State, it might be possible to build in the South by united effort a greater and more powerful industry, constructed solidly upon goodwill and co-operation, avoiding the waste and bitterness of industrial conflicts aud mitigating the intensity of the class struggle."

In conclusion, the Appeal closed with the positive declaration that such a policy called for "an intelligent and sympathetic appreciation by the public of the difficulties, financial and otherwise, which beset leaders of Southern industry, and for whole-hearted co-operation of labor, organized and unorganized," and gave pledge of "active efforts on the part of the signers to secure this understanding and co-operation."

There has been considerable criticism, some quite denunciatory, of the signers of the Appeal, and especially of the writer by name. While exceedingly regretful that such hysterical, intemperate and denunciatory language should be used in reply to a respectful, temperately worded, considerate Appeal, the personal elements involved are of small importance compared with the larger issue of the improvement of the social and economic conditions to which the Appeal calls attention.

The defense which has been made of the company-controlled mill villages may be accepted as entirely sincere, but it cannot change the fact that such villages, while they may be (as the Appeal declares) "an advance in status in the beginning," and may even in many cases (as was also stated) furnish physical advantages above those enjoyed by the average Southern laboring man, yet these absolutely controlled company villages are not normal in a Democracy, are not the best training ground for citizenship, are essentially feudalistic, and do actually develop a distinct mill village type, lacking in breadth of vision or range of experience, with an undeveloped sense of responsibility for citizenship, arising from lack of home ownership and personal participation in the government of community life.

It has also been frankly stated that many employers are very good men, who furnish more physical comforts for their employees than are found in neighboring communities not under mill control. Moreover, it was stated that the efforts of Christian workers, such as the members of the South Carolina Methodist Commission on Industry, to solve the religious problem and meet the spiritual needs of the mill villages are worthy and commendable. It must, however, be clearly set forth that justice and philanthropy are entirely different things, and that the denial of natural human rights cannot be justified or compensated for by a program of social service, however elaborate or benevolent. The fact that the recipients are contented with their lot, may be the strongest possible reason for a change in the existing system.

But it cannot be too strongly emphasized that the mill village is only one item, and indeed is not the most important item in the social, economic conditions which call for immediate consideration by employers, employees, educators, the churches, State officials and the general citizenry. Were all that is claimed by the advocates of the company-controlled mill village admitted to be true, there are other very serious conditions which cry aloud for immediate improvement, and which must not be minimized or obscured by the clamorous defense of the mill village.

Speaking on this subject, the Episcopal Address of the General Conference of the Methodist Church, South, in Memphis, May, 1926, declared: "The teaching of Jesus Christ concerning the vital central truth of human brotherhood of the obligation to love one's neighbor as one's self has developed a new social conscience, which declares the right of all men and women to a living wage, to limited hours of service, to proper restrictions upon child labor, for more opportunity for self-culture and development, in short, for whatever makes for a richer, fuller life."

This statement almost exactly parallels the quotation given in the first paragraph from the "Appeal to the Industrial Leaders of the South." And to be specific, sooner or later, and the sooner the better for Southern industry, including both employers and employees, there must be changes in working conditions:

First. The eleven-hour day and twelve-hour night, and the sixty-hour week for all workers over 16 in North Carolina and Georgia, the fifty-five-hour week in South Carolina, and no limit as to hours in Alabama should be shortened at once.

Second. The possible present eleven-hour day in Georgia, and the possible ten-hour day in South Carolina for children between 14 and 16 should be shortened at once.

Third. The all-night, twelve hours, for women, or for men either for that matter, should be shortened, and the night work for women finally abandoned altogether.

Such hours are ignorance-breeding, brutalizing, cruel and inhuman, and except for rare cases preclude all opportunity for self-culture and development, and cannot be justified by any plea of economic pressure. It means the impoverishment, grinding up aud too often premature destruction of human life itself for financial profit.

Fourth. Failure to require a certificate of a physician of physical fitness and of a school superintendeut of completion of elementary grades of all children between 14 and 16, before allowed to take regular employment, is a crime against the children and against the State of which they are likely to become ignorant, unhealthy citizens, stunted in youth for life by the greed of parents or of employers, or of both.

While the Appeal did positively emphasize "low wage standards in some industries (not cotton mills alone) with consequent depressed standards of living," and while the regular publication of the financial statements of many industries might show that the rightful "hire of the laborers had been kept back" (St. James) by selfishness, this question is not as immediately pressing as the four items concerning hours of employment and of employment of women and children, without proper restrictions.

After reading what has been written and hearing much that has been said during the past twelve months, the writer is exceedingly gratified at the results which have so far been attained. Contrary to published statements, not one of the forty-one signers of the Appeal has either in the public prints or in private correspondence withdrawn his name from the Appeal. On the contrary, since the publication of the statement by the writer in the Christian Advocate (Nashville), Jan. 6 and 13, and later in the Manufacturers Record, nearly all of the signers of the Appeal have written, expressing their continued interest in the subject. Moreover, it is hoped that a conference can be held the coming summer, possibly at Lake Junaluska, of as many of the signers as possible, and of persons interested in social and industrial conditions in the South. Should such conference be held, invitations to participate would be extended to representatives of employers and of employees. Only good can come from a frank recognition of any conditions which need to be remedied. Both the spirit and the content of the Appeal, addressed to the "Industrial Leaders of the South" in March, 1927, are sufficient guarantee that the signers of that Appeal are sympathetic with both employers and employees, and have as their sole purpose "to build in the South by united effort a greater and more powerful industry, constructed solidly upon good-will and co-operation, avoiding the waste and bitterness of industrial conflicts and mitigating the intensity of the class struggle.

Criticisms of the signers of the Appeal, no matter how denunciatory, while distracting attention somewhat from the main issue and delaying the needed improvement, will be found in the end to be negligible. The leaven of Christ's teaching of human brotherhood has been working steadily through the centuries, and will continue to work, sweetening and ameliorating social, industrial and international relations.

SOWING—REAPING.

Forty thousand dollars in bequests was received by Emory University and two other Methodist institutions in Atlanta last week as the direct result, it is believed, of a letter written forty-two years ago by Miss Laura A. Haygood, daughter of Bishop Haygoood, and one of the church's early missionaries to China.

The bequests were from the estate of the late A. C. Turner, a leadiug member of Trinity Methodist Church in Atlanta. Mr. Turner's first wife, Mrs. Lou Hardage Turner, was a close friend of Miss Haygood.

In a letter dated July 10, 1886, Miss Haygood wrote to Mr. Turner, expressing sympathy in the loss of his wife, who was a devoted worker in the church and Missionary Society, and closing with the statement: "I feel you will always keep a place in your heart for the work that was so dear to her and that through you for years to come she may bless the suffering and sorrowful."

This sentence, according to members of the family, prompted Mr. Turner, thirty-six years later, to include is his will $10,000 for Trinity Methodist Church, the income from which will be used to establish a suitable memorial for his wife. He also left $10,000 to the Decatur Orphans' Home.

One of the bequests to Emory University of $10,000 was in memory of his son, the late Mr. A. C. Turner, Jr., who attended Emory College in 1913-1914, and the interest from the sum is to be used as a scholarship and fellowship fund for graduate students. Income from the other $10,000 bequest to Emory will be used to maintain a room in the Wesley Hospital in memory of this daughter, Mrs. Nellie Turner Little, and defray expenses of charity patients.—Emory News.

The Petropolis district in Brazil equals in area a whole Annual Conference in the States. To make the rounds of this district, the Rev. Charles A. Long had to travel 988 miles by train, 31 by bus, 60 by auto, and 50 by city and bay service corporations—a total of 1,129 miles.

It is not known how many wild Indian tribes there are in South America, but it is generally believed that there are more than 300 tribes in Brazil alone. Very many of these tribes yet live in their wild native state and have never even heard the name of Jesus Christ. These uncivilized Indian tribes in the practically unexplored regions in the interior of Brazil offer a challenge to Christian people throughout the world.

JUST PLAIN MARY JANE.

By Frances McKinuon Morton.

Jessie Lee said that Mary Jane was the plainest child in school; and little Meddlesome Mattie Archer had to go and tell her about it.

Mattie thought herself a very pretty little girl; and really she was, only she spoiled it all by thinking too much of herself. Mattie was always talking about whether people were pretty or not, and she had been talking about Mary Jane herself and trying to get Jessie Lee to say Mary Jane was not pretty. Then as soon as Jessie Lee said it away went Miss Meddlesome Mattie to tell it.

Poor Jessie Lee supposed, of course, that Mary Jane would be very angry with her, but she wasn't. She smiled as pleasantly as ever and offered to walk along home with Jessie Lee.

"Mattie says she told you what I said, Mary Jane," said Jessie Lee, "and I'm so sorry."

"Oh, that?" laughed Mary Jane, "Why, I didn't mind that. I sort of liked it. I thought you meant that I tell the truth and say what I mean; and, you know, like something that is plain and easy to read." And Mary Jane just smiled right along and really seemed pleased, when Mattie and Jessie Lee had both thought of course she would be mad about it.

They were all going to school together that summer, and as it was not such a very big school it would have been pretty bad if Mary Jane had sulked and been angry with the others. There were twenty little girls in Miss Mary's room, and it certainly would not have been pleasant if one of them had been angry with the others.

It would have been especially bad just then because the Governor of the State was coming to Greenville the next week, and not one had ever seen the Governor of their State. All the schools in town were going to dismiss school for that day. The band was going to play and the boys and girls were going to march in the parade that passed before the stand where the Governor was to speak. The schools were doing this because the Governor was a good man and had worked hard to build up the schools and make it easier for the boys and girls in that State to get an education.

Miss May thought it would be a nice thing to do if the school children would give the Governor a beautiful American flag to take back to the State capitol with him; and because she worked so hard to get the flag ready the superintendent of the schools told her that she might get one of the little girls in her room to present the flag to the Governor.

"Mattie Archer would be the very one," said Miss May, for she couldn't help seeing that Mattie was indeed quite a pretty little girl.

"But, no," she said afterward, "it might be better to get Jessie Lee because she has such a sweet voice." Miss May thought about it so much that she finally decided to let the boys and girls in the room vote on it themselves and say which one of the twenty girls in the room should be the one to give the flag to the Governor.

Mattie was delighted, for she felt very sure that she would be the one who was chosen. A lot of her friends told her that she would surely be the one, and she felt so sure of it that she began to talk about what she was going to wear.

"Oh, I think you will look lovely in pink," said Mary Jane, "and I have a pretty new pink dress I will let you wear if you want it."

Then indeed Mattie was pleased, for she knew what a pretty pink dress it was and she could just feel how she would enjoy wearing it and knowing that she was the prettiest girl in the school. She thought so much about it that she began to be real cross and unfriendly to any one who even suggested that she had better wait until the voting was over.

The Governor was coming on Friday, so Miss May thought it would be a good thing to get the voting over on Monday and give the girl who was chosen plenty of time to get ready.

She put a little blue box on the front seat and told all of the children to write their choice down very carefully on a piece of paper, fold it over once and slip it in the box. Then she would count them and tell them who was to be the fortunate little girl. It was not very exciting while the counting was going on, for most of them thought surely it would be Mattie.

"But I voted for Mary Jane because she is so sweet and good," Jessie Lee whispered to Jeannie, "of course she won't get it, but I just wanted to do it because I love her so much."

"I did, too," agreed Jeannie, "just because I love her, not that I thought she'd get it. She's always so kind and tells the truth about everything, and just don't ever get mad."

Miss May, up in the front, looked up and shook her head to say that the two girls must quit talking. There was a strange and puzzled look on Miss May's face, but at last she smiled and then she said, "Well, Mary Jane, what are you going to wear when you carry the flag and give it to the Governor?"

"Why, why," gasped Mary Jane, "I loaned my pink dress to Mattie."

Then every one in the room just laughed and laughed until Mattie herself had to laugh, too.

"It's a joke on me," said Mattie at last. "You were elected, Mary Jane, and will have to wear your pink dress yourself."—The Presbyterian Advance.

ANTONIO, THE LITTLE SCULPTOR.

By Carolyn Sherwin Bailey.

Long ago there lived in Italy a little boy named Antonio Canova. His home was with his grandfather, who was a stone cutter by trade.

Antonio was not a strong little boy. He couldn't romp and jump and run with the other boys in the village, but he loved to go with his grandfather to the stoneyard. While the old man was busy cutting and shaping the great blocks of stone, Antonio would play among the chips. Sometimes he would make a little staute of soft clay; sometimes he would take his grandfather's hammer and chisel and try to cut a statue from a piece of rock. Then when they went home his grandmother would say: "What has our little Antonio been doing to-day?"

"He has been trying to make figures of stone. The boy will be a sculptor if he grows to manhood."

Now, there lived in the same town as Antonio a very rich man, a count. He often gave grand dinners for his rich friends, and he would send for Antonio's grandfather to go up to the great house and help with the work in the kitchen, for Antonio's grandfather was a fine cook as well as a stonecutter.

One day it happened that Antonio went with his grandfather to the count's house.

Everything went well until it came time to set the table for dinner. There came, suddenly, a crash from the great banqueting hall, and a man rushed into the kitchen, very pale and trembling with fright, and holding some bits of broken marble in his hand. He had broken the wonderful marble statue which was to have stood in the center of the table.

"What shall we do?" cried all the servants.

Little Antonio went up to the frightened man.

"If you had another statue for the center of the table, would it be all right?" he asked.

"Surely," said the man, "if it were of the same height and length."

"Will you not let me try to make one?" asked Antonio.

The man laughed.

"Stuff and nonsense!" he cried. "Who are you that you can carve a statue at a moment's notice?"

"I am Antonio Canova," said the lad.

"The boy can but try," said the servant, who knew Antonio.

On the table in the kitchen was a huge lump of butter. It weighed over two hundred pounds, and had just come in from the count's dairy in the mountains. Antonio took one of the kitchen knives and began to carve and shape this butter. In a few moments he had finished his statue, and there, before the wondering eyes of the servants, crouched a wonderful lion—mane, great limbs, and head complete.

"How beautiful!" they cried. And the lion was carried in and put in the center of the banqueting table.

When the count and his friends came in, the first thing they saw was the great, yellow lion.

"How remarkable," they cried.

"My friends," said the count, "this is a surprise to me as well as to you." Then he called the head servant and asked him the name of the artist.

"It was a little boy in the kitchen," said the servant, "who carved the lion."

Then the count bade the servant bring the little boy in.

"My lad," he said, "you have done a piece of work of which artists would be proud. Who are you, and who has been your teacher?"

"I am Antonio Canova," said the boy, "and I have had no teacher save my grandfather, the stonecutter."

The most noted artists were sent for to teach the little lad, and instead of carving butter he cut and shaped marble and became one of the greatest sculptors in the world.—Who To Do.

BEDTIME FOR NATURE'S CHILDREN.

It was a cold winter day. The wind was howling outside and driving the snow against the window-panes.

Marjorie sat in front of the big open fireplace with its blazing logs and wondered about her animal and insect friends.

"Mother," she asked, "what do Gray Squirrel, Silent Foot and the little caterpillars do in such terrible weather as this?"

"Oh, they take very good care of themselves, Marjorie," said mother; "much better care than perhaps you would imagine."

"Long before the snow fell, Gray Squirrel built himself a nest in an old hollow tree. By now he has crawled into it and is sleeping soundly.

"Early last fall, Silent Foot, the field mouse, stored up plenty of acorns and nuts in his tunnel pantries, under the ground. Now all that he has to do is to eat and sleep.

"Last October after the fuzzy caterpillars had eaten for many weeks, they spun soft, snug little cocoon houses of silk. Then they rolled themselves away inside of these. They are sleeping now until springtime comes.

"You see, dear, all of Nature's children, like human children, need rest and sleep; and the winter time is bedtime for many of them."—Exchange.

"Do you come to Sabbath school voluntarily or because you are coerced?" asked the pretty teacher.

"Voluntarily, I guess," replied little Edgar. "I thought they only had to get coerced if they was Baptists."—Youth's World.

"One day," said the old countryman from the hills, who was on trial for murder, "when my rheumatism was pestering me, and my daughter had just eloped with a good-for-nothing scallawag, and my barn had burned and I had lost both my mules, and my best old sow had got cholera and died, and I heard they had foreclosed the mortgage and the sheriff was looking for me, I told my troubles to one of these here optimists, and he said, 'Cheer up, old top, the worst is yet to come.' So I shot him."—Exchange.

The Illinois Central Magazine for April contains a sketch of Mrs. Sarah E. Howe, "Vicksburg's oldest citizen," ninety-eight years of age. If we mistake not, "Mother" Howe is the mother of Mrs. N. B. Harmon.

Press dispatches last week announced the death of Wiiiiam B. Candier, at his home in Viiia Rica, Ga., at the age of 82. He was a brother of Bishop Warren A. Candier, for whom and his famiiy the whole church will feei sympathy in their sorrow.

A teiegram from Rev. J. L. Carter, Mount Oiive, Miss., reads: "Our parsonage burned Thursday night. Mrs. Carter and boys barely escaped. Nothing was saved except car. I was at Hattiesburg." We sympathize with Brother Carter and the church at Mount Oiive in this great ioss. We feei sure we shaii soon hear of a rebuiiding program.

The death last week of Hon. T. M. Evans, in Gulfport, Miss., removed from that city and from Mississippi Methodism a very active layman in the work of the church. The recent meeting of the Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society in the Carrollton Avenue Methpdist Church, this city, was a great event for Methodism in New Orleans, as well as throughout the State. The meeting was largely attended, and a most interesting and inspiring program was carried out. One of the features of the occasion was a visit by many of the deiegates to Houma, where a fine work is being carried on. We have the promise of the recording secretary, Mrs. George S. Brown, to write an account of the meeting for the Advocate.

A cabie message from the Famine Reiief Commission in Peking just received by the Federai Counciі of Churches, New York, states that according to reports from missionaries in the northwestern part of the Province of Shantung appaiiing famine conditions prevaii. The situation, which has been growing worse for many months, is now so bad that nine-tenths of the population are reported to be eating unwholesome food substitutes. A haif miiiion peopie are actuaiiy starving and 4,000,000 more face simiiar conditions in the next two months. Deaths are increasing. Some hundreds of thousands of doiiars, which have been available during the winter for carrying on reiief work, are now compietely exhausted, so that reiief agencies find themselves without funds to carry on even meager relief work which had been conducted by various missionaries at their own stations and by other agencies. The International Famine Reiief Commission has surveyed a number of projects for road construction and river conservation in order to give empioyment to famine sufferers, but finds itself entireiy without resources necessary to carry on this work.

THE NEW BROAD STREET CHURCH AT HATTIESBURG, MISS.

The building of the new Broad Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., is a reai achievement. It is of brick, with aii modern improvements and conveniences, inciuding adequate provision for the Sunday school in a separate apartment. The approximate cost of the building is $40,000, though it has the appearance of having cost much more. The oid frame church has served its day and genovation well, a fine membership and congregation having been built up by the activities within its walls. Well do we remember the work there in its early days. Under the consecrated leadership of the pastor, Rev. J. W. Thompson, aided by an efficient official board and a loyal membership, Broad Street now takes its place as one of the strong churches of Hattiesburg Methodism. On the occasion of the corner stone laying some weeks ago, some of the original members of the church came long distances to rejoice with the present membership in the accomplishment of so great an undertaking. The presiding elder, Rev. J. R. Jones, and all the local Methodist preachers were present and took part in the exercises. The editor of the Advocate had the pleasure of making a brief address—a double pleasure because of the fact that he was once pastor of this church. He enjoyed greatly the hospitality of the parsonage home and the renewal of acquaintances with old friends.

A GREAT ACHIEVEMENT AT HAZLEHURST, MISS.

The new building program of the Methodist people of Hazlehurst, Miss., begun last September, is nearing completion. The congregation will move into the sub-story Sunday, April 1, and use the Sunday school lecture room for preaching services and the other completed rooms on this floor for Sunday school purposes. Some time in July the building will be completed, and the people are planning to have Bishop Candler preach the opening sermon, and Dr. W. A. Shelton to follow with a ten days' meeting.

The pastor and his family are comfortably housed in a beautiful brick parsonage home, with new furniture practically throughout. The parsonage building has four bedrooms, living and dining rooms, a kitchen, furnace and wood rooms, seven closets and other modern conveniences. Having bought the lot immediately adjoining the parsonage on the south, the Methodist people own practically a half block of very valuable property in the heart of the city, with ample room for all purposes.

Both the church and parsonage buildings are of variegated red brick, and harmonize artistically, occupying adjacent lots. The church is of Tudor Gothic architectural design, having twin towers on either side of the entrance from the front street to the main auditorium. The two units, church and young people's, comprise twenty rooms. The auditorium is complete within itself, the Sunday school and young people's unit lying back of pulpit and with main building forming a suggestive cross. The building presents a very artistic and attractive appearance upon its commanding location with bedford stone trimmings.

The congregation has done heroic work and has "done itself proud" in completing this building program of three units, including the parsonage, practically without debt. From the beginning it has been the desire and effort to pay as the work went forward. And it is with great joy that the good people of Hazlehurst see the realization of their dreams without a paralyzing bond issue to be continually raising money to meet. There may be an indebtedness of a small amount incurred on furnishing the building, but in the main the enterprise has been put through without debt.

It is not an extravagant statement to make that the Methodist people of Hazlehurst have put over an enterprise of great magnitude, with as little differences, with more ready cash and with as pleasing results as any congregation in any church anywhere. We congratulate them and their efficient and hard-working pastor, Dr. Charles W. Crisler, sincerely upon their worthy achievement.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION OF REV. THOS. H. LIPSCOMB.

(Unanimously adopted by a rising vote of the quarterly conference, Louisville, Miss., April 2, 1928.)

Resolved, That while we bow in reverent submission to the will of God, we wish to express our profound grief and sense of deep bereavement in the death of our beloved and trusted pastor, Rev. Thos. H. Lipscomb.

He had served as pastor of this charge but little more than a year when he was stricken and in a few weeks called to his reward. But his beautiful, strong, consistent Christian life had won the confidence and appreciation, not only of the members of this church, but of the entire citizenship of our town.

His life illustrated the Gospel he so loved to preach, and his deep sincerity, his unfailing candor, his heroic loyalty to truth and courage in speaking out his convictions and standing by them made him a conspicuous leader in his church. His splendid intellect, his ample educational equipment, his extensive reading and clear thinking marked him as one of the best qualified preachers of his Conference.

The ways of Providence are past our finding out, but though we sorrow over his going, and shall miss his splendid leadership, we know where to find him, and we expect to strike hands with him again in that city eternal, where there are no more tears and no more partings, for there is no more death.

We extend our sincere sympathy and love to the bereaved family, and we are glad indeed to have Sister Lipscomb and the boys still in our midst.

REVIVAL AT FOREST, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: On March 22 we closed a very successful revival meeting here at Forest, which was attended with gratifying results. There were many conversions, a number of family altars were estabiished, and our local church and community received a great spiritual uplift. On Sunday, Aprll 1, I received a class of eighteen boys and girls into the church by vows and baptism, and also four aduits by certificate, and one by vows—making a total of twenty-three additions to our church.

The meeting was conducted by Rev. J. O. Hanes, of Birmingham, Ala., one of our general evangelists, a man of sweet spirit and winning personaiity. His strong and soul-stirring messages produced a profound impression. The men's meeting at the Courthouse on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Brother Hanes, was one of the best I have ever attended. Brother H. M. Scott, his gifted and consecrated choir leader, contributed no little to the success of the meetlng by his messages in song and his work among the young people. We greatiy appreciated the brotherly co-operation of the Baptist and Presbyterian pastors and the members of their congregations. We praise God for the gracious outpouring of his Spirit. We are serving a very loyal and appreciative people.

Yours sincerely,

M. M. BLACK.

THE VALUE OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH LABORATORY.

Modern medicine and modern public health organizations are intimately related. The diagnostic facilities of medical practice are utilized every day of the year in public health work. Thls applies most intimately to the laboratory feature of diagnosis, which is a modern development of the ancient hit or miss methods of the old physician.

The whole State is served in some way, directly or indirectly, indlvidually or collectively, by one or another of the laboratories that the State Board of Health maintains. Relatively few people know of this phase of their health protection. The doctors, however, are well aware of the benefits derived from the laboratory section of the State Board of Health and make extensive use of it to the advantage of their patients.

The Public Health Laboratory serves the people directiy by attending to indivldual cases. Every doctor has the right to send in to the main or branch laboratory for examination any excreta, tissue section, water sample or other object pertaining to, or in some way connected with, a case of illness which he is attending. Thus it becomes possible to detect diphtheria, malaria, hookworm and other intestinal parasites, incipient cancer, cerebrospinal meningitis and other acute infectious diseases or conditions in their early stages.

In order to treat a disease it is necessary to have an accurate diagnosis. The Public Health Laboratory is the handmaid of the doctor not only under the circumstances mentioned, but it provides for examination of urine, blood and sputa of syphilitic and tuberculous patients, a feature of extreme diagnostic importance.

The laboratory in New Orleans makes and sends to all who request any amount of typhoid vaccine. During the recent flood this was manufactured and sent out to the stricken districts by the gallon. This work alone represents a stupendous accomplishment.

Besides typhoid vaccine, the State laboratory supplies anti-toxin and smaiipox vaccine and faciiities for diagnosis of diphtheria in the field free of charge.

A not insignificant feature of the yearly activities of the laboratories is the examination of animal heads for rabies. Many a person who has been bitten by a dog or cat has had his mind put at rest by an examination with negative result, while another knows positiveiy he must take treatment without delay.

The sanitation and care of the milk suppiy of the State has been a subject for the most earnest consideration ever since bacterial control was known and appreciated. Hence this receives a great deal of attention from all of the laboratories, including the one on the health car and the one mounted on the truck, the so-called "traveling laboratory."

This is briefly what the State Board of Health laboratory in New Orleans and branch laboratories in Shreveport, Monroe and Lake Charles, as well as the mobile laboratories are accomplishing. If acquainted with this work, you will appreciate how the scientifically applied facts of medical diagnosis are utiiized for your benefit.

A STUDENT'S PSALM.

By Esther McCracken Dixon.

O Lord, dellver me
From the habits of the slothful student
Who goeth to his classes
Day unto day and week unto week
Praying in his heart
That for one more hour
He may "get by."
Shield me, O God,
From the ways of the bluffer
Who weareth a bold face
But vaiueth not his brains.
Protect me, O Jehovah,
From the all wise professor
Who considereth his great wisdom
Reason for neglecting preparation
And who standeth before his classes
And uttereth much chattering
Which causeth drowsiness
But guideth not.
Guide me, O Lord,
Through the endless assignments
Which are as the wilderness
In the days of Israel.
Make my mind cleave to accuracy
And love perfection more than sleep.
Keep me in paths of sincerity
Where truth aboundeth.
Create a passion for wisdom
Which shall be unto me
As a force which leadeth
Unto creative thinking.
Make my purpose steadfast
And my song everlasting.

JUBILEE AUXILIARY.

The women of Saucier charge have adopted a plan of missionary organization which we think quite workable. Under the wise leadership of the pastor, Rev. S. N. Young, the churches on the charge have combined into the "Saucier Charge Auxiliary." The interest at the different churches was not thought sufficient to maintain each an active organization, and this being the case, it was thought best to have one society lor the charge. We take pride in being a Jubilee society.

We have Bible study, literary, business and social meetings, the dates being arranged to include all the four churches in turn. Mrs. S. N. Young is president; Mrs. E. E. Calmes, vice president; Mrs. Watkins, treasurer; Mrs. H. P. Hopper, recording secretary; Mrs. S. N. Howell, corresponding secretary; Mrs. W. L. Lewis, Superintendent of Children's Work; Mrs. W. K. Ramsey, Superintendent of Social Service; Mrs. E. E. O'Neal, Superintendent of Publicity; Mrs. Rnble, agent Missionary Voice.

The organization bas begun in an interesting way aud we hope to do more efficient work for the Master.

MRS. E. E. O'NEAL, Publicity.

ZONE NO. 4, MINDEN DISTRICT.

The Metbodist church was beautifully decorated for the zone No. 4 meeting of the Minden District, which was held Feb. 29, not only being a pleasant but profitable one. Owing to an epidemic of flu there were only three out of eleven auxiliaries represented.

The meeting opened at 11 a. m. with the zone leader, Mrs. S. M. Abel, of Rochelle, presiding. Mrs. J. T. Wood, of Winnfield, was elected secretary for this year. Many interesting talks were enjoyed and resolutions were passed to oppose any and all efforts to modily the Volstead law, and to support all measures, including liberal appropriations to be used to make the Volstead law effective.

The District Secretary, Mrs. D. W. Kelly, of Winnfield, asked tbat the church have as a goal this year, "A society in every church in this district," and each auxiliary have as their goal, "Every woman in the church a member of the society."

The talks were interspersed with beautiful music.

Lunch was served in the basement ol the church at noon time, and an enjoyable hour was spent in getting better acquainted.

The ladies enjoyed having Rev. Jimmie Harris, of Rochelle, with them, and appreciated his solo.

Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor of Winnfield church, was unavoidably absent from the morning session, but his arrival before the close of the alternoon session caused a thrill of delight, and his talk was greatly enjoyed.

ZONE MEETING AT NEW ALBANY, MISS.

The zone meeting for the Methodist Missionary Societies of New Albany, Potts Camp, Myrtle and Sherman, closed a successful session at the Methodist church here. Mrs. J. E. Coltharp, chairman, presided, and the meeting was attended by one hundred missionary workers. Reports were made by each organization represented and also by the varions Young People's organizations, which are under the direction of the adult auxiliaries.

This being the Jubilee year, or fiftieth anniversary of woman's missionary work in the Southern Methodist Church, the keynote of the program was a review of the work during the fifty years just closed and a tribute to its founder, Miss Belle Bennett. Plans looking to an enlargement of the work were aiso discussed.

The election of officers for the zone during the coming year was held, resulting in the selection of Mrs. Phillips, of Sherman, as chairman; Mrs. Wells, of New Albany, as secretary, and Mrs. Edwin Holmes, of New Albany, as library chairman. Myrtle was chosen as the place for the next meeting, to be held in June.

HISTORY OF HIGH POINT MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

On Monday, June 9, 1924, ten women met at the Methodist parsonage and organized a Woman's Missionary Society. At this time Rev. R. C. Mayo was pastor. He met with us, helping us to organize, reading the constitution and by-laws. Mrs. A. R. Porter was elected president.

Meetings were to be held at the church once each week. Three meetings each month were for Bible study, and one for a program on missions and business meeting. Each member of the Methodist church was to pay twenty-five cents per month as dues. Those of other denominations were called honorary members and paid ten cents per month, which was to be kept in our local fund.

Our first local work was to repaint our church. We sold ice cream and cold drinks, and got each lady in the community to donate a hen, free-will offerings, etc. So by spring of 1925 we had our church repainted. But this was only the beginning of our work for that year. We had a family of poor to help clothe and get ready for school in the fall. By this time there was a call for more furniture and household things at the parsonage. So by the time our year's work had closed our little band of workers had raised near $300 on the local fund. Besides that, our dues were paid in full and we had observed the week of prayer with an offering.

I am sorry to say when the year of 1926 closed we had not accomplished so much. Some of our members moved away and others being unable to attend, we discontinued our meetings for awbile. However, we kept our dues paid so we could still feel as if we were an organized society.

But when we started on our year of 1927, we all came back with greater determination than ever to accomplisb something and make up for the year we lagged behind. So with our Bible study, Home and Foreign Mission studies, social meetings and programs, also helping to organize a new society, a Junior Society and Baby Division, the close of the year found us with ninety-six points on the Standard of Excellence. And of course, we are very proud of our first banner year. I am sure that some of this is due to our most efficient president, Mrs. C. M. Ray.

We hope, with God's help, that when the year of 1928 closes it will find us on the Honor Roll again. We have already raised $49 in our local department for our parsonage, which needs to be remodeled.

I might say that one of our means of raising money is that each member is giving her Sunday eggs.

MRS. S. B. GRIFFIS.

ACTIVE AUXILIARY AT ELIZABETH, LA.

The following program of work is being carried out each month by the Woman's Missionary Society, of Elizabeth, La.: Thursday of first week, business meeting; second week, Bible study; third week, Mission study; fourth week, Social meeting.

New members are being received and interesting work is being done. The Bible and missionary study classes are studying at this time, "The Worker and His Bible," and "New Tasks for New Times." These subjects are being much enjoyed. Plans for enlarged work are being laid.

Miss Stella Galligan was the hostess for our social meeting this month, which was held on the afternoon of March 29. Attractive decorations of early wild flowers gave an exquisite air of spring. After an enjoyable program a delicious plate luncheon was served. Guests for the alternoon were: Mrs. A. B. Finke, Mrs. Jesse Bowen, Mrs. W. B. Allums, Mrs. George Peck, Mrs. Martha Tuck, Mrs. W. W. Williams, Mrs. W. A. Poinboeuf, Mrs. J. D. Collins, Mrs. Jack Davidson, Mrs. W. I. Twiner, Mrs. S. C. Knight, and Mrs. H. B. Hines.

MRS. H. B. HINES.

ZONE MEETING, RUSTON DISTRICT.

The meeting of zone 4 of the Ruston District was held March 18 in the Lisbon Methodist church, with Mrs. W. A. Gray, zone leader, presiding. It was a great pleasure to have a nice crowd of twenty-four auxiliary members and thirty-one visitors. The program was given by Dubach, Harmony Chapel, and Lisbon. Mrs. J. W. Fowler conducted the devotional. Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt led in prayer. Mrs. C. S. L. Patton cordially welcomed visiting societies, and Mrs. Laguin, of Dubach, made reply. Mrs. Wilson gave a very interesting paper on "What Is Meant by Stewardship," and "Time and Art of Giving" was ably presented by Mrs. Leman Tanner.

We were favored with a vocal solo by Miss Marguerite Carather, accompanied by Mrs. Irene McDonald. "Sharing On," was well told by Miss Irene Clements.

An interesting feature of the afternoon was the talk by Miss Tinye Spencer on "Stewardship of Personality," followed by an instructive "Round Table Discussion," led by Mrs. Waltman. The main thought of the original paper given by Mrs. D. W. Caldwell was "Put self away and work in love and sacrifice."

Inspiring talks by Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder, and Mrs. Carolyn Dawson, District Secretary, finished the program.

The next meeting will be held with Summerfield. The meeting closed with prayer by Rev. S. J. Starkey.

MRS. W. A. GRAY, Zone Leader.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Here is how we stand on ordering Sunday School Day programs: Six superintendents from the Aberdeen District; three from the Columbus District; twelve from the Corinth District; three from the Greenwood District; ten from the Grenada District; three from the Greenville District; twenty from the Sardis District. April is here, the grass is growing, the trees are leafing; the time is here when these programs should be ordered and preparation made for doing what our church says must be done. "Awake, men, awake." Judgment day will soon be at hand and you will appear empty-handed.

Miss Helen E. Swisher, who has the chair of Religious Education at Grenada College, is arranging to give a number of students at the college instruction in conducting daily vacation church schools. The first session will be held Sunday, April 30, at 3 p. m., another at 8 p. m., and two sessions Monday, one in the forenoon and the other in the afternoon. This will afford an opportunity for any worker in the Conference to attend and get the benefit of this instruction. The following topics will be presented: 1. "The Organization of the School." 2. "Materials for Worship, Instruction, etc." 3. "Planning the Daily Program." 4. "Special Methods, such as Story Telling, Activities, Games, etc." Any one expecting to attend will do well to write Miss Swisher.

Rev. J. D. Wroten, pastor at Indianola, held services in his new church, Sunday, April 1. Rev. J. R. Countiss preached a strong sermon to a congregation that taxed the capacity of the building. At the evening hour, the Conference Superintendent preached to a good congregation. The building is all that could be desired for instruction, worship, and service. It is a monument to the faith and hard work of the pastor and people. This splendid plant calls for a force of trained workers so the building can be put to the best use.

Rev. J. D. Simpson and the Methodists of Byhalia have built an elegant and commodious annex at Byhalia. We held an institute at this place Thursday, the 5th. Rev. T. M. Bradley, presiding elder; Rev. H. R. McKee, of Hernando; Rev. G. H. Boyles, of Olive Branch; Mrs. G. A. Baker, of Coldwater; Dr. D. R. Moore, of Byhalia, took part in the program. All these and others rendered effective service. The reports from the different schools expressed a desire for more trained teachers. Brother J. J. Stevenson, of Olive Branch, 81 years old, has been superintendent forty-one years. There is no way of estimating the value of the services of this good man.

Mail me a list of your teachers and let me send them a catalogue of our training school to be held at Grenada, June 4-9. Begin now to have a number of the teachers and young people to attend this school.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Sunday morning, April 1, at 6:15, found us en route to North Louisiana to attend the opening of the new church at Calhoun. I reached the Calhoun parsonage about 9 a. m. and found a cordial welcome extended me by the pastor, Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr. My associate, Rev. A. K. McLellan, and Rev. Dan Barr, much beloved and very popular superannuate of North Louisiana, had preceded me in arrival.

To my surprise I found the new church, consisting of six rooms, including the auditrium, had been built near the parsonage, facing the Dixie Highway. Before 10 a. m. the people began to gather for the Sunday school service, at which there were representatives from a dozen or more Sunday schools, and in which Brother McLellan and I had a part. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. Dan Barr, from the text, "For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve." Brother Barr brought a great message on service to the congregation that taxed the capacity of the new church.

During the 11 o'clock service the pastor, Brother Henderson, stated the debt on the new church was only $350, and if this amount could be raised the church would be dedicated on the same day it was opened. It only took a few minutes to raise this balance, and it was announced there would be a special dedication service in the afternoon, at which time former pastors and representatives from adjoining churches would be present.

At the noon hour a very bountiful dinner was served, which proved a delightful period of fellowship.

We noted the presence of the following former pastors: Brother R. V. Fulton, now pastor at Clay; Rev. W. B. Inabnet (supply, who was pastor there twenty-three years ago); Mrs. P. O. Lowrey, to represent Brother Lowrey.

From the adjoining charges there were: Rev. D. W. Poole, of Choudrant, and Rev. F. J. McCoy, of West Monroe.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Mr. S. M. Collins, Monroe; Mr. E. M. Decker, Farmerville, and Mr. Calhoun, of Gilbert, were present and took part in the program.

This occasion, including the music and greetings from many of the adjoining communities, was the greatest day in the history of Calhoun Methodism, and Brother W. F. Henderson; Mr. Sid Stewart, chairman of the board, and other local leaders have our heartiest congratulations for what we term "something new under the sun"—the opening and dedicating of a new church on the same day.

Dr. N. E. Joyner and Rev. R. W. Vaughan have accepted the invitation to be present at our State-wide Conference, as Secretary of Education and Superintendent of Orphanage.

On Wednesday, April 4, we held a group conference at Winnfield with the presiding elder, Rev. K. W. Dodson; the District Secretary, Dr. F. C. Wren, and other leaders, in the interest of the Standard Training School which is dated for June 21-29. Rev. C. C. Wier was elected Educational Director of this school.

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

FROM TREMONT, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Easter greeting to you and all the brethren of the "Great Connection."

Just a small space in our valuable tri-Conference journal, that all may know that we are still on the job over here at Tremont, and do not have the slightest intention of being anywhere else.

Our happiest hours are those in which we feel that we are doing the most for the extension of the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. The people over here seem to be very appreciative of our efforts, as indicated by a nice little raise in salary and the most wonderful and bountiful filling of the pantry of the cozy bungalow parsonage so quietly situated among the beautiful oaks. It was not a shower of gaudy left-overs, but a real pounding of life's necessities that made us happy—checks not to be applied on salary, hams of the country-cured variety, six or seven dozen cans of fruit, meats, etc., sacks of the staff of life, dainties for the kitchen, needles and pins for milady, gasoline and oil for the Ford, and other fine things too numerous to mention. We'll never forget them.

We are carried away with interest and results of our "Cokesbury Course" for the training of leaders in the Sunday school. A school was held before we came to the charge by Rev. E. G. Mohler, Conference extension secretary of rural work for Sunday schools, and Rev. W. R. Hammontree, assistant in the same work for Monroe and Itawamba counties, which started the good work; then Brother Hammontree held two others just about the time we came; and then the last week in February we, with the very efficient help of Mr. E. M. Sharp, who is doing the same work in Corinth District, carried to a marvelous success a charge-wide program, in that we held an approved school at the high school building and a one-teacher school in five churches. As a result, about fifty units of credit were issued, which is really the smallest object in view. Brethren, it will work, for "the redemptive forces of a community are the resident forces of that community." We will be glad to report 100 units of credit at the district conference. We are confident Tremont will lead in this work this year. We as pastors should give our whole-hearted support to the work of these brethren.

We are sure of a 100 per cent collection on the Mission Special—a little late in finishing; but our congregations have not justified the presentation of such a worthy cause, as bad weather, roads, and feelings still have their part in blocking church-going of our people.

This letter is unfinished, but we must not take more of your time and space. May we all feel cause to rejoice together at this Easter-tide.

L. B. WIMBERLEY, P. C.

Inca Monuments

WHETHER the Incas, a race of Peruvian Indians, stood at the beginning of civilization or whether, as some believe, they represent a culture as old as that of Egypt and more advanced than that of their Spanish conquerors, is still disputed. But, they certainly left some remarkable monuments which tell of a strong and highly gifted race.

All that is left of the Monuments and Architecture of the Incas is the granite.

It is well for us to learn this lesson, a fact that is proven by the history of all races—Granite Monuments last longer than any other. Scientific tests prove that granites vary in the quality of durability and show superior to other grey granites. Its flawless beauty, stalwart strength, and great durability, combined with adaptability to design make it the ideal monumental stone.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: Because of my not writing you last week I have two Institutes to report in this letter. Our Alexandria District Leaguers had such a happy time together during our week with them. We had an average attendance of fifty each night and gave twenty-eight credits. Leaguers from Pineville, Glenmora, Boyce, Holloway, and Alexandria attended regularly. We were very fortunate to have had Rev. Allen J. Carter, assistant secretary from our Central Office at Nashville, with us. Other members of the faculty that assisted us in making the Institute a success were: Rev. C. K. Smith, Pineville; Dr. Cleanth Brooks, Alexandria; Mrs. James T. Harris, Rochelle, and Mrs. R. P. Jackson, New Orleans. On Friday night a delightful banquet was served by the Alexandria Leaguers, with Mr. Charles White, our State president, acting as toastmaster.

Our next Institute was held in Minden, where we spent a most enjoyable week. Although our crowd was small, made up almost entirely of the Minden Leaguers, with three from Plain Dealing and two from Rochelle, I feel that those present benefited greatly by the instruction and inspiration gained. We were glad to have Rev. H. E. Pfost, of Plain Dealing; Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Harris, of Rochelle; Rev. Allen Carter, of Nashville; Mrs. R. P. Jackson, of New Orleans, and Miss Mary Searles, of Minden, on our faculty. I feel that Miss Mary Searles, our District Secretary, deserves special recognition for her splendid service to the Minden District Leaguers. At the close of our Institute we issued eighteen credits. We regret very much that Brother L. I. McCain could not be with us during the week, due to the serious illness of his wife. Brother and Mrs. McCain are such loyal Leaguers that we always miss them in their absence. We were glad to have our presiding elder, Rev. K. W. Dodson, and his wife visit with us a number of times during the week.

I am sorry that all of our Louisiana Leaguers did not have the pleasure of meeting and knowing Mr. Allen Carter, of the Central Office, while on such a short stay in our State. Mr. Carter won the hearts of those whom he met and he says he's coming back to Louisiana the first opportunity that comes his way.

The reports from Anniversary Day are coming in so splendidly. I'm just proud of you Leaguers! I'd love to print some of the fine returns in this letter, but I'll try to print the entire list in next week's issue. I trust that your League will be "on the list." Send your offering in to Mr. F. H. Riggs, Box 1345, Monroe, La., at once, if it is not already in. May God abundantly bless you in your great program of work. The Epworth League year has just closed its third quarter of work. With only one more quarter left, let's do all we can to accomplish great things in League work. Remember that your State officers are ready to serve you.

Sincerely,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Field Secretary.

A TREMENDOUS FIELD OF OPPORTUNITY FOR OUR METHODIST CHURCH.

By Rev. A. M. Martin, French Missionary, St. Martinville, La.

Our work as a French missionary in the St. Martinville charge extends into three parishes, namely, St. Martin, Iberia, and Vermillion. With over 50,000 people living in these three parishes, of whom 90 per cent are French and Roman Catholic, there is a tremendous field of opportunity for the missionary work of our great Methodist church.

A careful survey of our French missionary activities in these three parishes reveals only a little more than 200 members of our church, who have come in from the Roman Catholic Church in the last few years. We have two small churches, or chapels, in St. Martin Parish, one at St. Martinville, the parish seat, which is a town of 1,500 people with only ten Protestant families, and one at Arnaudville, a town of 500 people, with only four Protestant families. There are over 14,000 white people living in St. Martin Parish, and less than 150 Protestants.

We have one small church at Lydia, in Iberia Parish, and while we have good Protestant churches and pastors in the towns of New Iberia and Jeanerette, our little congregation of Methodists is the only work in French for the French people in the parish. In Vermillion Parish we have Protestant churches and pastors in the towns of Abbeville, Gueydan, and Kaplan, but our little church at Pecan Island is the only French work in the parish.

In a New Parish.

Three families, converted from the Roman Catholic Church, have moved from Lydia, Iberia Parish, to Oaklawn plantation in St. Mary's Parish, about fifty miles from St. Martinville. This has given us an opening for Methodist French missionary work in another parish. We have services in the homes of these new Christians, and their friends and neighbors attend our services. We leave St. Martinville in our missionary Ford car with a folding organ and about two dozen hymn books for our new preaching place and hold services among the French people on this big plantation.

The fathers and mothers in this new congregation are not able to read or write, although they are under 35 years of age. The children are going to school and just learning to read and write. Therefore, we must preach, play the organ, lead the singing, and teach as much as possible during our visit. Reading the Bible in French is especially enjoyed by the new congregation.

A Life Telling for Christianity.

A young man converted from the Roman Catholic Church, who had become a very faithful member of our French congregation, moved to a community fifty miles away and got a job clerking in a large store. He soon fell in love with a Roman Catholic girl, and after some time decided to marry. At first her parents did not like the idea of their daughter knowing a Protestant boy, but soon they learned to like him very much, and when the time came for the wedding they were more than glad for their daughter to be joined in holy wedlock to a Protestant boy in a Methodist church, and all the family attended the wedding. His life is telling for Protestantism, and above all for Christianity, among these new people in a new place. We have reason to believe that he will win his wife to Christianity as well as all her family.

ROCHE'S EMBROCATION

Serving in a Christian Way.

We are sometimes called upon to baptize a baby of Roman Catholic parents. They are accustomed to pay for baptism and always come to us with the money in hand. We at once inform them that we do not charge any money for our services, as we feel that we are doing what the church ought to do in a Christian way. Most of them are very much surprised that we refuse to take money, as they are used to a demand for the same.

Run-Down, Nervous, Appetite Gone, Lady Shows Great Improvement After Using Cardui.

Waterloo, S. C.—"I took Cardui at intervals for three years, and have been in good health since last fall," says Mrs. Noble J. Hayes, who lives near here. "My improvement after taking a course of this medicine was really remarkable.

"I am much stronger and can accomplish so much more work now. My weight increased twenty pounds, and my color is fresh and good.

"For a long time I had been feeling poorly. Some days I dragged around the house and had not enough energy to do my housework.

"I worried a lot about myself. I did not seem like myself, and my nerves were all on edge. I did not sleep well, and my appetite left me.

"I found Cardui to be an excellent tonic. After I had taken it a few weeks, I began to pick up and to gain in weight and strength.

"Now I am in fine health. I have recommended Cardui to many of my friends, and shall continue to do so."

For over 50 years, Cardui has been used with success and recommended by thousands of women for weakness and similar ailments.

ZONE MEETING, BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

The northern zone of the Brookhaven District met at Providence church, on the Georgetown charge, March 1. Although weather conditions were not very favorable, we had a splendid attendance. Mrs. J. E. J. Ferguson, zone chairman, being detained through illness, Mrs. Frank Decell, our efficient District Secretary, presided, and Mrs. C. H. Trawick was elected secretary pro tem.

The devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Ben White, of Hazlehurst, after which Brother L. M. Sharp, of Georgetown extended a gracious and cordial welcome, and Mrs. Allen, of Georgetown, made response.

The following auxiliaries responded to roll call: Hazlehurst, Hazlehurst Young Women, Gallman, Crystal Springs, Georgetown, Center Point, Pleasant Valley, and Providence.

Mrs. Sam Wood, of Hazlehurst favored us with a beautiful song.

"The Things That Make a Successful Missionary Society" was ably led by Mrs. Frank Decell in round table, bringing out many fine points: A good leader, good attendance, enthusiasm, and co-operation.

A discussion of the duty of officers was very helpful to the new auxiliaries, and a talk on "Spiritual Cultivation" by a member of the Georgetown auxiliary was most inspiring. In concluding the morning program, Mrs. Ben White stressed the importance of training the children for service, after which a bountiful lunch was served by the ladies of Providence church, and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed by all.

Brother L. M. Sharp, in speaking to the ladies on Christian citizenship, urged all Christian women to serve State and nation with their voice and vote.

The Jubilee song was sung, and a history of each auxiliary given, which was especially interesting.

Mrs. L. E. Alford, of Crystal Springs, talked on the Jubilee, stating that it was a forward as well as backward look, and our Distrrict Secretary stressed the importance of carrying out the Jubilee program.

A rising vote of thanks was given the people of Providence for their gracious hospitality, and the meeting closed with prayer, to meet with Barlow next time.

MRS. C. H. TRAWICK,

FROM SILVER CITY CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: The church property at Silver City has recently been improved with an expenditure of something over $300. The church and parsonage both have been recovered—a work that has been a crying need for the past several years. Plans were perfected a year ago for this work, but the terrible flood in this Delta came just at the time and interfered with our plans.

We are all rejoicing, however, that the much needed repairs are now an accomplished fact, and the pastor wishes to express his appreciation to all who have made this possible, for he feels that this work has inspired the people to yet greater things for the church, both locally and for the building of the kingdom in general.

Our congregations are increasing, and we see evidences of an increasing interest on the part of the people.

The Mississippi Valley flood placed a check on all church work for a period, but we feel now that this great country will emerge from its effects and be still greater in the near future.

Our second quarterly conference was held March 11; and while the reports were not what we had hoped for, yet there was a splendid spirit manifested. Brother Leggett, our presiding elder, was on hand, and preached a strong missionary sermon, which we feel was an inspiration to all who heard it.

ONCE A SCHOOL TEACHER—LATER A FAMOUS PHYSICIAN

A young man who was brought up on a farm in Western Pennsylvania qualified for district school teacher. Further pursuing his studies and teaching, he managed to save enough money to put him thru medical college. He began the practice of medicine in the new oil section of Pennsylvania, and often rode horse-back through the woods to reach and relieve those who were seriously ill. He was a student of nature, knew and easily recognized most of the medicinal plants growing in the woods.

Finally, he moved to Buffalo, N. Y., where he launched his favorite remedies, and, in a short time, they were sold by every druggist in the land. To-day, the name of this man, the late Dr. R. V. Pierce, is known throughout the world. His Golden Medical Discovery is the best known general tonic for building up strength, restoring impaired tissues and enriching the blood. More than fifty million bottles have been sold in the U. S. If your druggist does not sell it, in liquid or tablets, you can obtain a trial pkg. of the tablets by sending 10c to the Dr. Pierce Clinic, in Buffalo, N. Y.

Because of lack of funds the Methodist congregation at Wevelghen, Belgium, a suburb of the large city of Courtrai, has been compelled to worship in an old wooden hut erected by the Belgian army during the late war. In damp weather this hut was not only uncomfortable but considered dangerous. Through the gift of a friend this congregation was enabled, Dec. 11, 1927, to lay the corner stone for a small new church building to take the place of the wooden hut. It is hoped that this church will be dedicated about Easter by Bishop Darlington.

In order to carry the gospel to the people in those towns where formerly it has been impossible to rent a hall for Protestant services, the Methodist Mission in Belgium has secured a houseboat, which has been converted into a little chapel holding about fifty people. This floating chapel will travel up and down the many rivers and canals in Flanders, carrying the gospel to those people whom formerly it had been impossible to reach.

THE EDUCATIONAL SITUATION IN THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

At the session of the Louisiana Conference held in New Orleans in November, 1925, the urgent needs of our educational institutions—Centenary College and Mansfield College—were presented in detail by the representatives of those schools, and the Conference was asked to make provision for their needs.

After full consideration by the Board of Education, the matter was presented to the Conference in the form of a recommendation that the Annual Conference authorize a bond issue of $300,000, the proceeds to be applied to the needs of the colleges

After due consideration and full discussion on the Conference floor, the bond issue of $300,000 was authorized and the Board of Education was empowered to carry into effect this plan adopted by the Conference.

The Board of Education immediately undertook to carry into effect the instructions of the Conference; and in due time the bonds were issued and sold, and the proceeds applied to the financial assistance of the colleges.

These bonds were issued as an obligation of the Annual Conference, based upon the good name and faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Louisiana, and were so accepted by the purchasers. They were to mature serially over a period of ten years, interest at the rate of six and one-half per cent, payable semi-annually—July 1 and January 1—and the principal payable in installments on January 1 of each year.

As a protection of these bonds and to provide for the interest and principal payments when due, the following assets were allocated to the Board of Education: All the unpaid pledges to the Christian Education Movement; all the unpaid pledges to the Centenary College Centennial Campaign; all the unpaid pledges outside of De Soto Parish to the special Mansfield College Campaign. The aggregate of these pledges was approximately $300,000. With these resources and such other resources as might become available, it was believed that the requirements of the bond issue could be fully and promptly met as they fell due.

It must be remembered that these bonds are an obligation of the Annual Conference. The Board of Education simply acted as an agent of the Conference in carrying out its instructions. As far as we recall, the action of the Confrence in authorizing the bonds was unanimous.

It must further be remembered that the legal obligations in connection with a bond issue are very exact and very strict. For example, unless the interest and principal payments are made when due, the whole issue becomes due, the body issuing the bonds is in default, and legal steps are taken immediately to protect the bondholders.

The obligations of the bond issue have been met thus far. But on July 1, 1928, an interest payment of $9,100 is due; and on January 1, 1929, another interest payment of $9,100 and a principal payment of $20,000 will be due. These obligations must be met.

With this brief statement before us of the educational situation in the Louisiana Conference, we do not hesitate to say that the supreme task before the Conference at this time is to make provision for taking care of the interest and principal payments on its educational bonds as they fall due. We do not underestimate the importance of other interests; but this task surpasses all others in its imperative and inexorable demands The Conference must meet these bond obligations promptly and in full, or be discredited before the whole world, not only morally, but also actually and legally. The Conference is face to face with as stern a fact as has ever confronted it. There can be no evasion, dillydallying, postponement. The situation must be met.

How is the Conference to meet this situation? We name the first thing: The unpaid pledges to the Christian Education Movement, to the Centenary College Centennial Campaign, and the Mansfield College Campaign must be paid. Every person who has made a pledge and has not paid it to any of these causes will be seen in the near future and asked to make definite disposition of the pledge. There are just four ways to dispose of these pledges: The first is to pay them in full; the second is to pay part of them now and indicate when the balance will be paid; the third is, in lieu of a payment now, to indicate the earliest possible time when payment, in full or in part, will be made; the fourth is to decline to pay them at all.

These methods of disposition are desirable in the order named. The last method named is not desirable at all, and we cannot feel that anybody who made a pledge in good faith will now refuse to honor it; but if so, it is better for the Conference to know it and discount it 100 per cent than to continue to count it as an asset in meeting a critical situation.

It may be that some of those who made pledges—both ministers and laymen—have overlooked them in the multiplicity of obligations resting upon them, and are ready to pay them at once. In that case, we suggest that they make their checks payable to the Board of Education, and forward them at once to Rev. N. E Joyner, Treasurer, Centenary College, Shreveport, La., who will promptly acknowledge receipt and give proper credit. All pledges are in the hands of the Treasurer and will be handled through his office.

Others who are not prepared to pay their pledges immediately might write Dr. Joyner to the effet that they are mindful of the obligation and will pay all or part of their pledges in ample time for the next interest payment date—July 1.

In any case, let those who have not yet paid their pledges be prepared to make definite disposition of them when they are approached personally or by letter.

We cannot over emphasize the urgency of the educational situation in the Louisiana Conference, or the importance of paying these outstanding pledges.

A MOST URGENT AND IMPORTANT MATTER.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

Nothing more important than the campaign for the better equipment of Millsaps College can engage at this time the attention of the Methodists in Mississippi.

The college has had a great history; it is doing great work in the present; and it deserves to have great success in the future.

Any failure of our people in Mississippi to sustain it by giving it adequate equipment and generous endowment will mean much damage to both church and State

The people of the United States are spending annually two billions of dollars on public schools, and Mississippi is not falling behind any other State in its promotion of this great interest. But the common schools require competent teachers, and such teachers cannot be prepared for their work without good colleges.

By the very nature of civil government in the United States, religion is excluded from the common schools, and this fact is not without possibilities of peril to the country. Education increases power, and if at the same time it does not strengthen conscience for the direction of the power which it imparts, it becomes a doubtful blessing, if not a positive danger. It is all-important, therefore, that the teachers for the common schools be educated in colleges of a positive religious character; and it is fortunate for Mississippi that most of its teachers are prepared for their work in religious institutions of learning.

In this work of preparing teachers Millsaps College has done much, and it must be equipped for doing more. The taxpayers of the Commonwealth will lose the value of much of their taxes unless competent teachers of high religious character are engaged in the common schools of the State.

More important than the preparation of teachers is the education of the ministry of the church. Whatever State schools may, or may not, do, they do not produce many preachers. The church must look to its own schools for the preparation of the men who are to serve at its altars.

It is a great thing to build imposing churches, but great churches without great preachers in them will be very disappointing to those who erect and maintain them.

The Methodists of Mississippi are not a feeble folk. They have grown in numbers and advanced in wealth very rapidly during the last thirty years. They are abundantly able to do for Millsaps College all that is required to meet its urgent needs; and I confi-

A PRAYER.

By James William Sells.

Anger is like sleeping lions,
Strong in their suppleness—
Tawny maned ferocity
Waiting to be prodded into Activity.

Anger is like tamed lightning,
Powerful in its unseen strength,
Quiet and peaceful while on Duty bidden. Wires cut,
It burns and sears.

Anger is like hidden explosive,
Buried deep in the earth,
It remains unseen, unfelt.
A spark of light, it becomes Hell on earth.

Lord, for this lack of self-control,
Forgive my sin.

"SANCTIFY THEM THROUGH THY TRUTH." JOHN 17:17.

By Rev. G. A. Broadus.

The verse above is a part of our Lord's prayer for his disciples. It shows how solicitous he was of their well-being, and, also, how earnestly he yearned for their success in the work he was leaving them in the world to do. Christ has the same peculiar interest in his followers to-day and is equally anxious for the purposes of heaven to be accomplished in the lives of his people. He was asking for three things in this prayer, perhaps more. First of all, he prayed for glory for the entire family of heaven. He had glorified his Father. This was done in every movement of his ministry. He prayed for the glory he had before he came to the earth to be restored to him. Oh, how our sins made him hungry for the things in his Father's house! And, then, he declared that his glory was shared with the disciples.

He prayed, too, that the disciples might be one with him and the Father. How this should fill our hearts with profound and unendlug gratitude and urge us to our best efforts to do the task that is ours!

Then he prayed for the disciples to be sanctified. There cannot be unity in the heavenly family unless the disciples are seperated from worldly things to service in heavenly things, neither can there be the unspeakable joy in the Holy Ghost, nor successful service without sanctification.

But before this part of the prayer is realized in our lives, two things are necessary on our part, faith and obedience. What comfort and blessings would be ours if we could settle down to a child-like belief of the truth! The man we read of in Mark's writings prayed well. He said, "Lord, help thou my unbelief." Great faith can harm none of us.

Then how honoring to God is obedience. Service rendered in the spirit of love, and directed by the Word is the greatest thing any person can do. Jesus said: "If any will be great among you, he shall be your minister" (Mark 10:43). Obedience is a big thing in God's program. "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (I Sam. 15:22). Jesus, in concluding his sermon on the mountain, stressed the importance of obedience. Read what he says in Matt. 7:24-27.

James says faith without works is dead. We can see the truth of this constantly around us. Dead faith counts for nothing in our every-day needs and it can help none when we go to judgment. What will our excuses be for the faithlessness and failures when we are called to account for how we spend the time God gives us to stay in this world? Personally, I covet his remarks about the one who gave the two mites: "She has done more than the others, for she has cast in her living" (Luke 21:3). Or his words about Mary when she anointed him for burial. Jesus said of her: "She has done what she could." That is wonderful; but he will certainly say it of us when we love and serve as Mary did.

Then, again, he prayed, "That the world may know that thou has sent me." We see here how necessary our sanctification is. The salvation of lost souls depends on our success in showing them that Jesus is the Christ. He will not be seen in this world by anybody unless he is seen in the lives of his people.

In conclusion (and this is the only reason for this article) I think that Christ's prayer was the beginning of the movement that brought Pentecost to the early church. The disciples' continuing with one accord in prayer as directed by Christ, was the immediate cause. We all know the results. The revival that we want now, and need more than we want, perhaps, will come in the same way. Our prayer should not be, "Lord, sanctify them through thy truth;" but it should be, "Lord, sanctify us through thy truth; thy word is truth."

May each of us believe and act in such a way that "He will cause his face to shine upon us."

Escatawpa, Miss.

THE GOLDEN CROSS.

Dear Brother Carley: I desire to call the attention of our presiding elders, preachers, superintendents of Sabbath schools, Epworth League superintendents, and presidents of the Woman's Missionary Societies, to Golden Cross Week, which is from Sunday, May 13, to the 20th, inclusive.

Our presiding elders are expected to call attention of our preachers to the observance of this "Golden Cross Week," at which time enrollment is to be solicited as follows:

Adult	1.00
Active	5.00
Supporting	10.00
Sustaining	25.00
Service	50.00
Comrade of the Golden Cross	100.00
Life Member	500.00
Patron	1,000.00
Knight of the Golden Cross	5,000.00

The Junior and Adult members are expected to enroll annually. Our enrollment for 1927 doubled the enrollment for 1926; may we not hope that the enrollment of 1928 will double that of 1927?

This is a means by which our church is undertaking to raise money to carry on its hospital work. (See Discipline of 1926.)

Application should be made to Dr. Charles C. Jarrell, Secretary, General Hospital Board, 406 Wesley Memorial Building, Atlanta, Ga., for Golden Cross buttons. The record should be made by the director or pastor of the names enrolled.

The number of members and the amount of money are reported to the quarterly conference, and from the quarterly conference to the Annual Conference. As our North Mississippi Conference owns a hospital at Memphis, Tenn., it would be better to send the money direct to L. M. Stratton, Treasurer of the Methodist Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., care Methodist Hospital.

Very cordially,

JOHN H. SHERARD, Chairman.

Sherard, Miss.

OUR UNIVERSITY—OUR OBLIGATIONS TO IT.

One cannot attend a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Southern Methodist University, as it was my privilege recently to do, without feeling a distinct pride and joy in its success and progress. The review of the work of the institution, which took up much of the time of the recent meeting, indicated a continuation of the steady forward movement which has characterized its entire history.

Some illustrations of this statement may be found in the following facts:

1. The Law Department, now in the third year of its life, has already been admitted to the approved list of law schools by the committee of the American Bar Association, an honor which it is said has not been given to any other school so early in its history. It is expecting to be admitted to the American Association of Law Schools at its next meeting, and fine accounts of its first graduating class were reported to the Board.

2. A little more than two years ago, the Engineering Department was opened on a co-operative basis, a plan which had recently been adopted by Georgia Tech and one or two other schools. Under this plan the industrial plants in and near Dallas offer jobs to the students of the department, and two students are matriculated for each job, alternating every four weeks between class room and factory. In this way each student may be practically self-supporting while taking his engineering course. In the third year, now running, there is an enrollment of 221, which will increase as new first classes matriculate for the next two years.

3. A very significant development for the entire Southwest was the formal launching on Founders' Day, March 24, 1928, of the School of Education, which had formerly been operating as a department. The School of Education is rapidly becoming a Mecca for teachers from Texas and elsewhere, seeking their post graduate degrees. It promises to furnish a convenient opportunity for teachers pursuing post graduate work in the South, under definite Christian influences, which may greatly affect the spirit of our teachers throughout this section.

But it is with the School of Theology that our Conference and others outside of Texas are chiefly concerned, for it is to this department that our Conference must increasingly look for its supply of trained preachers. Already it has furnished us with several trained men whose work speaks for itself, and indicates the value of this training. It was very gratifying to the Board to receive reports from the professors of the department and from Bishop Moore, who has dealt officially with many of them, of the high quality of work that the young men now graduating from the School of Theology are doing, and of their fine spirit.

One of the most forward-looking movements of the Board at this session was that in which it put itself on record as definitely regarding the expansion of the School of Theology as the primary and chief objective of the Board for the present, and undertook to raise a million dollars for this department in the near future, to be used in the following ways: 1. Seven endowed professorships at $75,000 each; 2. Fifty endowed scholarships at $5,000 each; and, 3, a dormitory for the students of the School of Theology.

The above item of scholarships has a particular

...ntrust and appeal for Methodists in Louisiana. In order to hold our boys who finish at Centenary or elsewhere in their college work, and to train them definitely for our ministry, it is necessary to offer scholarships which will help take care of them while doing their seminary work. In almost every instance, these preacher boys, usually from homes of moderate means, have strained all their resources in finishing college, and are already in debt. A little help in this way may turn the tide and enable them to secure a training which will enhance the value and power of their entire future ministry. If we are to get the benefits of this training for our young preachers, it is only fair that we as a Conference should endow some of these scholarships. It is not asking too much that each district in the Louisiana Conference should endow such a scholarship. Perhaps one man can be found who will invest $5,000 in such an opportunity for training young preachers for all time. Perhaps a group of men in each district can together give such a scholarship.

In this connection my attention has been called to the fact that in Cambridge University, the Lady Margaret foundation, which sustains the Lady Margaret professorship, now occupied by Dean Inge, besides a number of scholarships, was founded by Lady Margaret, mother of King Henry VII, hundreds of years ago, and has ever since been giving training for leadership in church and State. She being dead yet speaketh. Perhaps in no other way can any man more vitally affect the future of his section than by endowing such a scholarship.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION VS. THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

In the caption of this article, the reader will note that I have called the atheistic evolutionary hypothesis "The Religion of Evolution," and I have so designated it with the firm conviction that it has in all essentials really become such with certain liberalistic preachers and teachers, pseudo-scientists, and with many others who wish to pose before the world as scholars. The latter belong to that class of people who love to join in the parade and strut in peacock feathers.

Furthermore, it will be observed that in the title of this article I have set the Religion of Evolution over against the Christian religion because modernists, including a certain type of liberalistic preachers, are contending that one can accept the fundamental tenets of the Christian faith and at the same time hold to the unsubstantiated hypothesis of evolution; or, to state it more concretely, one can be both an evolutionist and a Christian at the same time; but I deny the proposition. It is possible to conceive how a man might during one period of his life be an evolutionist and, later, rejecting evolution, become a Christian; but to hold to both at the same moment of time is, according to my way of thinking, an intellectual impossibility. I contend that, viewed from any and all angles, the Religion of Evolution and the Christian religion are unalterably antagonistic and wholly incompatible. Had Jesus spoken of evolution, I firmly believe that he would have said of it what he said of mammon: "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and evolution." The postulates of the one are inconsistent with the principles of the other. The two are irreconcilable. Therefore, all normal intellectual processes lead inevitably to the conclusion that one cannot be both an evolutionist and a Christian at the same time.

Let it be noted in the outset that modernists have adopted cunningly devised methods to accomplish the general acceptance of the theory of evolution, one of which is the use of ambiguous phraseology such as the quiet and unostensible substitution of the term "religious education" for "Christian education," the former being used today in practically all our church periodicals and by most speakers on the subject of education. It is obvious, however, that the phrase "religious education" is capable of being used by the Mohammedan or the leaders of any other pagan religion or cult. For the same reason, modernists have endeavored to confuse the minds of the common people by employing the word "progress" interchangeably with the word evolution. They argue something after this fashion: "All men believe in progress. Progress is evolution; therefore, all men should accept the theory of evolution as an established scientific fact." The sophism of their syllogism is discoverable, of course, in their minor premise—progress is not evolution, neither is evolution progress, as will be easily discernible when I come to define evolution.

For the purposes of this discussion, all theories of evolution may be divided into two general classes as follows: Theistic evolution and materialistic evolution. Let us consider these hypotheses in the order in which they have been given.

I.

Theistic Evolution.

What is theistic evolution? It is that theory of evolution whose proponents recognize the need of God at certain crucial points or stages of the evolutionary process. For instance, science has established the Law of Biogenesis, that life must come from life. Acknowledging, as it must, the negative side of the Law of Biogenesis, that there is no such thing as spontaneous generation of life as an established fact of science, theistic evolution professes itself as willing to recognize God as the only source of life. Again, when the theistic evolutionary process approaches the impassable chasms between the organic and the inorganic, plant and animal, or animal and man, there is no alternative but to assume or postulate God. But, after all, what sort of a god is the god of theistic evolution? I shall let President E. Y. Mullins, D.D., of the Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., answer that question as follows:

"The famous definition of evolution by Le Conte declares that the whole process of evolution has been by means of 'resident forces.' Now theistic evolution assumes God as moving through nature to higher forms. God himself is the 'resident force.' This view denies that God interposes from without at any stage of creation. His immanence in nature alone is stressed. The evolutionary hypothesis cannot tolerate interposition from without. What, then, are the objections to that view? There are a number of serious objections.

"First, the Bible teaches clearly that God is above as well as in nature. He is, according to Paul, 'above all, and through all, and in all.' God is not only a 'resident force' in nature; he is also a non-resident force above nature.

"Second, all theistic theories that hold the evolution doctrine tend to pantheism. God and nature are one. His personality becomes mere potentiality.

"Third, the proofs of the evolutionary process in the transition from the inorganic to the organic, from non-living to living, from plant to animal, from animal to man, are no more convincing under the theistic doctrine than any other. Some kind of a God is postulated or assumed, but this is by no means the same proof that things come to be by an evolutionary process. It is a question of fact, not of theory. I will, and I suppose every sensible person will, admit any fact which science may prove. But the facts do not prove evolution.

"Fourth, certainly the Scriptures teach that God is more than a 'resident force' in nature, and the facts of nature indicate the same. The supernatural is written all over the Bible. The story of creation in Genesis, the history of Israel, the Virgin Birth, miracles, and resurrection of Christ from the dead, all demand and evidence a God who creates, who is above all as well as in and through all.

"Fifth, the whole tendency of biological investigation is in the direction of a vindication rather than the overthrow of the supernatural."

Thus it distinctly appears that the god of theistic evolution is not God at all in the Christian conception of God, but simply a "resident force"—a potential god and not a personal God. Now, the question is, Can a man be a Christian and believe in that sort of a god? Does not theistic evolution create its own god and consequently its own religion, setting both over against the Christian's personal God and, therefore, the Christian's religion?

Having thus disposed of theistic evolution, I come now to speak of the second class of the evolution hypothesis.

II.

Materialistic Evolution.

What is materialistic evolution? In respect to its consequencies, its logical and practical effects, it may be defined as that theory of the creation of man which dethrones God, pushes him out of his own universe, wrecks the faith of man in his Creator, and insists that all nature is the product of its own evolutionary processes; but if the reader prefers a scientific definition, I quote from E. D. Cope, who is himself an evolutionist and the author of "The Primary Facts of Evolution," as follows: "The doctrine of evolution may he defined as the teaching which holds that creation has been and is accomplished by the agency of the energies which are intrinsic in the evolving matter, and without the interference of agencies which are external to it."

Now, with the famous definition of this noted evolutionist before us, it is easily discernible how evolution eliminates God and, further, that evolution is a religion of negatives—no God, no creation, no sin, no fall, no Christ and no necessity for the redemptive scheme as revealed in the Bible. Thus evolution denies the basic teachings of the Bible and rejects the fundamental tenets of the Christian religion; with its acceptance the whole fabric of Christian faith disintegrates. Yet, there are those who would have us believe that one can accept the doctrine of the Religion of Evolution and believe in the doctrine of the Christian religion at the same time. Does the reader believe it? Well, I do not. Jesus said: "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other." This was spoken concerning the antagonism between God and Mammon; but the same thing may be said with equal truth of the antagonism existing between the Christian religion and the Religion of Evolution. Both are engaged in a death struggle for supremacy, and one or the other must perish from the face of the earth. Which shall it be? I thank God I believe that the conflict now raging in the realms of pseudo-science and theology will result in an ultimate victory for Christianity which has stood the storms of the centuries; but mark you this, the victory will not be won by those who are pleased to call themselves scholars, but by the common people—the masses who compose the membership of the church with their simple faith in God. When the laity of the church finally awake to a realization of the significance of the evolutionary propaganda the noise of war is going to be heard throughout the whole earth, and there will be a revolution throughout the whole church comparable only to the reformation under the leadership of Martin Luther, and many modernistic leaders and liberalistic preachers will wake up some morning to find themselves without a job.

One thing is certain—the Religion of Evolution and the Christian religion cannot exist side by side, either in the church or the individual heart and mind; one or the other must go. Which shall it be? As Elijah said to the people assembled on Mountr Carmel to witness the contest between Baal and God, so say I to all who read these lines, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve"—the Christian religion or the Religion of Evolution.

A FINE SUGGESTION.

Dear Brother Carley: Following the notice given by Dr. Robert E. Goodrich, announcing the Pastors' School, to be in Shreveport, July 9-20, I want to suggest to the official boards aud Sunday school superintendents that it would be a fine thing to give the pastor a little purse, and send him to this school—and the congregation will get a little vacation.

Board in Centenary College at $1.25 a day is very cheap, and the pastor is supposed to bring a pillow and some sheets.

Our faculty is very fine, and two of our own Louisiana men, Dr. F. S. Parker and Dr. Thomas Carter, members of the faculty, are known and loved by all our people.

A. W. TURNER.

THE SUPERANNUATE CAMPAIGN—A GOOD REPORT FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Dr. Carley: We are in the midst of the campaign for the superannuate preachers. Twenty-five charges will be reported in full at the Annual Conference—perhaps more.

That splendid pastor and leader, Rev. L. L. Roberts, of Canton, in addition to his church paying out, has given $800 to the Superannuate Fund. Who will be the next?

Brother H. T. Perritt, a superannuate of Wesson, has given two lots in the Live Oak section at Gulfport to the Mississippi Conference Endowment Fund.

Brother R. F. Witt, a superannuate, out of his meager salary, has contributed $25 this year to the trustees of the Mississippi Conference Endowment Fund. These men practicing such self-denial will make it possible for others to follow.

I hope to put up two cottages on the lots given by Brother Perritt. I wish that some liberal lumberman would contribute the lumber for this purpose.

J. M. MORSE, Conference Director.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Ever since the dawn of Christian civilization the church of God has been and still is no mean factor in the education of youth. Strange as it may appear to some, it was the university and not the common school which was first in dissipating the darkness, superstitution and ignorance of the Middle Ages. Methodism, born in one of the ancient seats of learning, has ever been true to the development and training of those committed by the grace of God to her care and culture. The church college followed the pioneer preacher. Some of these small but worthy institutions lived for a season, did work of unusual merit, then passed away for lack of funds. Others survived the waste of years by virtue of the sacrificial service of men who toiled and struggled because of their invincible faith and courage, born of God and dedicated to a cause that might well challenge the heart of a crusader. For these men well knew, having learned this from the teaching of some worthy Alma Mater, that Christian education, in its fullest sense, is a perennial fount of Christian life.

Centenary College is one of these elect schools that has lived on through a full century, thus witnessing the worth and meaning of its titular name. Its history can never be entirely written, for its deeds are treasured and crystallized in the heroic life and patient endeavor of some now living, and some gone before to a land where knowledge is perfect.

Our old college—every alumnus feels a sense of personal possession in her welfare—is now facing a crisis. Doing more extensive work, on a larger scale, than ever before in its history, there is urgent, even critical, need of the friends, patrons and supporters of this worthy institution coming to its aid and rescue. Dr. Sexton stands like a veritable Ajax with the burden upon him, but he must have the sympathetic help and concurrence of the brethren of the Louisiana Conference. It is not right, it is not just, it is not fair, to put a man in a place like his and then play the part of an idle spectator. And, moreover, you will go far before you may find a more loyal Board of Trustees, or a better equipped and more cultured faculty. A pragmatic, practical thinker judges a thing by results—a tree by its fruit, a course of action by its consequence. "Come and see—we gladly display to the world at large the fruits of our labors."

The graduates of the college while it was located at Jackson, La., were, and are still, eminent as divines, jurists, statesmen, and teachers. The younger sons and daughters are maintaining the name and reputation, being found to-day in departments of trade, as publicists, teachers, and following the time-honored vocations of law, medicine, and the ministry. Were the alumni of this school withdrawn to-day from these active vocations, our State would suffer incalculable loss. Centenary to-day is doing a greater work than ever before, and her need is greater. I emphasize this thought: Pay your pledge for Christian education. Plead for the old colleges with some worthy man who may be seeking a worthy cause for investment. Rally to the support of Dr. N. E. Joyner, Conference Secretary of Education, who is working earnestly at the task assigned him. But camp followers and trailers cannot win the day. The Conference Board of Education must have the helpful co-operation of every available man at this juncture. This Board, representing the Conference and its acts approved therby, has pledged Louisiana Methodism to the support of the college. We cannot prove recreant to a solemn obligation.

PASTORS OF SARDIS DISTRICT MEET AT OLIVE BRANCH.

The Ministers' Association of Sardis District met at Olive Branch, April 10. Rev. G. H. Boyles, pastor-host, and his people entertained the Association royally—there is in the mind of each one who attended, the thought, "I am going back to Olive Branch some day."

Rev. J. D. Simpson preached an excellent sermon; those who have known him for years are persuaded that an excellent sermon is the only kind he can preach. Text, Phil. 3:13, 14. When he had finished, all were mindful that the largest and best pear is at the top of the tree. "The high calling of God in Christ Jesus, whom to know is life eternal."

Rev. C. T. Floyd, president, presided with his usual grace and dignity. These terms are so perfectly blended in this good man as to be regarded as essential parts in his composition.

A good program had been arranged by the committee, and each one responded to the part assigned him.

Rev. T. M. Bradley, presiding elder, is the "watchman on the tower" of the district; he knows God, the work of the church, the pastors of the district, and carries them on his heart. Following his leadership, it is easy to "keep your feet warm and your head cool."

The Association meets at Byhalia, Tuesday, May 8.

BIBLE TEACHING IN THE HINDS JUNIOR COLLEGE.

For some time I have thought that my brethren, especially of the Board of Education, would like a report of my undertakings at the Hinds Junior College.

I found on landing here a part of the task assigned me, together with my Baptist and Presbyterian brother pastors at Raymond (the site of the college), to try out an experiment in Bible teaching in a State school. Mr. Sutherland, the superintendent, an earnest Baptist layman, conceived the idea of giving two periods a week to Bible teaching by the three pastors having churches in Raymond. The work is counted an elective, and is accredited one-half unit. It is proposed to cover the same ground in Bible that is required in denominational colleges, but devoting two sessions to Bible instead of the usual one at college, allowing, as I stated above, only two periods per week to this work.

The experiment has progressed favorably so far, though my coming in at the second semester and having to organize the Methodist division de novo, together with my agitated unpreparedness for the work which my unexpected appointment to this work produced, placed me at some disadvantage. But the work has been delightful and profitable, and the anticipation of better things farther on and the hope that something worth while looking to the introduction of religious education in State schools may be achieved, inspires me to give my best thought and labor to it.

I hope the Methodist preachers who read this may co-operate with me to the extent of advising and encouraging the boys and girls who come here from their charges to take this work. Moreover, I will greatly appreciate you sending me the names of your boys and girls at or near the opening of next session, so that I can get in touch with them.

I am sending a clipping from the Jackson Daily News which may give a better idea of Prof. Sutherland's conception than my statements have conveyed. My part in the "Normal School" was simply teaching a Cokesbury Training class.

"The Hinds Junior College is offering this week through its Bible training course, a normal training school for Sunday school teachers. The type of the normal is that which is usually offered in all good Sunday schools, and which every Sunday school teacher must have in order to qualify in a standard Sunday school. The course is usually termed the Bible vacation school.

"As mentioned, the week's special work in religious instruction is part of the regular course in Bible study and training. Students of the three denominations that predominate in the school—Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian—report to classes in which their own pastor directs work from that particular church's own literature, so that a Presbyterian boy or girl learns concerning the work as his or her church would have it taught.

"This is the second year that Bible instruction has been part of the curriculum of the Hinds Junior College. All of last year and the first semester of this term students of all denominations met together, and the pastors of the above mentioned churches alternated in giving the instruction. However, by the beginning of the present semester, the class had grown to such an extent that division seemed desirable; and two sections, one for each of the three denominations were carved out of the group. And that is the situation at the present time. Rev. Mr. W[illegible] of the Baptist Church; Rev. Mr. Alexander, of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. F. L. Applewhite of the Methodist Church, are, in that connection, members of the Junior College faculty, [illegible] Bible classes twice weekly. Of course, the matter of receiving Bible training is entirely optional with the individual student, and students of denominations other than those mentioned are welcomed in any of the three groups. College high school credit is given for Bible study done in the organized classes.

"The normal training course, lasting one week, is a phase of the religious work. It is open to all students of the school, whether regular Bible students or not, and quite a number responded to the opportunity to be led into the details of Sunday school work."

F. L. APPLEWHITE.

(A Prayer)

O for a man in every charge
A man with heart aflame
With bank account untith'd and large
And quick to sign his name

A great many charges have already paid their five-year quota for Superannuate Endowment in full. Hundreds of others will do it this year, and still other hundreds will pay in full next year. By the time the next General Conference meets the majority of all the Charges will have completed this task.

But why shouldn't the Church make a hundred per cent record on this worthy undertaking? No call ever made upon our people has had in it more that appeals to their liberality. The payment of this $10,000,000 for such a cause will react upon the Church in a blessed way through all the years ahead.

Some Superannuates of the Central Texas Conference—1927

What an opportunity is here for lay members of means! There are thousands of them in the Church who could easily make very substantial contributions that would make possible a hundred per cent response by the Charges wherein they hold membership. Where could they use their money and realize a higher return on the investment? Think it over, and let yourselves be felt in this emergency.

Let it never be said of our wonderful Church that we promised something to our superannuates that we did not pay. Let not our Methodism do this thing in a small way, when other denominations are doing it in a big way. If any pastor is slow to take the lead, let big-visioned lay members come to the rescue. We must not fail.

PALEOZOIC ANT.

By Rev. H. W. Rickey.

Solomon's Scientific Solo.

Proverbs 6:6: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard: consider her ways, and be wise."

Prelude.

Darwin never had the nerve to send us to the monkeys to consider their ways and be wise.

Two Gentlemen from Verona.

E. Haeckel—"Evolution of Man," Vol. I, page 448: "It is well known that many insects exhibit a mental capacity, approximately, as highly developed as Man."

C. Darwin—"Descent of Man," part one, page 150: "Ants certainly communicate with each other, impart information, unite for the same work, or for games of play. They remember each other after months of separation, and feel sympathy for each other. They build great edifices, tunnel under rivers, and construct temporary bridges. They collect food for the community, and when an object is too large to get in, they enlarge the door, and rebuild it again. They store up seeds, and can prevent thier germination; or if they get damp, they are brought to the surface to dry. They go forth to battle, and freely sacrifice their lives for the common weal. Endless other similar facts could be given."

The Enigma of Evolution.

If we deny Mr. Ant reason, we must admit that he functions with more accuracy for community welfare, either singly or collectively, than man has yet been able to achieve. His affections, social life, diversified instincts, mental and moral powers are locked up in a space one-fourth as large as a pin-head. Darwin confesses: "Under this point of view, the brain of an ant is one of the most marvelous atoms of matter in the world, perhaps more so than the brain of man.

Comrade of Our Civilization.

The Amazon ants were the pioneers in introducing woman's suffrage—consequently, their females are larger and more ferocious than the males. Their military tactics are of the Stonewall Jackson class. The Republican ants have a civil and military organization which is a government of remarkable ranks, degrees or promotions. His labor organization is superior to Gompers' celebrated Federation of Labor—no strikes, boycotts, lockouts, riots, or wrangles over hours or wages—no unemployed problems. He is a booster and a go-getter for his village. He is a patriot that took the pay out of patriotism. There are ants that line their home-walls with beaver-boards.

A Highway Dandy.

The clever Dr. McCook informs us that the ant is the tidiest creature there is. He packs a toilet-kit, because he cannot tolerate dirt clinging to his skin. He has combs, brushes, antiseptic, liquid soap in his saliva, and his tongue ends in a bath-sponge. He has no set schedule for his toilet, but stops and cleans up when necessary.

Of Ancient Pedigree.

His first appearance is noticed in the Devonian System of the Paleozoic Era, only three short steps down to the Archaean, and too near the Beginning for Darwin's slow stages, fabulous ages, and infinitesimal increase in modification to account for him—not geological time enough for Darwin's Upward Climb without Design to have evolved the masterpiece of constructive skill known as the brain of an ant. His animal forbears forbid any such stupendous high-jump in the scale of intelligence; to admit such a staggering and sudden lift in life is to abandon Darwin's Descent Deductions.

It breaks Evolution at the neck.

A Paralyzing Fact.

The ant destroys the motion that body likeness is any guide or standard by which to size up mental or moral kinships. Mr. Ant, the perfect invertebrate, is full brother to Mr. Man, the perfect vertebrate. He is the paradox of Nature. The theory of descent as propounded by Mr. Darwin, and his contradictory successors, can furnish no reasonable explanation of the structure or arrival of our incomparable kinsman—the ant. His mental or moral or social likenesses to us are not due to blood relationship, family trees, or adaptive bodily modfications of evolutionary urges. There is no reasonable explanation on the theory of descent of the traits of the ant. If God did not invent the brain of the ant, then what is he, and how did he come about?

Darwin's Confession.

"The brain of the ant is the most marvelous atom of matter in the world, perhaps more so than the brain of man." Does not the chimera of the imagination collapse before the dauntless soul of the ant, who in valor, sagacity, thrift, industry, self-sacrifice, altriusm, village patriotism, love of offspring, and other notable virtues, surpass the average human of the unchristian kind?

The Upsetting Fact.

A body structure so low in the scale of the ladder, or tree, or plan of life and so far back chronologically or geologically or biologically or Paleontologically should enclose a brain of such uncontestable superiority over the mentality of monkeys, and be endowed with such moral virtues as the apes know not of, abolishes the arguments that Darwin's successors rest their brief for Evolution on, and Evolution is worthless as explanation of anthood.

The All-Wise God.

Learned lunacies cannot evict God from his lordship over all things. The God who devised the brain of the ant on the anatomical structure of the aforesaid wonder is a God worthy of our deepest respect and highest admiration.

Only a workman of surpassing inventive genius could have packed so marvelous array of mentalities and moralities in such an exceedingly tiny space as the ant-cerebral ganglia occupies.

Apostrophe to the Ant.

My hat off to thee, thou wonder of God, O Ant—apostle of the clean life, embodiment of thrift, paragon of industrious performances, exemplar of noblest virtues, criterion of character, model of self-sacrifice, enigma of evolution, paradox of pedigree; thy body so curiously contrived of tireless tenacities in duty doing—incarnates such prodigies of performance, and excellencies of morals and manners as to reflect honor and distinction on the skill, wisdom and powers of amazing contrivance of our all-wise God and Creator!

SEEING THE WEST WITH THE SUNDAY SCHOOL DELGATES.

By Van Carter, General Secretary, Louisiana Council of Religious Education.

The Feather River Canyon and Salt Lake City.

Leaving San Francisco at night on the Western Pacific Railroad, we wake in the morning to find that we are traversing the heart of California's richest orange and olive section, and from our Pullman and observation car we may view placer dredges at work among citrus groves. Beginning at Croville at an elevation of 200 feet, we climb constantly to 4,800 feet at Portola. In this distance of 116 miles we will have a wide range of choice scenery, for the Western Pacific is the only railroad through the Grand Canyon of the Feather River, that mighty rift of the Sierra Nevada, which rivals the other canyons of the Rockies.

The canyon proper extends from just above Croville to Keddie, eighty miles; however, for forty miles more to Portola the country still is rifted and beautiful, although not so rugged. In places, as in the Red Gorge, below Keddie, and the tremendous gorges of the Merlin and Cresta localities, the canyon is a chasm; in places it widens out into gentler phases. The railroad also changes in course, from the stream's edge to the canyon walls a thousand feet above the boiling current. But ever the blue-misted high Sierra hedge you about, presenting magnificent views.

The canyon penetrates a country of remarkable natural phenomena. We will see such spectacles as "The Angel's Slide," "The Rock of Gibraltar," "The Checkerboard," "The Natural Arch," and "Campbell's Hump Mountain." Until the building of the Western Pacific, the canyon of the Feather River was accessible only to the hunter and explorer; but to-day it is open to all comers and thus every woman and child may have the joy of seeing the wonderful panorama of mountains, rivers, lakes, and evergreen timber that the famous canyon of California unfolds to the eye.

The road follows the famous old trail of the overland emigrants along the Humboldt River in Nevada's mining and ranching country, and in Utah and Nevada it exhibits, amidst a constant panorama of varying scenes, desert phenomena formerly seen only from the stage-coach or saddle. The Western Pacific is also the only road to the West's greatest phenomena, next to the Great Salt Lake—the Great Salt Beds. For thirty miles, the roadbed is laid upon white solid salt from one to fifteen feet thick and extending for miles on either side. From the summit of the Toano Range, the divide into Nevada, a superb vista of the wondrous salty desert of the Great Basin is given. From the Sierra Divide of California clear across Nevada the route is a constant succession of wonderful views—of sharp, mysteriously tinted ranges standing sentry over brooding desert basins whose solitudes are broken by green irrigated meadows and valleys and the nestling buildings of ranch and town.

Salt Lake City is unique among the cities of America and one of the most interesting places in the world. Chief among its attractions will always be Temple Square, wherein are the Mormon Temple, Tabernacle and Assembly Hall. The Temple is closed to visitors, but we will visit the Great Tabernacle for the famous organ recital. The Tabernacle is a marvel of architectural ingenuity and construction skill. It is built main of wood and quite devoid of post or pillars. The timbers of the great domed roof are secured by rawhide thongs, and wooden pegs were largely used instead of nails. The wonderful acoustics of the great hall are the marvel of the thousands who visit it. A mere whisper at the organ bench is audible in every part of the auditorium, which seats 8,000 people. When it is remembered that this auditorium was built by a pioneer people when they were wholly removed from any touch with the rest of the country, and it is without flaw, then the accomplishment becomes almost an architectural miracle.

There are other points of interest, such as the new million dollar Administration Building of the Mormon Church, the magnificent State capitol, the Beehive House, the Lion House, the Tomb of Brightam Young, and the Pioneer Monument. Finally there is the great Salt Lake, whose waters are so salty that no animal life can exist in them and so buoyant that persons without any experience in swimming need not hesitate to take a dip. It is impossible to sink in Great Salt Lake; but those of our party who do not know how to swim will find bathing in it a novel and interesting adventure worth trying on the afternoon our party visits Salt Air Beach, the famous pavilion and amusement resort on the shores of America's Dead Sea.

We leave Salt Lake City late in the afternoon, but in time to have a view of the fertile Utah Valley before ascending into the mountains at Soldier fall, where the cool, crispy air will give us a preparatory for our wonder days yet ahead. Sadly the 100 delegates who will see the West with the Sunday School party's specail train will on the daylight ride through Feather River Canyon and the day spent in Salt Lake City one of the most delightful experiences which will come to them on their tour to the World's Sunday School Convention at Los Angeles, July 11-18, 1923.

TREES.

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is prest
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast.

A tree that looks at God all day,
And lifts her leafy arms to pray.

A tree that may in summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair.

Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

ALICE'S EASTER SURPRISE.

By Mrs. C. H. Battle.

Everybody who met Alice Kent on her way home from school smiled at her. They couldn't help it. She didn't walk; she skipped, the way a little girl does when she is very happy. Every now and then she had to bubble out loud. She was round and rosy. Her eyes were very bright and in one hand she carried something gay and pretty. It was made of heavy green paper, folded like a little book. On the outside was pasted a white rabbit holding a big pink Easter egg in his paws, with a row of cunning yellow chicks across the bottom of the page, all colored and cut out by Alice's own fingers at school that afternoon. Inside was an Easter verse which she had carefully copied. Now she was taking it home to show mother.

Did you ever make an Easter card at school and keep it as an Easter morning surprise for some one you loved very much? Alice knew exactly who was to have her booklet. She meant to put it in a pretty little basket on top of three colored eggs and give it to her cousin and playmate, Allison, who lived just across the street. She gave a little extra skip as she thought how pleased Allison would be. Then suddenly she stood still in surprise. A timid little hand had touched her sleeve, and a timid little voice called out: "Hello, little girl!"

There by the iron gate of a big brick house on the corner stood another girl, a thin little girl with a rather frightened expression.

"Hello," said Alice. "Do you live here?"

"Yes," the thin little girl answered. "I heard you comin' along, and you sounded so jolly I just thought I'd say hello."

"I was thinking about my Easter card," Alice explained. "Isn't it pretty?"

"I don't know what it's like," said the other little girl. "Can I touch it?"

"Oh!" gasped Alice, opening her own eyes very wide. "Can't you see?"

"No," was the answer; "but I'd like to feel it, if you'll let me."

Alice silently handed it to her, her mind for once too full of new thoughts for words. She knew that there were blind men and women who lived in the big house. Sometimes she saw them in the yard, and there were the words over the door: "Home for the Blind." But she had never thought of a little girl who could not see. It was too dreadful!

The little blind girl's fingers went swiftly over the green paper with its decorations, and she smiled with delight. "I know it's pretty," she said. "It's a rabbit that's pasted on, isn't it? I feel its ears. What's it for?"

Alice told her all about making the booklet and what she meant to do with it, and in turn learned that the blind girl had never had even an Easter egg, and that she had come the week before, with three other blind children, to live there and to be taught what sightless children could learn.

"It's nice here," the little girl added; "but it's kind o' lonesome, and I like to come to the gate to hear the school children go by."

"I'll stop every day coming home and say hello," exclaimed impulsive Alice, "if you'll be here at the gate."

Her new friend promised eagerly, and Alice ran home to tell her mother. "I'd love to make Easter presents for those four, mother," she said as she finished her story, "but they can't see even the prettiest card."

"They can feel," answered her mother; "and they can smell, Alice; and they can taste, can't they?"

Alice's eyes opened wide again. "Oh, mother," she cried, "could we put candy eggs in little baskets and make some more cards? And some of my hyacinths tied on the handles?"

Alice had to dance around the room as the splendid idea unfolded to her.

"Bessie and Kathie and Allison will help," mother suggested, "and I have some pretty colored paper. You shall make them right away."

So three little girls and one little boy worked like bees. Mother bought four Easter baskets and candy eggs, and soon four love gifts were ready, even to fragrant hyacinth sprays on the handles.

If you had been hidden where you could have watched early Easter morning, I doubt if you could have told which were happier, the four excited children who tiptoed softly to the door of the big house, left four beautiful Easter baskets on the step and ran away as soon as they had rung the bell, or the four blind children who laughed and nearly cried with pleasure over their very first Easter gifts.—Exchange.

THE EASTER SUNBEAMS.

Bright sunbeams played upon a bed of dewy hyacinths in the early Easter morning. Presently a door opened and golden-haired Edith came running out to look at the hyacinths. The gladness of this the gladdest day of all the year was shining in her big blue eyes.

"O, you pretty darlings," she said to the flowers. "Do you know where I am going to take you?"

Of course each pretty hyacinth in its separate little pot knew very well that Edith was going to take them to the hospital for sick children. She had told them so many times, and they knew that their mission this happy Easter day was to take a little of the breath and beauty of the sunshine into the lives of the little sick children.

The pure white lilies knew that their loveliness and fragrance were to beautify the Master's house in this blessed Easter Sunday while all the little children's voices sing out in joyous, ringing tones: "He is risen; He is risen."

Later in the morning, after the lilies had been taken to the church and the services were over, Edith and her mamma rode out to the hospital in the automobile, with the hyacinths carefully packed in baskets beside them. Here at the hospital the little Easter sunbeams were busy also. They peeped through the windows and over the little white beds and lighted up the pale faces of the sick children. On one of the snowy cots lay a little newsboy who had been knocked down by an automobile and had his leg broken. He was able to sit up now and was feeling very merry.

"What is your name, little boy?" asked Edith as she placed a lovely pink hyacinth upon his little table.

"Why, my name is Jacky the Squirrel," he said with a merry grin. "But, you see, miss, the Squirrel wasn't spry enough one time, and so he got knocked over. I've been having a lovely time though," he continued. "The chap who owned the car sends me everything he can think of. He has visited my folks and set them all up in great shape, and he is going to educate me, too, and give me a job in his office when I'm big enough. So I don't worry about a little thing like a broken leg."

"You are a cheery little fellow, and it is always best to look on the bright side," said Edith; and then, telling him that she would bring him a rose another day, she passed on to the other little beds, placed a bright flower on each little table, saying a few cheering words to each little child.

One of the nurses, who knew that Edith had a very sweet voice, said to her: "Won't you sing to them before you leave? They would enjoy it very much, I know."

The Easter sunbeams streamed lovingly over Edith's golden hair as she seated herself at the little piano in the corner of the room. The pale faces brightened as her rich voice rang forth in the words:

"Alleluia! Alleluia!
Jesus rose this blessed day.
He is with you now and always;
He will wipe our tears away.

"Jesus loves the little children;
He is close beside you now;
His loving arms are round you;
His blessing's on your brow.

"Alleluia! Alleluia!
Let your hearts no more be sad;
Let our voices cry 'Hosanna!'
Let every loving heart be glad."

Then Edith, having done her best to cheer the little sick children, went home. A feeling of great peacefulness flooded her heart as she rode along beside her mother and watched the happy Easter sunbeams sink to rest; and though she did not know it, she herself had been the brightest sunbeam of them all.—Selected.

"TIME OUT."

Mother: "Don't ask so many questions, Katie. Don't you know that curiosity once killed a cat?"

Katie: "What did the cat want to know, mother?"—Chicago Post.

Daughter: "The preacher just 'phoned and said he was coming to call this afternoon."

Mother: "Gracious! We must make a good impression. Give the baby the hymn-book to play with."—American Legion Weekly.

"Sir, your daughter has promised to become my wife."

"Well, don't come to me for sympathy; you might know something would happen to you, hanging around here five nights a week."—Honeycomb Briefs.

A teacher in an elementary school had given lessons to an infants' class on the Ten Commandments. In order to test their memories she asked:

"Can any little child give me a commandment containing only four words?"

A hand was raised immediately.

"Well?" said the teacher.

"Keep off the grass."—Tit-Bits.

The three-year-old son of a Methodist minister was with his mother at a gathering of ladies. At the proper time he was given a cooky. He ate it in short order and asked for another. The hostess said: "I'll give you another if you sing for us."

"Can't sing," was his reply, "but I know something I can say."

"That will do all right," the lady answered, expecting to hear "Twinkle, twinkle, little star," or some other nursery classic.

But the little fellow drew himself up in real Sunday school fashion and said his piece:

"'God loveth a cheerful giver.'"

The lady gave him the cooky, and the whole company seemed to be very cheerful about it.—Harper's.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE AT ALEXANDRIA, LA.

It was our privilege to spend a day at the Louisiana Sunday School Conference, which was held at Alexandria on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. The Conference Superintendent, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, had prepared a full and attractive program, which was carried out with such adjustments as had to be made on account of the unavoidable absence of some of the speakers. The Bible messages by Dr. Andrew Sledd, of Emory University, were greatly enjoyed, as were the other addresses delivered from time to time. An especially enjoyable feature of the gathering was the young people's banquet on Tuesday evening. The hospitality of First Church, under the leadership of the courteous pastor, Dr. Cleanth Brooks, and the efficient chairman of the entertainment committee, Mr. W. D. Wadley, was all that could be expected or desired. Miss Emma Hickman also deserves special mention for her readiness to minister to the comfort and convenience of the delegates in any way possible. In spite of the bad weather, the attendance was fine, all sections of the State being represented.

We were especially glad of the opportunity of attending the conference because it gave us a chance to see the latest and, in our opinion, one of the very best educational buildings in the State. The building has just been completed, the furniture not yet having been installed; but temporary provision was made to take care of the many group and departmental meetings of the conference.

The building is of brick and steel construction, three stories high, beautifully finished inside and out, and as complete in arrangement for a great Sunday school as could be desired. Great credit is due the architect, Mr. C. Errol Barron, for the perfection of his plans, and to the builders, Sandquist & Snow, Inc., for the manner in which they carried out the plans. Back of it all, though, lies the constructive wisdom of Mr. T. Wynn Holloman, chairman of the building committee; Dr. Brooks, the pastor, and Mr. H. H. White, chairman of the board of trustees and of the board of stewards. Mr. Holloman has been superintendent of the Sunday school for twenty-four years, and Mr. White has served in his official capacity for about thirty years—no wonder they know what a Sunday school building ought to be.

Every department of a modern Sunday school is adequately provided for in the arrangement of this building. Offices, class rooms, assembly rooms, library, auditorium, kitchen—all are there. The building is adequately heated and lighted, and a complete telephone and bell system has been installed. We were especially attracted by the auditorium, which will seat more than six hundred people—and there is not a column in it from one end to the other.

The cost of the building with furniture is about $130,000. We congratulate the congregation of the First Methodist Church upon the successful achievement of such a great undertaking. We should think no other church in this territory would be willing to enterprise an educational building without having first seen this one for suggestive ideas as to what such a building should contain. It is worth going a long way to see.

ADDITIONAL CLUBS.

Since the previous report, the following clubs have been received:

North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Ripley, 24.

Mississippi Conference.

Rev. J. T. Abney, Lauderdale, 20.

Rev. W. L. Blackwell, Rose Hill, 51.

The club proposition is open only to May 1. Unless there is a generous response to this proposition by that time, the path of the Advocate will be strewn with financial difficulties. It takes money to run a paper. The more than 200,000 Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana are abundantly able to put the Advocate on a firm financial basis simply by subscribing for it in sufficient numbers. The subscription list certainly ought to be 20,000. It is less than half that now. The price cannot be made any lower—the club rates barely represent the cost of production, and they do not represent that on a small circulation. If one hundred clubs averaging fifty each are sent in by May 1, we can see through our difficulties. We are hopeful—but the Advocate must have help.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We sincerely thank Mrs. W. B. Inabnet, of West Monroe, La., for a list of six subscriptions sent in a few days ago.

We express our appreciation to Rev. G. W. Robertson, Courtland, Miss., for sending the Advocate three subscriptions recently.

Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Castles, of Madison, Miss., announce the birth of a son, Hugh Craig, Jr., on April 10. Blessings upon the young man!

Rev. Claude K. Smith, pastor at Pineville, has just closed a great meeting, in which he was assisted by Evangelist H. W. Bromley, of Cynthiana, Ky.

Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, attended the meetings of the Hospital Board and the Hospital Association in St. Louis this week.

Mrs. L. L. McCain, wife of Rev. L. L. McCain, our pastor at Minden, La., is ill in the Baptist Hospital, this city. We are sure many prayers are being made for her recovery.

Rev. W. H. Jordan, pastor at Crowley, La., has recently been assisted in a fine meeting by Evangelist J. O. Hanes. The Crowley Signal gave generous space to reports of the meeting.

Rev. W. L. Broome, of Muskogee, Okla., is assisting Rev. C. T. Floyd in a meeting at Sardis, Miss. Brother Broome is a former Mississippian and is a prominent pastor in Oklahoma.

The sixth annual Southern Methodist Orphanage Conference will be held at Greenville, Tenn., April 26-27. We note from the program that Rev. J. G. Snelling, of the Louisiana Conference, is to be one of the speakers.

The Grenada Sentinel, one of the best papers published in Mississippi, has recently enlarged its pages, carrying seven columns to the page. We congratulate the able management upon the success of its journalistic enterprise.

Mr. T. L. James, one of the officials of our church in Ruston, La., has presented a Chevrolet automobile to Rev. N. E. Joyner, Secretary of the Board of Education. The car will be used in promoting the educational interests of the Conference.

Easter Sunday was a great day at Clarksdale, Miss. The pastor, Dr. H. F. Brooks, received twenty-five into the church and baptized fifteen infants and children. The congregation was reported to be the largest ever assembled in the church at a regular service.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, Louisiana Conference, authorizes the Advocate to announce that Rev. J. M. Spires, a local elder, of Ripley, Miss., has been appointed pastor of the Cameron-Calcasieu charge. Brother Spires is now at his post and is busy in the work.

A fine meeting has just closed at Cedar Grove in the Shreveport District. The preaching was done by Rev. Dan Kelly. Latest reports are to the effect that sixty-four persons united with the church. The pastor, the Rev. S. L. Riggs, says the church has been greatly revived and the outlook for a successful year is assured.

Special features of the young people's banquet at the Louisiana Sunday school conference at Alexandria last week were the music furnished by the orchestra under the leadership of Mrs. T. M. Sayman, and the singing of the Bolton High quartet. Both organizations are among the best of the kind we have ever heard.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, a superannuate member of the North Mississippi Conference, is very much improved in health and strength, and he hopes to be able to assist some of the brethren in revival work during the summer. He is living at Olive Branch, Miss. We thank Brother Bowlin for sending us three subscriptions recently.

To stimulate interest in the superannuate clean-up campaign, the following pastors in the Baton Rouge District will exchange pulpits at 11 o'clock next Sunday: Dr. Briscoe Carter and Rev. W. R. Harvell; Rev. C. C. Miller and Rev. R. W. Tucker; Rev. Wm. Schuhle and Rev. O. L. Tucker; Rev. J. H. Bowdon and Rev. W. H. Royal.

Rev. W. B. Baker is having a great pastorate on the Lula and Dundee charge, North Mississippi Conference. He and his people worship in two fine brick churches. The Woman's Missionary Societies are among the best in the Conference—the Society at Dundee has raised and paid on the church debt since Conference the handsome sum of $2,180.

Rev. W. W. Graves, of Columbia, Miss., formerly of the First Methodist Church in that city, who has been under treatment of a specialist in New Orleans since last summer, has found it necessary to undergo a very delicate surgical operation, and is now in Touro Infirmary, this city. His oldest son, B. B. Graves, of Jackson, Miss., is at his bedside. Many friends will remember Brother Graves in their prayers, that he may be restored to health.

The following sad news was received from Rev. L. E. Alford, our pastor at Crystal Springs, Miss., under date of April 10: "Mother died to-night at 1:35, and will be buried at 3:30 to-morrow, just two months and four days after the death of father. She would have been 83 to-morrow." We extend sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends. And yet theirs is not the sorrow of those who have no hope. The heritage of godly parents is a blessed possession.

Rev. E. R. Smoot is being assisted in a meeting at Tchula, Miss., by Prof. B. G. Grenfell. Prof. Grenfell was associated with Dr. Arthur Moore in evangelistic work and also with Brother Smoot when he was serving the church as general evangelist. The meeting is under fine headway and will continue two weeks. Immediately after the close of this meeting, Prof. Grenfell has an open date that he would like to fill. Any interested pastor can reach him at Tchula.

Rev. A. J. Martin, who was appointed pastor of the Pearl River charge at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference, has been released from that charge and appointed to the New Orleans circuit. Already he has begun work, and definite steps have been taken for the organization of a Sunday school and church in the lower section of the city. Rev. A. A. McKnight, pastor of the Washington circuit, will also have charge of the Pearl River circuit for the rest of the year, assisted by Rev. F. N. Sweeney.

The annual home-coming celebration of the Adams community, Auburn, Miss., will be observed on Sunday, April 29. The tabernacle, dear to many people, has been put in a good state of repair, and services will be held morning and afternoon, the sermon in the morning being preached by Rev. W. T. Griffin, and in the afternoon by Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook, with an address by Mr. Carruth Flowers and short speeches by others. Dinner will be served on the grounds. The invitation to attend the good gathering is signed by Rev. F. J. Jones, the pastor, and Mr. S. E. Carruth.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The New Orleans District Conference will be held in Covington, La., beginning at 9 a. m., on Thursday, Apr. 26, and continuing through Apr. 27. All the preachers, lay leaders and delegates who expect to attend will please notify the pastor, Rev. H. W. Jordan.

R. H. HARPER, Presiding Elder.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Bastrop and Ellis Smith.

In the thriving little city of Bastrop, La., Methodism is making splendid progress. Under the leadership of Rev. Ellis Smith the work has made great gains this year. On a recent Sunday all previous records for Sunday school attendance were broken, thirty-two members were received into the church in a class, and the attendance at the morning hour was the largest in number of any regular service to that date. On the Wednesday evening previous about half-a-hundred people gathered for prayer service, and on Friday of the same week a Young Woman's Auxiliary of the Missionary Society was organized, which added thirty per cent to the total membership of that splendid body.

Bastrop has a bright future, both commercially and spiritually, and with its wide-awake body of stewards, its well organized Sunday School, its new church building (practically paid for), its loyal Missionary Society, and its forward-looking vision, great things may be expected from the Methodism of this city.

It is a pleasure to work with Brother Smith and his loyal band, and we look for the best report this year that Bastrop ever sent to an Anual Conference.

ELMER C. GUNN, Presiding Elder,
Monroe District.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

For good reasons we have decided to have the opening session of the Grenada District Conference at 2 o'clock, Wednesday afternoon, April 25, instead of 8:30 Thursday morning, April 26, as heretofore announced. This will possibly be better united to railroad schedules. Let all concerned govern themselves accordingly. Come on the noon trains Wednesday if you come by rail. The Grenada College proposition will be set for 10 o'clock Thursday morning. The Millsaps campaign will be presented immediately thereafter, followed by the election of delegates to the Annual Conference. Other matters will be attended to in due order. The reports from the several pastors will be heard on Wednesday afternoon.

E. S. LEWIS, Presiding Elder.

A HAPPY DIRECTOR.

Reporting for my own district, good results are going to follow the fine co-operation the pastors are giving me in the Clean-up Campaign to raise the charges' balances on the Superannuate Endowment quotas. The Baton Rouge District has as faithful and agreeable pastors as make up any presiding elder's district. I am also happy over the fact, as indicated in a stack of letters on my desk before me, that the other presiding elders and pastors of the Louisiana Conference are equally interested and as determined to make the campaign a glorious success. Verily, all recognize the fact that the hour has struck for Superannuate Endowment, and the pastors are not going to allow anything to sidetrack this most worthy cause in the midst of the spirit and enthusiasm of the campaign. Special speakers will be furnished when called for—expenses prepaid. I have at my command a long list of volunteers of the very best in our Conference. Now, my brethren, why not ours have the distinction of leading all the other Conferences in cleaning up the quotas? Our people have the means, and will respond. Faith, coupled with prayer and hard work, will bring about the desired victory. Certainly, Louisiana Methodism is not going to trail behind in this noble undertaking.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Baton Rouge District Conference will be held at Clinton, La., May 3-4, 1928. Opening session Thursday, May 3, at 10 a. m. Preaching Wednesday night, May 2, at 7:30 o'clock, by Rev. W. R. A MOST URGENT AND IMPORTANT MATTER.

dently believe they will manifest a generosity equal to their ability.

Noble men have laid the foundation of Millsaps College, and the memory of their generous deeds should inspire the men of the present time to carry forward the great work for which they laid the basis. "Other men have labored and we have entered into their labors."

The labor of Charles B. Galloway and the gifts of R. W. Millsaps call upon the men of to-day to carry forward to its fullest development the institution of learning upon which they bestowed so much toil and money.

And the rising generation calls not less loudly for this work of advancement than do the memories of the good men gone. The children of Mississippi cry for intellectual bread, and they must not be denied food for their hungry minds.

A great Athenian said that "The commonwealth of Athens suffered by the loss of its youth as the summer would suffer by the blighting of the spring." What he declared of the Athenian state is not less applicable to the great State of Mississippi. Her children are her richest and best resource, and this resource must be developed to its highest and best value.

All these considerations should impel patriotic and pious people to promote with all zeal the campaign for the better equipment of Millsaps College. Duty and interest conspire to move all concerned to prompt and abundant liberality on behalf of this great interest.

Because of poverty and hard economic conditions great numbers of farmers in the central and southern provinces of Korea are moving away. A recent report from Wonsan states that 100 people leave that port daily for northern Manchuria.

After several weeks of suffering, the spirit of MRS. LAUNORA PACE took its flight on Jan. 30, 1928, to the eternal world above. She was born Oct. 7, 1891, and was married to Mr. J. B. Pace on Jan. 24, 1909. To this union were born three children, one daughter and two sons, who survive her. She joined the Methodist church at Tabernacle in early girlhood, and remained a member to the day of her death. The body was laid to rest in Tabernacle cemetery in the presence of many sorrowing friends and relatives. Funeral services were conducted by J. W. Gibson, her pastor. While her loved ones mourn her going away, may God lead each of them that some day in the by and by there will be a great reunion where separation never comes.

JAS. W. GIBSON.

On Jan. 19, 1928, the great summons came to MRS. LILLIE I. McCOOL, and called her from this life to the great beyond. Mrs. McCool was the wife of Hobert L. McCool and the daughter of J. H. Rone. She was born July 30, 1900, and was married to Mr. McCool on Jan. 14, 1923. To this union were born two sons, one four years of age and the other only a few days of age at the time of her death, and both of them survive her. She joined the Methodist church at Tabernacle at about sixteen years of age, and remained a faithful member to the day of her death. She loved her church and was faithful in attending its services, and did all she could in encouraging her pastor. The body was laid to rest in the Tabernacle cemetery in the prsence of many friends and relatives. Brother Neblett, of Kosciusko, conducted the funeral services. May God's blessings rest upon the husband and children to the extent that some day they may join in an eternal world of glory where there is no death or separation.

JAS. W. GIBSON.

On Jan. 23, 1928, the spirit of MRS. ALICE AKIN took its flight from this world to the eternal world above after only a few days of serious illness, though she had been in ill health for several months. She was born Aug. 28, 1867, and joined the church in early girlhood. She was married to Brother Zac Akin on Oct. 8, 1893, being before her marriage Miss Alice Wheeless. To this union were born seven children, five boys and two girls, all of whom survive her. The body was laid to rest at Tabernacle cemetery in the presence of a large crowd of sorrowing friends and relatives. The services were conducted by her pastor, J. W. Gibson. Sister Akin loved her church and was faithful in attending when her health permitted. Her favorite song, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," was sung at the funeral service. May God's blessings continue upon the husband, who has been a faithful worker in the kingdom here on earth, and may a full portion be given to each of the children, that they all may meet in a world of happiness where separation never comes.

JAS. W. GIBSON.

MISS SHIRLEY McKNIGHT, a beloved Christian of the Clinton, La., Methodist church, passed to her eternal reward Tuesday, Feb. 7, 1928, in the twenty-fifth year of her life. Her sufferings were long and severe, though she bore them with great fortitude, manifesting the beautiful, Christ-like life. Her life was one of the highest type of a true Christian character. She was not only devoted to her father and mother, brothers and sisters, relatives, and friends, but she was devoted also to her church, and to the reading of her Bible and good books. She wanted to live so she could continue to serve her Lord, her church, her home, her friends. The one word which more fully expresses her character than any is, "others." Her thoughts never seemed for self, but always for the peace, comfort, and happiness of others. She leaves to mourn her passing father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. McKnight; brothers, Rev. Alton A. McKnight, Franklinton, La.; Ottis McKnight, Charlie Lewis McKnight; sisters, Lillie McKnight, Carrie Mae McKnight; and a host of relatives and friends. Sleep on in peace, dear, tired body. We grieve for thee, though we know in higher circles thy soul rejoices everlastingly.

Her pastor,

DEPT. W. LEHIGH AND MASCHER STREETS PHILA.

THE COMING REVIVAL.

The revival we need to-day, for which I trust all are praying, must come as all things else from a conception, then a birth, as the budding and blooming of a rose.

And I trust that this conception has already been enacted in the church by the overshadowing of the Holy Spirit, and is being nurtured by prayer and a desire to know his will with us—a continued assembling of ourselves together.

If the above be a true condition, then we will soon see on the opening of the rose—men and women enjoying a closer walk with God, a more perfect communing with the Spirit. Then we will see live churches give birth to live children of God, see his name and power made manifest in the world.

We need, besides a revival, the Word preached without formality, that unsaved people may see and realize there is power and joy in the religion of our Lord and Master.

We too often stop with just a revival.

A revival, as I understand it, takes place only in the hearts of Christian people, for there is nothing in the heart of the unsaved to revive. However, I know it is a leaven which leaveneth the whole lump; but we too often let up about the time we have reached a revival.

God grant that in this year and in all succeeding years this manifestation of the Spirit of God shall be as a mighty rushing wind, rooting up sin and vice before it and making men free from the bondage of sin. And, may God's name be magnified and glorified, and may we have the Comforter, as his Son, our Saviour, promised. Oh, may his grace abound!

THAD L. WARD.

REVIVAL AT STARKVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We closed on Sunday evening, April 1, one of the most satisfactory revival services ever held in this charge. The services began on Sunday, March 18, at which time Rev. H. M. Ellis came to us and remained till the close of the meeting. It had not been our privilege to be associated with Brother Ellis in an evangelistic campaign before, but we have never had a visiting preacher who showed a better spirit and labored in greater harmony with the pastor and the local workers than did Brother Ellis. His preaching was pitched on a high plane from the beginning, and that standard was sustained till the last service. He makes no effort towards sensationalism; in fact, we do not think he would know how if he should attempt it, as that seems to be foreign to his nature. His treatment of the Scriptures was expository; he stuck close to his text, but his method of interpretation was in many respects unique and refreshing. No preacher has conducted a meeting in the city of Starkville whose preaching received more favorable comment from all classes than that of Brother Ellis. The ingathering was not large, as we had a very successful revival last year, conducted by Rev. E. Nash Broyles, at which time the most of those who were inclined to the Methodist church were received. At the meeting this year twenty-three gave their names for membership in the Methodist church, fourteen for the Baptist, and two for the Presbyterians. It was the kind of revival the results of which abide, and from which we have no "reaction" after it has closed.

We commend Brother Ellis for his faithful service and his special gifts as an evangelist.

AN EASTER SERVICE ON THE FLORIEN CHARGE.

Easter Sunday was a great day at Prospect church, due to the untiring effort of the worthy and energetic Sunday school superintendent, L. L. Williams, who sponsored a beautiful and appropriate program consisting of the following:

Invocation, by D. R. Sirman; an Easter message, by Rev. A. K. McLellan, on "The Occupied Tomb." In this he most beautifully portrayed how our Lord, by his resurrection, has removed the darkness and gloom of the grave for those who trust him. After the sermon an enjoyable program was rendered by the little folks, consisting of recitations and songs, interspersed by two lovely and impressive duets by Misses Hattie Miller and Jennie Connerly. The closing number was a duet by Mrs. C. B. Powell and Miss Jennie Connerly.

During this number an offering of $37.70 was made for the orphanage.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Funderburk, a young Baptist minister. Then the congregation, at the request of Brother McLellan, assembled for a picture.

After this, a bountiful basket dinner was enjoyed by all. After dinner Mr. L. L. Williams called the children together for an egg hunt, into which all entered heartily.

WELL ORGANIZED AND ACTIVE AUXILIARY AT MOUNT OLIVE MISS.

The regular meetings of the Woman's Missionary Society are well attended and much interest is manifested in the work.

On the first Monday of each month the business meeting is held. Our work is advancing under the capable leadership of our president, Mrs. A. S. Calhoun.

On the second Monday the Mission study is conducted in a most efficient manner by Mrs. J. L. Carter, superintendent of the department. We are studying "A Straight Way Toward To-Morrow." She has presented this book in a most attractive way, and the ladies are very much interested in this study. At this meeting we have a social feature, too.

On the third Monday the Bible study lesson is held. Mrs. W. D. Lowry is our superintendent in this work, and she is an excellent leader. We are studying, "Studies in Prophecy." She gives most helpful and instructive discussions of the great prophets' lives.

On the fourth Monday, the literary program is given. During the past quarter Mrs. J. C. Calhoun, Mrs. J. L. Gray, and Mrs. S. A. Head have prepared the programs. Much credit is due them for the excellent work they have done in this department.

Our officers are faithful, our workers are interested in the work, and our purpose is to make progress in each department.

We have posters placed in church announcing the different meetings; announcements are made by the pastor also.

Mrs. A. W. Evans, agent for the Voice, is doing excellent work in her office.

We have elected Mrs. E. L. Calhoun as delegate to the conference in Meridian, and Mrs. S. A. Head as alternate.

We hope to do more and better work in the future.

PUBLICITY SUPERINTENDENT.

EPITOME OF THE LOUISIANA JUBILEE CONFERENCE.

By Mrs. George S. Brown, State Recording Secretary.

The eighteenth annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference was a memorable one in many ways. First and foremost, it was the fiftieth anniversary of Louisiana women's missionary work, and a goodly number of the pioneers were present—Mrs. A. A. Bartels, Mrs. Gordon, Mrs. Florence Russe, Mrs. Alice Zable, Miss Mary Werlein, of New Orleans churches, and a few from other places. The note of joyful jubilation over work accomplished rang throughout the Conference in song, story and reports. Mrs. R. F. Harrell, Jubilee historian, is compiling a history of the work from its foundation.

It has been ten years since New Orleans had the honor of entertaining the Missionary Conference, and a royal welcome was given the delegates as they came on trains and by auto from all parts of the State. Carrollton Avenue Church, with Rev. H. L. Johns, pastor, as host, and Mrs. J. Cohen, President of the Carrollotn Missionary Society, did everything possible to make the Conference a delightful one; and Mrs. C. F. Niebergall and her able committee saw that nothing was omitted to make the entire program one all that could be desired. The pastors of New Orleans and nearby churches showed their interest by attendance upon all the sessions.

Our own Mrs. W. H. Perry, of Nashville, was our Council guest, and brought messages of inspiration and encouragement and won all hearts by her sweet personality. Then Miss Clara Chalmers, our own missionary to Cuba, was with us, bringing Cuba to our very doors with her enthusiastic pleas for co-operation. Even New Orleans people who do not visit St. Mark's, were astonished at the report made by Miss Ellison, and of the demonstration given by Miss Bess Sargent, when a number of the young people of that vicinity put on a program of music, talks, story and prayer that would equal if not surpass that of any of our churches. The day spent at Houma was an eye-opener to many, for Miss Ella Hooper goes about in such a quiet way, one never dreams of all she accomplishes with her band of workers. MacDonnell Wesley House is a place to be proud of, and the boys and girls trained there are going forth fully equipped to meet all that life holds for them.

Miss Ora Hooper, our new rural worker, was also a guest and has accomplished wonders in one short year.

Rev. H. L. Johns brought each day a Bible message fraught with love and consecration. Mrs. S. Conrad talked on "Serving the Community." Mr. L. J. Darter, prominent in Y. M. C. A. work, gave an address on "Our Youth." The Carrollton choir, Epworth Church orchestra, Mrs. Eugene Simon, Mrs. R. H. Macleod, Dalton Crichlow and Miss Bess Sargent sang for us, and all officers and secretaries made interesting reports.

One of the most impressive things on the program was the Candle Lighting Service put on by Mrs. W. T. Cunningham, Superintendent of Publicity.

Time and space will not permit to tell of all the good things of Conference, but we feel sure that every member returned home with a better knowledge of the work and with a desire to help to make her own auxiliary a better, bigger one, happy to be a co-worker in such an organization, with a desire to serve in the Master's vineyard and have great things to report when we meet again next year at Ruston.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Mrs. V. H. Spinks, Ruston.

Vice President, Mrs. S. W. Collins, Monroe.

Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. D. B. Carre, New Orleans.

Recording Secretary, Mrs. George S. Brown, New Orleans.

Treasurer, Mrs. C. C. Carver, Rayne.

Superintendent Young People, Mrs. J. H. Cain, De Ridder.

Superintendent of Children, Mrs. H. G. Owen, Mamou.

Superintendent of Literature and Publicity, Mrs. W. T. Cunningham, Natchitoches.

Superintendent of Mission and Bible Study, Mrs. F. H. Bradshaw, Mansfield.

Superintendent of Social Service, Mrs. Irvine, New Orleans.

Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. W. K. Rust, Baton Rouge.

Millions of Families Depend on Dr. Caldwell's Prescription

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies.

It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The 1928 State-wide Conference at Alexandria had a delegation from eighty of our Sunday schools: there were four members of the General Board staff at Nashville, Drs. Robertson and Schisler, Rev. A. W. Martin and Mrs. C. T. Court, present; Mrs. C. W. Kent, of the Central Texas Conference, represented Miss Mary Skinner, of the General Board staff; all of the Conference Board staff were present except two; the following presiding elders were present: Dr. A. S. Lutz, Rev. L. W. Cain, Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., Rev. K. W. Dodson, Rev. E. C. Gunn, Dr. R. H. Harper, and Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt; and the following district secretaries were present: Prof. H. W. Rickey, Mr. A. M. Mayo, Dr. F. C. Wren, Mr. S. M. Collins, Mr. E. W. Gill, and Mr. R. H. Nelson.

Dr. Sledd's Bible messages at each of the general sessions were heart-searching and unanimously appreciated.

The local church at Alexandria and all the committees connected with the Conference did their part in making the 1928 Conference such a great success.

The mid-year meeting of the Conference Board proved to he a very helpful feature.

The district group meeting, which was a new feature, proved helpful to many of the districts and will no doubt become a permanent feature at the State-wide Conferences.

The board of managers for the Camp Conference Training School at Lake Arthur will hold their first meeting next Thursday at Lake Arthur, during the district conference. This hoard is made up of one representative from each district with the exception of the Lake Charles District, in which the Conference Camp School is to he held. Representative for the Alexandria District, Prof. H. W. Rickey; Baton Baton Rouge, Rev. J. H. Bowdon; Lake Charles, Mr. A. M. Mayo, Dr. R. H. Wynn, Mrs. J. W. Buchanan, and Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr.; Minden, Rev. J. T. Harris; Monroe, Mrs. M. S. Monk; New Orleans, Rev. H. L. Johns; Ruston, Miss Elizabeth Langford; Shreveport, Mr. R. H. Nelson.

The chairman of the Board, Dr. W. W. Drake, summarized the Conference in the following words: "This Conference suggests emphatically to me the greatness of our task, the training of a generation in Christian character and service, involving the preparation of a vast army of consecrated teachers, the winning of a multitude of young hearts to the way of Jesus Christ, the enlistment of the home in the task, a task which depends on the vital power of God."

Conference Superintendent.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Up to the present, sixty schools have ordered programs to be used in the observance of Sunday School Day. The larger schools seem to be slower than the country schools. We are counting on at least 300 schools to observe the day with program and offering, as the church directs. We are asking that an offering of ten cents per member he given to maintain and extend the work of religious education. We are getting results that a blind man knows about. Four men are devoting all the time to this work.

We are sending out report blanks to all the superintendents and pastors. These reports are to be sent to the presiding elder at the place where the district conference is held so he can go over the reports, then turn them over to the Sunday School District Superintendent and the Committee on Sunday Schools. These reports will serve as a hasis for the report to the district conference and will enable the committee to make helpful recommendations to the district conference. Let us work together and with God in saving the children and youth of our land.

We rejoice in the fact that a great change is going on in town and country. Take, for example, the school at Greenbrier on the Amory circuit. It is a thrilling story. About seven years since, Brother Murff was pastor of this circuit. He made it possihle for a young woman to attend the training school at Grenada. This young woman has continued her studies at home and in tralning schools until she lacks only one unit of having her gold seal diploma. She has led other teachers to take work in Standard and Cokesbury courses. Last Sunday I visited this school. The worship service was so impressive, so spiritual and uplifting, I could not keep back tears of rejoicing. These teachers are giving religious instruction effectively, they are training all the people really to worship; and are slowly directing in service by organizing classes for the purpose of building a modern house adapted to their needs. Needless to say, they are using the Program of Work as their guide.

The Aberden District Standard Training School is in session at Amory this week. We have enrolled more than one hundred, and will possibly issue close to ninety credits. Parks, Hammontree and Company have done a most excellent piece of work. They purpose to have near two hundred in the school next year.

The following courses will be offered at Greuada, June 4-9: "Beginner Materials and Methods;" "Primary Materials and Methods;" "Junior Materials and Methods;" "Intermediate-Senior Materials and Methods;" "Principles of Teaching;" "Studies in Prophecy" (Bible); "Story-Telling in Religious Education;" "The Home in Society."

We hope to mail the folder the latter part of next week. We are counting on an attendance of two hundred, possibly more.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The missionary offering for this month was the largest that we have ever had, the total being $1,247.69. If this kind of an offering can continue, we will reach our goal without any trouble in the world. I trust that you will be interested in promoting Missionary Education in your Sunday school; and while I would not insist that you unduly stress the offering, I would appreciate your telling the story of Dual-Extension in such a way that the impression of your school will be the importance of the offering. Our desire is that every Sunday school in the Mississippi Conference will send an offering for missions and will observe Mission Sunday with the proper program.

We wish to call your attention again to the fact that the Sunday School Day programs have been ordered sent to the pastors of the various charges. Will you please see your pastor and get your programs? To the Pastors: If you have not received your Sunday School Day programs, please write me immediately, telling me so. This will he a very gracious favor and one that we will sincerely appreciate. The third Sunday is the time for the observance of Sunday School Day. I hope that many Sunday schools will be prompt in this observance and prompt in remitting. We are very desirous that you help us in this matter, not only that we need the offering, hut we are anxious for the programs to be rendered in the Sunday schools.

The Conference-wide meeting is now past history. There were 196 registered in the group meetings of this conference. There were many who attended the public meetings that did not attend the group meetings. We have never had a more earnest group of workers together. We enjoyed the work exceedingly and trust that the proper person will give out the information in regard to this meeting. The Workers' Council meeting was well attended and we feel that we got fine results from this meeting. I feel sure that the Conference Board will be able to project a better program for the Conference than it has ever done before.

Another series of Standard Training Schools is about to begin. Will you not join us in prayer that these schools may be all that they ought to be for the glory of God and the advancement of His cause?

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE FOR MONROE AND ITAWAMBA COUNTIES.

Under the leadership of Rev. W. R. Hammontree, one of the two assistant Sunday school secretaries sent out by the North Mississippi Conference, the Sunday schools in Monroe and Itawamba Counties are making extraordinary progress. Brother Hammontree was assigned to rural work with the Sundsy schools of the Methodist church in these two counties, and as a result of his efforts practically all teachers and officers of the Sunday schools in this territory have one or more credits in Cokesbury leadership training.

Recently he conceived the idea of a Pastor-Superintendent Institute, and with the assitance of Rev. C. A. Parks, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Amory, the Nine Plus Bible class, and the Amory auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society, the institute was held at Amory.

The following very interesting program was given:

Worship Period, conducted by Mrs. C. M. Harrison, after which the following topics for discussion were introduced:

1. "Organization of the Sunday School," conducted by W. R. Hammontree.
2. "The Workers' Council," conducted by V. E. Graham.
3. "Evangelism," talk by Hon. J. O. Prude.
4. "The Extension Departments," by Mrs. W. L. Underwood.
5. "Literature," by Rev. R. G. Moore.
6. "Worship and Service," by E. M. Sharp.
7. "The Four Outstanding Days of the Sunday School," by Quin E. Mattox.

These talks aud discussions were inspirational and instructive to both pastors and superintendents. At the close of this part of the program an hour was given to recreation, and at 6:30 o'clock the entire group of pastors and superintendents met in the spacious recreation hall of the church with the Nine Plus Bible class in what proved to be a banquet of rarest type.

Rev. E. Nash Broyles, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, made a very interesting talk on the work of the Sunday school. Mr. E. M. Sharp, Assistant Secretary of Sunday Schools of the Corinth District, rendered several piano selections and songs which gave the occasion just the climax it needed to make it an unusual success.

This is the first institute of this kind that we have heard of, but it is a real worthwhile phase of Sunday school development.

W. L. PEARSON.

A GREAT DAY AT PHILADELPHIA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Sunday was the greatest day in the whole life of our church here. Since the Conference year opened up, we have had a gradual improvement in all the departments of our church. The League is doing the best it has ever done and the Sunday school reached near the four hundred point Sunday, lacking only eight. Two adult Bible classes reached ninety-two, and one, 103. Then we had a ladies' class, adult class, that was the best in this department.

The children's Easter program was the very best. Seven fine children were baptized, and the pastor spoke on the theme of the day, "The Deathless Faith Inspired by the Fact of the Empty Tomb, and the Inspiration to the Loftiest Endeavor."

At the evening hour we had a cantata, "The Story of Easter in Song." This was an hour of great spiritual uplift. Our choir is one of the very best in the Conference.

Our church has been fortunate in the class of these who have united with us this year. Several young couples who are just starting homes of their own have united with us.

Brother Jones is faithfully on his job. Just recently he was laid in for a few days, but is up and on the go. Brother Oakley in iustant in season and out of season, making full proof of his ministry. In fact, I feel that Methodism in Neshoba County is on the up grade. We love our new presiding elder. He is at it hard in revivals, and we hear good news from him wherever he goes. He is making a good start and you will hear from him all along the way.

W. H. SAUNDERS.

NEW PARSONAGE AT CRENSHAW, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Our people have just supplied a great need for a parsonage. They have traded the old parsonage to the Bank of Crenshaw for a splendid home in the same block with the church. We now have a house that any preacher should be glad to live in, plenty of room, splendid location with north and east front, on corner lot, fully equipped with all modern improvements. We hope to get moved in at an early date; then, you may come to see us.

There are no better people in the universe than these at Crenshaw and Sledge. It would help you to associate with them awhile, so come to the district conference.

Fraternally,

W. W. JONES.

How Much Water Should Baby Get?

A Famous Authority's Rule

By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in gold.

Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

LETTER FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: Our program of work is just so full at the present time that I am wondering just what I should bring to you in this week's letter. I wish it were possible for me to broadcast to my Leaguers, during their Sunday afternoon devotionals, a few of the many projects that we are all trying to carry on. I'm proud of our Louisana Leaguers and the splendid work which you are doing, and I commend you for your loyalty in making this our banner year in League work.

I spent such a pleasant time in Arcadia this past week in the fine home of Rev. and Mrs. G. A. Morgan. We failed to have a large enough registration from Ruston District to conduct our Efficiency Institute, but Brother Morgan and I conducted a mission study and Hand Book class, which the Arcadia Leaguers seemed to enjoy very much. The Arcadia League is doing a splendid work under the leadership of their president, Mr. Henry Galloway. May I say here that Miss Elizabeth Murphy, of Arcadia, has been appointed acting district secretary for Ruston District since the resignation of Miss Gladys Dickenson.

Mrs. R. P. Jackson has returned to her home in New Orleans after spending five weeks with us in a series of institutes. Our State feels very much obligated to Mrs. Jackson for the wonderful way in which she contributed to the success of our institutes. Mr. Allen Carter, assistant secretary from Central Office, spent two weeks with us, and upon his return to the office writes that he is waiting for another opportunity to return to Louisiana. We are anxious to give him that opportunity, aren't we, Leaguers?

The returns from our Anniversary Day observance are coming in just fine. I wish that I could publish the list this week, but it is not yet complete. In next week's letter I will give a list of Leagues observing and the amount sent in. If your offering has not yet gone in to the State treasurer, be sure to send it in at once so that your League may be on the list.

How about your chapter on the oratorical contest? Remember that the chapter elimination is to be in April and the district elimination in May. The district winner is to be sent by the district to Mansfield Assembly. Speaking of the assembly, I am just so anxious for all of you to know of the wonderful plans in progress for the best assembly ever held. This is our tenth year anniversary, and we have a number of surprises in store for you. Won't you help us by doing your part in having every chapter in the Conference represented?

At the present time I am attending the State Sunday School Convention and am enjoying the splendid program and the large representation of Sunday school workers from every part of the State. I am sure that a full report of the convention will be sent in by our Conference Superintendent in his Sunday school news.

Well, more news next week and, by the way, haven't you some news for me concerning your local chapter? I am anxious to hear about it, so write to

Your Field Secretary,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD.

Mother!

Child's Best Laxative is "California Fig Syrup"

Hurry Mother! A teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup" now will thoroughly clean the little bowels and in a few hours you have a well, playful child again. Even if cross, feverish, bilious, constipated or full of cold, children love its pleasant taste.

Tell your druggist you want only the genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother, you must say "California." Refuse any imitation.

NEWS FROM BROAD STREET EPWORTH LEAGUE, HATTIESBURG, MISS.

The Leaguers of Broad Street Methodist Church have just finisbed a very interesting study course in Missions. The textbook used was Basil Matthews' "Young Islam on Trek." Miss Frances Harrell, superintendent of the Department of Missions, proved a most capable and interesting teacher. The study classes were held each Sunday night after a short devotional program. The League as a whole seemed to enjoy the course and derive a great benefit from the lessons.

The Broad Street League put on their Anniversary Day program at the regular Sunday evening church service on March 25. Myron Jordan, president, was leader. The talks were made by Annette Haynes, Frances Harrell, Mrs. Ray Parker, Lora Parker, and Grace Lewis. Two of the Hi Leaguers took the offering. Just before the program, the president received Estelle White as a member of the League, using the ritual in the Handbook for receiving members.

UNDEVELOPED FIELDS.

Our greatest opportunities and possibilities are in giving proper attention to the weaker charges. The strongest churches financially usually have first consideration in point of great preachers, and the poor are often neglected. I wonder why that is? The weaker charges are unable to pay sufficient salary to command the pulpit talent needed for their better development. Some of our most faithful pastors serve charges on moderate salaries. When I was a pastor I was never happier than when serving a circuit of a number of churches and full of unsaved souls. The only request I ever made of my presiding elder was for a circuit full of sinners. I never did ask for a work that would pay more money. I always believed if I did the work, "the laborer was worthy of his hire," and if I didn't do the work I was not entitled to something for nothing. Our Lord says, "For the Son of man is come to seek and save that which was lost." My chief object must be the same as his was.

Multiplied thousands of souls in rural districts and in cities are not being reached. They could easily be saved and organized into churches and Sunday schools. Our church is not giving the attention to this work that our Baptist friends are doing. That is why they are growing so rapidly. The writer has gone into communities where we had no church building, and only a few members, and the pastor without funds to go upon; but after a Holy Ghost revival a pastor's needs are always supplied. Then it is easy to raise money to build a new church house. And while the iron is hot is the finest time to secure new subscribers to the Christian Advocate.

We have fallen below the old-time scope of our mission in reaching out specifically after the unsaved. The plan of the gospel of Christ has not changed since his announcement, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor" (Luke 4:18). When we get away from the poor we get away from the plan of Christ. Our church is doing a great work along some lines, but not half what it could do if thoroughly consecrated to God and baptized afresh with the Holy Ghost. We are not specific enough in our work of developing the people in spiritual matters, upon which all else depends. The finest machinery on earth is of no use without power to run it.

Why are there hundreds of thousands unsaved at our doors? It is because we are without sufficient power to reach them. We have Methodist rules of spiritual worship in our Discipline, but we don't practice many of them. When at worship in most of our town and country churches I almost have to study at times whether I am in a Methodist church or not. Our people, preachers and all stand to pray. When we were preachers and people of great power we spent much time on our knees. It seems not to matter with some whether we work for the upbuilding of our own church and schools or those of some other denomination. Some are like the preacher of middle life, and not any too well prepared, up for admission into an Oklahoma Conference some years ago. One of the examining committee asked him how he would preach on the witness of the Spirit: "Give us an outline of about the way you would treat that subject." "Well, brethren, I hardly know just how I would preach that subject; I have never studied it much. Though at one time I might branch off this way, and at another time I might branch off some other way." Of course, he was a good brother, and wanted to be an itinerant preacher, but could not give any idea as to how he "might branch off" when it would come to preaching on the power of the Spirit. So many of our people are strangers to the real witness of the Holy Spirit.

What is a good appointment for a preacher to receive at the hands of a bishop? No doubt some would say, a well organized membership, a fine church building, a first-class parsonage, and a liberal salary of several thousand, paid monthly. Of course, that is a good charge. But the finest appointment in the writer's way of seeing things is the field that affords the largest opportunities for saving the greatest number of souls, and receiving them into the church, and training them in church and Sunday school work.

Give me plenty of unsaved material in towns, cities or country, and I will build the fine church and parsonage, and get a support. I care for the undeveloped fields. I would arrange to give time enough to several places to hold revival meetings, organize self-sustaining churches, build houses of worship, and turn them over to some live pastor, or pastor them myself until better arrangements could be made. It would not matter whether they were Protestants or not, so they could be influenced to attend our services. I have heard Catholics shout in my meetings. My name is Dave Bass. I know what I can do through Christ, who strengtheneth me. If my own church does not need this kind of work, then I am ready for calls to work under other wings. I love Methodism, and all Christian churches. A tabernacle is being prepared now for a great union meeting in Arkansas.

A Visit to MacDonnell Wesley House.

After three full days at Conference from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., with scarcely time to stretch your limbs, everybody is tired, mentally and physically; but the seventy-odd people who lined up at Carrollton church the day after Conference and boarded the three buses there in waiting soon forgot all weariness, for the fresh crisp morning air, the budding trees and blooming flowers by the roadside, and the pleasant companionship of all the delegates were like an invigorating tonic. In just two hours all drew up in front of our Mission at Houma, and there were "ohs" and "ahs" and exclamations of delighted surprise. We do not know exactly what folks were expecting to see; but what they did see was a group of the Houma Missionary Society women hospitably throwing open the doors and bidding all enter. Such spacious grounds, such comfortable buildings with every convenience, such spotless cleanliness! There is the unusual combination of order and cleanliness and yet the atmosphere all over the place of "Home." And every chick and child in the place is so proud of it. The big boys stood ready to escort the ladies everywhere. The children wanted to pick flowers for them; the girls in the dining-room and kitchen did themselves proud, and all sat down to snowy tables decorated with flowers from the garden to the most sumptuous repast one could wish for, cooked to a queen's turn. Everybody looked glad and happy. Of course Miss Ella Hooper had to be looked for, as she always effaces herself; but she is the wonderful power behind the throne. An assembly was held where all the teachers were introduced; the children came in and listened to a story; the president, Mrs. Spinks, gave a talk, and the children sang as only mission children can sing. O it was a wonderful day and we feel that a vote of thanks should be tendered Miss Hooper and her co-workers, and we also know that a goodly number of the delegates will go back to their homes filled with a desire to send supplies to the Mission at Houma, to take scholarships, and to further the work in every way because they are now better informed, and seeing what has been accomplished, they will be eager to have a part in giving the children of this vicinity a chance to become great and noble citizens, and through them the gospel news will spread and the Lamb of God will be extolled.

A LIVE AUXILIARY AT MANGHAM, LA.

Mangham Woman's Missionary Society is doing a splendid work, as our corresponding secretary's report will show. We are endeavoring to get on the Honor Roll, and each officer is trying to do everything required of her.

We are justly proud of our Children's Department, with Mrs. C. E. McConnell as superintendent, and Mrs. L. L. McConnell assistant superintendent. They are doing splendid work; but we have no Youug People's Department, as our young people are organized into a Senior League.

Our auxiliary with Mrs. W. D. Humble as president, is trying to grow ten per cent in this our Jubilee year, in finances, numbers, Voice subscribers, as well as, and above all, spiritually, as requested by our District Secretary, Mrs. John B. Pollard, of Monroe.

Report of quarter ending March 31: Number of members, 14; new members this quarter, 1; subscribers to Voice, 8; members of Mission Study class, 9; members of Bible Study class, 9.

Dues paid, $29; pledges, $9; rural work, $4; Children's Department, $5.25. Total sent Conference treasurer, $47.25. Cash sent box supplies, $7.75; amount spent on local work, $37.20. Total, $92.20.

Besides this, we sent our orphans at Ruston a box valued at $25.

RIPLEY WRITE-UPS.

Dear Advocate: A few weeks ago it was my pleasure to write some of the favorable and interesting impressions we have received since coming to Ripley. There are many more experiences just as interesting that we are having.

Our Protestant Ministers' Association met again the first Monday in this month. It is taking with the ministers of the county in a marvelous way. There were sixteen preachers present at our last meeting—seven of the Baptist church, seven of the Methodist, and two of the Presbyterian. The fellowship of the day was as fine as I have ever experienced with ministers of our own church. There are indeed common causes in all Christian bodies, and our meetings are held with these before us.

Again we had an open-air service, with ten preachers on the platform as a background. Brother T. J. Hopper, our Methodist pastor at Dumas, brought the message from God's word, which was an inspiration to all that heard him.

Our speakers' stand came near being pre-possessed by a temperance lecturer at the hour of our service. One of the preachers was present before most of us had gathered for the appointed service, and was able to keep him of the platform till after our service. He took his seat in the crowd of listeners, and just as soon as we had finished our service, he took something out of a bag that looked like a giant lizard, showed it to the crowd on the streets, yelled some announcements about it, and almost in less time than it takes to tell he had a crowd of eager curiosity hunters around him, ready to "see the show." It was a marvel how quickly he got his crowd. I wondered. People do not come that way to a gospel call. But we do not use his methods to draw the crowds, either. However, I can say as did Paul, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ."

We had a sunrise prayer service the morning of Easter Sunday. It was a wonderful inspiration. Had the weather been more pleasant so we could have held it outdoors, I believe hundreds would have attended. As it was ninety-five made their way to the church and spent an hour in worship in a way long to be remembered. Our theme was "Crusade With Christ," the same as that sponsored by the Christian Endeavor Society. Three young people brought short, inspiring messages on the subjects, "Evangelization of Youth," "Christian Citizenship," and "World Peace." The people are still talking about the inspiration of that service. At the League service that evening one boy prayed that the sunrise prayer service may become a permanent part of future Easter plans for the town. And I believe it will.

We are kept busy in the work. We are planning for a Standard Training School to be held here in June. This will be the first school of the kind held at Ripley, and we are expecting it to make a record in advancing Sunday school work through this section.

If space is given, we will have more to say again about Ripley and its people before the year is over.

E. S. LEWIS, P. E.

The necessary cutting off of native workers in Japan because of the lack of funds to pay them and the fact that some of the churches had to get along with occasional visitors from a preacher instead of having a resident pastor as heretofore, has proved so far a drawback to the work; it is yet to be seen whether or not independent initiative will be developed as a result of this.

THE DEATH OF BISHOP DICKEY.

The death of Bishop James Edward Dickey at Louisville, Ky., on Tuesday of last week, following an operation for appendicitis, brought great sorrow to the church. Bishop Dickey was sixty-four years old, having been born at Jeffersonville, Ga., on May 11, 1864: he was, therefore, still in the prime of life as years go, and his passing removes one of our vigorous chief pastors. He suffered a serious illness last year, but it was thought that he had regained his health. It is probable that the depletion of his strength at that time rendered him unable to withstand the shock of the operation that resulted in his death.

Bishop Dickey was the son of a minister, Rev. J. M. Dickey. He was educated at Emory College, where he received the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1891. He joined the North Georgia Conference the same year and served as a professor in Emory until 1899. Following the connection with Emory as a professor, he filled several of the leading appointments of his Conference, and served one year as Conference Secretary of Education. He was elected Secretary of the General Board of Education by the General Conference of 1910, but declined the office. He was elected a bishop at the General Conference of 1922.

Bishop Dickey was best known, perhaps, as a preacher. Of striking personal appearance, he had oratorical gifts of a high order, and the announcement that he was to occupy a pulpit was always sufficient to insure a large congregation; and those who heard him always felt the power of his gospel ministry. It was our privilege to hear him last summer in a stirring sermon of high evangelistic fervor in the chapel of Emory University, when he laid supreme emphasis upon the historical validity and spiritual efficacy of our religion.

Bishop Dickey was a brave, great-hearted, generous, chivalric Christian gentleman, who loved his church and his Lord and served both efficiently in the high office to which he was called. Having thus served, he has rested from his labors and has entered into his reward. Blessed are those that die in the Lord.

WEST POINT AND HOULKA.

It was a great disappointment to us last fall that we were not able to attend the sessions of the North Mississippi Conference. We made the effort to attend and actually went to Clarksdale; but our stay was very brief—just between trains; for a pernicious attack of influenza made it necessary for us to return home a few hours after arriving in the beautiful and hospitable city of Clarksdale.

In order to offset that disappointment, we determined, if possible, to attend the North Mississippi district conferences this year. So last Tuesday morning we took the fine Illinois Central train that leaves New Orleans at 8:30 o'clock, headed for West Point, where the Columbus District Conference was in session. A journey on the Illinois Central is just about as pleasant as a trip on any railroad can be; but an all-day ride without company becomes somewhat monotonous. We were very glad, therefore, to see Dr. George Crawford Swearingen, formerly a professor in Millsaps College, but for many years now one of the most successful insurance men in Mississippi, get on the train. He evidently likes good things to eat and knows where to find them, for he made a bee-line for the dining car. But after he had satisfied the longings of the inner man he came back to the Pullman, where we had pleasant converse until the train reached Durant, where we had to transfer to another line. We have sometimes wondered if there is anything in the study of Latin and Greek that especially fits a man for a business career, being led so to wonder by reason of the fact that two teachers of those subjects have, within our knowledge, proved pre-eminently well qualified for the arena of business—Dr. Paul H. Saunders and Dr. Swearingen. We have reached the conclusion that any man that can master Latin and Greek well enough to teach them can conquer the business world with one hand tied behind his back.

We arrived at Durant at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, where we had to wait an hour until the train for West Point was due to leave. We didn't see much of Durant, for the fear of getting lost kept us from wandering very far from the station; but we saw enough of its well paved streets and attractive business houses to know that Rev. S. L. Pope has a mighty fine pastorate.

Promptly at the hour appointed, the train pulled out for West Point. There wasn't anybody on the train we knew: but we struck up an acquaintance with a very gentlemanly student of the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, now in his senior year, who by his general bearing, courteous deportment, and pleasing conversation, gave us a fine impression of the school. We were especially glad to see the school so well represented by one of its students, for we happen to have two nephews attending that famous institution. There is no better way of judging a school than by its product, and the general public gets its impression largely from the deportment of students in public places. This young gentleman reflected credit upon his college.

We arrived at West Point promptly at 7:30 o'clock, the scheduled time. We had made two previous visits to West Point—one many years ago when Jim Mitchell, "Squire" Neblett, Tillery Lewis, and the writer composed a quartet that was invited to sing at a State Epworth League Conference; and the other not so long ago to attend a session of the North Mississippi Conference. We were entertained in the Clisby home on the occasion of our first visit; so we have long known the perfect hospitality of that splendid little city. If we had not known it, we should have discovered it on this trip.

We were a little late in getting to the church, but we heard most of the program of the laymen's meeting, presided over by Mr. McKinnon and addressed by Mr. Houston and Judge Foreman. It was a good enough meeting for anybody. The music by the fine choir was especially enjoyable. Mr. McKinnon turned the tables on the preachers present by exhorting them to contribute liberally when the collection was taken, reminding them that they were accustomed to hand out similar exhortations when they were in charge of the service. It put a preacher who had no smaller change than four-bits in a serious predicament!

The West Point church is a beautiful structure, well equipped with facilities for modern church work, attractive within and without. The auditorium is one of the finest we have seen, the rich draperies in the rear giving a particularly good effect. The art glass window in the front, portraying the Christ with outstretched hands (mention of which has previously been made in these columns) is tenderly attractive. A good church is one of the finest investments a congregation can make.

Rev. W. R. Lott, the pastor at West Point, was very gracious as a host of the conference, and if there was anything lacking in his arrangements for the comfort and convenience of his guests, we didn't see or hear of it. He was "on the job," as the vernacular has it; and some of his people told us he is that way all the time. We can very well believe it, for he believes in and circulates the Advocate.

The special features of the session Wednesday morning were the election of fifteen delegates to the Annual Conference, the presentation of the Grenada College endowment plan, and the sermon at 11 o'clock by Rev. H. M. Ellis. The election of delegates was completed in two ballots, the second one being taken at the afternoon session. Dr. John R. Countiss, President of Grenada College, presented the bonding proposition in just about as forcible, convincing, and effective a way as it could be presented, and the conference unanimously, by a standing vote, approved the measure. Rev. H. M. Ellis knows how to preach, as he proved at the 11 o'clock service.

In addition to the routine business of the conference and the features above mentioned, there were two other addresses of special interest—the address of Professor J. E. Stephens concerning Millsaps College, its work and the campaign to raise $650,000 for buildings and equipment, and the address of Mrs. Riley concerning the work of the Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home. The editor of the Advocate was also given a gracious hearing.

The recent deaths of Rev. J. B. Randolph, presiding elder of the Columbus District, and of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, brought a tinge of sadness to the conference, and appropriate action was taken in commemoration of their life and work as ministers. A message of brotherly sympathy was also sent to Rev. R. A. Tucker, who was unable to attend the conference on account of the slight recurrence of an illness that made a trip to Hot Springs seem advisable.

Rev. W. N. Duncan, the new presiding

THE ABUNDANT LIFE.

By Rev. Wm. L. Robinson.

In the teuth chapter and tenth verse of the gospel according to St. John we are given a reason for Christ's coming into the world. Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

Men had faith before Jesus came into the world. Abraham was a man of faith. There were others who had faith; but it was not that optimistic faith which was so characteristic of the followers of our Lord. When Jesus came iuto the world he brought with him that faith which spelled optimism. It was that faith which overcomes the world; the faith which knows no defeat; the faith before which empires fell; the faith that carries with it the message of hope.

Such was the faith of Paul and Silas as they sang in the Philippian jail. This wireless message of opitmistic faith was carried up into the very presence of God, and the power of God came down in answer to this message of faith and shook the very foundation of the prison that claimed these two servants of God. Their shackles fell off and they went on their way rejoicing as free men are wont to rejoice.

Such was the faith of the Martyr Stephen as he prayed for his enemies while he was dying. This is the faith that inspires men for the duties of life to-day.

This optimistic faith enables us to see the good in others. It enables us to have more confidence in other men. This is a virtue that we need to cultivate. If we would build successfully the kingdom of God, we must have faith in those who are working with us. A faith like this adds pleasure to our work. It makes the burden lighter.

This faith was exemplified in the experience which Jesus had with the sleepiug watchmen iu the garden of Gethsemane. Even though they could not stay awake with him aud watch for the enemy, he still had confidence in them and committed to their hands the great task of building the kingdom of God. Jesus could still trust Peter after he had denied him; and he was so interested in him that he sent him a special message after the Resurrectiou.

The abundant life suggests the idea of growth. It is a growing life. It is developing. Every life that is touched by the spirit of Jesus is made larger, richer and sweeter. When we begin to enjoy this abundant life, we become more useful and more powerful in the buildlng of God's kingdom.

The mighty oak of the forest that we admire so much did not receive its strength in a day. It had to grow. It had to develop. The great Christian characters in our midst did not become towers of strength in a day. They, too, had to go through this process of growth and development.

As we come to learn more about this abuudant life, our vision is broadened and our sympathy is broadened. We are not so much like Saul of Tarsus, but we are more like Paul the Apostle to the Gentiles. We realize that we are our brothers' keeper and we have more of the spirit of the Good Samaritan.

The abundant life also suggests the idea of freedom. There is nothing which the souls of men desire more than freedom. Men made in the image of God must have freedom. Nothing except real freedom will satisfy the longings of the human soul.

When we are enjoying this abundant life we are free from selfishness. It is not the dominating motive in our life. We begin to think more of the welfare of others. Service to others becomes our motto. We give and we give cheerfully. Such was the spirit of the widow who gave her mite. She gave all that she had. We must present our bodies a living sacrifice unto God.

We are no longer bound by tradition or custom. We do not have to do as Rome does just because we happen to be in Rome. Anybody can follow the crowd, but it takes a strong Christian character to overcome temptation.

Jesus frees us from the bondage of sin. He took our sins upon himself. He bore our shame on the cross. So Jesus has made it possible for us to overcome sin.

And we can now sing: "He saw me plunged in deep distress and flew to my relief; for me he bore the shameful cross, and carried all my grief.

THE PRESENT REVIVAL.

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

Rev. Hal S. Spragins, pastor of Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., in a recent sermon said: "I hear a great deal about the need of a revival. It seems to me that we are in the midst of a great revival." Brother Spragins is exactly right. We are in the midst of a great revival; and many of us do not know it. Alas!

Fifty years ago we preachers looked to getting the increase of our church membership from the adult life of our congregations; and we looked for the conversion of these adults in revivals, often held by professional evangelists, the pastor feeling himself somewhat less capable for this great work than was the trained evangelist. This method has prevailed until it has become almost a law.

The fact of child religion under the increase of Sunday school activities has come to be thought of not merely as a rare method of increasing the membership of our churches, but as a certain method, a scriptural method and a vastly better method.

When I was a child nobody suggested that I should join the church, and so I did not until I was sixteen years old, and then with trepidation. All of my own children have joined the church before reaching their teens; and at least one of my grandchildren under six years of age has, of her own will, taken the communion. Many of her playmates and school companious regularly do so.

Thus in this larger, better thought of to-day the children are furnishing the present and coming membership of the church. It may be a new evangelistic method, but it is a real form of revival.

I think that Christ endorses this new method of revival, for he said, Mark 10:14: "Suffer the little children to come unto me"—and we are assured that he meant little children, for he had one, at least, in his arms as he spoke; and Mark understood that he really meant little children—not big boys and girls. Matthew makes this stronger, if possible, in his eighteenth chapter from verse 1 to verse 6: the sixth verse presents a fearful warning to any who would ignore his words on this matter.

Brother Spragins is exactly right. In my time, extending over seventy years, I have never known a greater revival than that which we now see as multiplied thousands of children are crowding into our church. I am sorry for the Methodist who does not see it—he is missing a great joy.

A VISIT TO CENTENARY COLLEGE.

By Henry H. Ahrens.

During my connection for forty years with the leading newspapers of New Orleans, I have had assignments covering nearly every phase of human activity. I have "written up" institutions of all sorts and kinds after securing information for which I was compelled to dig. Nothing has ever given me more pleasure than that experienced in the past few weeks while engaged in reading the old records of Centenary College, now nearly one hundred and three years old.

Six large volumes of closely written pages record the hardships, trials and sacrifices made to keep the torch of religious education burning in the face of almost insuperable difficulties; and Centenary College stands to-day as a monument to a consecrated idea born in the minds of a few itinerant Methodist preachers. For over a century it has faithfully endeavored to carry out the aims and wishes of these early fathers of Methodism, that the youth of the land be taught that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

I have found that almost from the moment of its establishment at Jackson, La., Centenary took its place as one of the great educational institutions of the country. In 1860, the college was known throughout the land as a leader in the cause of Christian education and was used as a pattern and her standards were copied by institutions founded with an eye to the future.

I found blank pages which spoke more eloquently than the written word. The school was closed. The Civil War was on and Centenary's students answered the call to arms. Every member of the class of 1861 died on the field of battle. On October of the same year, this dramatic statement was written on a page of the ancient record: "Students have all gone to war. College suspended, and God help the right." A singular fact is that after the college opened after the war, I was unable to find a single refereuce to the conflict; but the faculty at once engaged in the heroic work of re-establishing the school, and the pages that follow read like romance.

So much for the past. What of the present? I have been on the campus of Centenary College every day for two weeks. I have met nearly every member of the faculty, and if, as it has been stated, the determinative factor of the Christian college is the faculty, then I unhesitatingly write that each member I have met is vitally interested in character education, which is Christian education.

When I speak of Christian education, I do not mean to say that I believe Centenary is stressing Christian education because it teaches the Bible and has a professor of Christian education, but I do mean to say that there is vastly more here than that. The whole education which the institution gives is permeated with a Christian spirit, and all the courses are given from the point of view of the Christian philosophy of life.

Young men have entered the college with their purpose fixed to study pre-law and medicine, or to equip themselves for other of the professions, who after several weeks and months of association with members of the faculty felt their call to preach and are to-day honored ministers of the gospel. It is my conviction that the student body to-day is no better or worse than that of the years past and gone. I am certain that the moral and religious standards are as high to-day as they ever were.

The high character of the work of the faculty along educational lines is proved by the fact that at the present time there are more than fifty students enrolled in the great universities of the United States, including our two Southern Methodist universities, University of Chicago, Tulane, Columbia, Yale and Harvard. Latest reports are to the effect that each one of these students is a credit to these higher institutions of learning and to Centenary College which started them on their educational career. Since 1921, the graduates of Centenary are representing the following professions: Twelve are ministers of the gospel; thirteen are teaching in colleges and universities; forty-four are teaching in high schools, and nine in grade schools; three are lawyers; two are college secretaries; one is a physician; six are studying medicine, and two are ministerial students. The others are engaged in useful occupations.

The original impulse of the founders of Centenary College remains perfectly clear to-day in the hearts and mind of the president and faculty, and the college is furnishing an environment in which seekers after truth are pursuing their search under the guidance of men who have come to know the truth by personal experience and who have a passion to help men find the truth which has set them free.

Centenary's past is glorious; its present successful, and so long as it adheres to its present high standards its successful future is assured.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

By R. C. Peebles, President.

The second session of the Mississippi Sunday Schooi Conference met at Court Street Methodist Church in Hattiesburg, Miss., on Aprii 11 and 12.

The first meeting in connection with this conference was a meeting of the Sunday Schooi Counciі, composed of pastors and iaymen from various churches of the Conference. This meeting was called at 2:30 p. m., Aprii 11, with Rev. John C. Chambers presiding. The meeting was conducted largely as a round tabie discussion on the Sunday school program for the Confereuce, and a numher of very heipfui recommendations were passed to he taken hefore the Sunday Schooi Counciі of the Annual Conference. One of the most important of these recommendations was the matter of providing vacation training schoois for the rural churches. Much was said with rèfereuce to the rurai prohiem and it was the consensus of opinion that our Sunday schooi prohiem is a rural probiem, and every effort shouid be made to provide the proper training for officers and teachers in our rurai churches.

The first session of the Sunday School Conference was heid at 7:30 p. m., Aprii 11, with R. C. Peehles, President of the Conference, presiding.

Even though the Woman's Missionary Society was in session in Meridian at the same time, the attendance was gratifying, and everybody present seemed to have come for the purpose of getting real inspiration and something that wouid be worth whiie to them in carrying on their Sunday schooi activities hack home. Song services was conducted hy Rev. J. L. Carter, and devotional services ied by Rev. Robert Seihy, presiding eider of the Meridian District. Rev. W. J. Ferguson, pastor-host, was introduced to speak the words of weicome. He in turn introduced the superintendent of his Sunday school, Mr. Cameron, who pleased his audience hy his humor and very unique manner in giving the welcome. After Rev. John C. Chambers introduced the visitors, Dr. A. W. Martin, of the Generai Sunday School Board, Nashviiie, Tenn., was presented for an address on the subject of "The Story of Duai-Extension." Dr. Martin explained the meaning of Duai-Extension. and hrought hefore his hearers in a most practical way the responsibility of the church in meeting the call at home and ahroad for service in the undeveioped territory.

From 9 to 11 a. m., Aprii 12, sectionai meetings were heid, with Dr. A. W. Martin leading the group on Administration; Dr. J. E. Stephens, professor of Reiigious Education of Miiisaps Coiiege, ieading the group in aduit work; Mrs. F. L. Van Alstine, superintendent of adolescent work, leading the group in the adoiescent section; Miss Maggie M. Jones, assisted by Mrs. R. H. Harper, Eiementary Superintendent Louisiana Conference, ieading the group in eiementary work.

At 11 o'ciock the second generai session was heid in the maln auditorium. The song service was ied hy Rev. J. L. Carter, the devotionai hy Dr. J. E. Stephens. The main feature of this meeting was the address on "Evangeiism and Service," by Dr. A. W. Martin. He gave a most interesting, practicai discussion of this subject and emphasized the eiement of evangelism in home training, and the tone of his message was for a practicai, iiving Christianity. He placed great importance on parental responsibiiity. He inspired thought aiong practicai lines and, no douht, every one profited by this most exceiient address.

The third session was heid at 2 p. m., April 12, which was a grand raiiy of aii workers. Rev. J. L. Seiis, presiding eider of the Seashore District, conducted the devotions, after which the president called for reports from the various committees and the leaders of the various sectionai group meetings. Very interesting and enthusiastic reports were given, showing a good attendance in each group meeting. Each group was thoroughiy organized for next year and definite plans made for more effective work. At this meeting, Rev. B. F. Lewis, of the Orphans' Home, was called upon for a short taik, and in a few words gave a most impressive discussion of the work being accompiished in the Orphanage at Jackson.

The finai session of the Conference was heid at 7:30 p. m., Aprii 12, with Rev. H. A. Gatiin, presiding eider of the Newton District, conductiug devotions. The matter of a piace for the Conference to meet next year was ieft to the Executive Committee, and a meeting piace wiii be decided upon hefore the Annual Conference. The committee on nominations reported, uominating V. D. Youngbiood, of Brookhaven, for president; R. M. Langford, of Meridian, for vice president, and Mrs. F. L. Van Alstine for secretary. These nominations were eiected by unanimous vote. The principai feature of the finai session was the address by Dr. J. E. Stephens on "The Church Serving Youth." Dr. Stephens told of statisticai information that he had been abie to gather, with the assistance of his students, in the city of Jackson. He stated that a survey had heen made of the churches and church life in the city of Jackson which revealed some very interesting facts. He spoke of the need of the proper kind of church huiidings and proper equipment for educaaional work in our churches. He said that in the building plans, we have woefuiiy negiected the youth, and as a consequence, we are miserahiy faiiing in our efforts to give effectlve training in our Sunday schools. He said that every church of the iarger community shouid have an educationai director who couid give at ieast two hours each week to instruction in reiigious education. He said that statistics show, from his investigation, that only seventeen minutes are given to actual study or discussion every Sunday morning at the Sunday school hour. His message was received with greatest interest, and aii were of the opinion that he sounded the keynote of the need of the churches with reference to their Sunday schools.

This Conference was interesting from start to finish. Much constructive work was accompiished. Rev. John C. Chamhers, Conference Superintendent of Sunday Schoois, was gratified at the response on the part of preachers and iaymen, and he predicts that this year will be a year of progress throughout the Conference in Sunday school work. A numher of Cokesbury Training Schools have already been heid and quite a number are scheduied for summer and faii.

OVER FORTY-EIGHT YEARS IN THE MINISTRY.

Sometime ago an artlcle was pubiished iu the New Orieans Christian Advocate giving a summary of my first year in the Louisiana Conference. I wiii now give a synopsis of my entire work as a pastor of over forty years, giving the names of the different charges that I have served, and aiso the numher of names of the preaching piaces on each charge. The names of some o the charges have been changed since I served them, but I wiii give them as they were at the time I served them.

As Sugar Town was my first charge, I wiii begin with the Sugar Town circuit, which was composed of six preaching piaces, nameiy, Sugar Creek, Dry Creek, Barnes Creek, Soap Stone, Hope Weii, and Pearson's Chapel. I served this charge two years and suceeded in getting a parsonage buiit at Sugar Town the second year.

I was sent from this charge to the Many circuit, in Sabine Parish, where I served four years. Two years of the four the Many circuit was combined with the Sabine circuit. The two years they were combined, I had ten preaching piaces, which were as foiiows: Many, New Hope, Prospect, Coiumbus, Negreet, Rocky Mount, Bayou Scie, Red Land, Coid Springs, and Mission Chapei. The two years they were combined I had assistant preachers to help me, both of whom were older than myself.

After the charges were divided, I had charge of the Sabine circuit. I was sent from this charge to the Provencai Mission, in Natchitoches Parish. Here I had five preaching piaces, namely: Provencai, Victoria Saw Miii, Bayou Biue, Pine Grove, and Oak Grove.

I was sent from this charge to the De Soto circuit, in De Soto Parish, which is now caiied Peiican circuit. This charge was composed of five preaching piaces, nameiy: Peiican, Bethei, Philip's Chapei, Ebenezer and Wood Side. Here I served four years. i was sent from this charge to the North Bossier circuit, in Bossier Pariah, which is now caiied Piain Dealing circuit. This charge had five preaching piaces, namely: Plain Dealing, Concord, Waiker's Chapel, Benton, and Hughes Spur.

I was sent from this charge to the South Bossier circuit, also in Bossier Parish. This charge is now caiied Haughton circuit. Here I had four preaching piaces: Haughton, Fiiimore, Allen Town Saw Miil, and Doyiine. From this charge I was sent to the Grand Cane circuit, which was composed of the following preaching places: Grand Cane, Stonewaii, and Friendship, which church iater was moved to Keithviiie.

From this charge I was sent to the Lanesville circuit, in Webster Parish. This charge is now caiied Sihiey circuit. This charge had five preaching places: Sibiey, Brush Wood, Mount Zion, Pine Grove, and Mims' School House. From this charge I was sent to the Jonesboro circuit, in Jackson Parish. Here I had four preaching places: Joneshoro, Hodge, Wyatt, and Dodson. From this charge I was sent to Winnfieid, which was made a station the year that I served it. From here i was sent to the Keatchie circuit. Here I had four preaching piaces: Keatchie, Beii Bower, Longstreet, and Logansport.

From this charge I was sent to the Pieasant Hill circuit. Here I had four preachiug piaces: Pleasant Hiii, Wiiiiams' Chapel, Marthaviiie, and Robeline. I was sent from this charge to Texas Avenue, in Shreveport. On account of famiiy affliction, at my request I was sent from here to the Grand Cane Mission. I owned a home at that time in the town of Grand Cane. Here I iived two years in my own home. This charge had four preaching piaces: Bethei, Ehenezer, Sioan, and Benson, and part of the time I had South Mansfield. My father died in 1912, whiie I was serving this charge.

From here I was sent to the Bayou Lachute circuit, composed of three preaching piaces: Bayou Lachute, Tayior Town, and Atkins. I served this charge from Shreveport. Whiie serving this charge, my wife died, 1913. From here i was sent to Vivian, which had oniy two preaching piaces, Vivian and Trees City. In 1917, I did not serve any charge. In 1918, I was sent to the Elmore circuit, which is now called Ciay circuit. Here i had five preaching piaces: Wesley Chapel, New Prospect, Long Straw, Vienna, and Ciay. I was sent from here to the Simshoro circuit, where I had four preaching piaces: Simsboro, Antioch, Hiiiy, and Salem.

I served most of these charges from two to four years each. Oniy five charges were served one year each. The good Lord has been wonderfully good to me in giving me good health most of my ministerial life and in giving me the presence and power of his Hoiy Spirit in preaching the gospel. During the years that I served as pastor many precious souis were saved and added to the church and some nobie and intelligent young men were saved and caiied to preach the gospei, and are now serving important charges in other States.

For the last two years I have been assisting the brethren in revivai meetings and filing appointments for them when they were sick or had to be away from home. Any time that I can be of any service to the hrethren I wiii be giad to render any assistance that I can. H. J. BOLTZ.

From every section of the Church come tidings of quota balances being secured 100 per cent. Will you permit your Charge to fail?

Suppose these thirteen men, superannuated after having served the Church to the point of old age and physical infirmity, should be left to sustain themselves without aid from the Church. Through the years they learned to do "one thing"—preach. The Church says they are now too old for that. What can they do?

Shall they sell books, write insurance, or attempt something else of that character? How far would they get with it in these days of strenuous competition which call for red-blooded and strenuous youth? They would not even get started.

Some Superannuates of the North Mississippi Conference—1927.

Could they work on the farm, railroad, in the factory, or in any other place requiring physical stamina? Alas, many of our Superannuates are forced to try such things only to collapse under the strain. That the Church permits this, is greatly to her shame and dishonor.

No, these grand old men are the Church's disabled heroes on her field of conquest. She owes them not only tender solicitude and praise for their valiant deeds, but enough besides to permit them to spend their last days in some degree of comfort.

The success of a team doing anything depends upon every player doing his part. Our Clean-Up Campaign is Southern Methodism as a "team" striving for quota balances.

Hospital Week May 13-20—Our Bishops

Urge Church-Wide Golden Cross Enrollment.

"The Golden Cross."

Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Many Methodists seem slow to understand the nature and work of the "Golden Cross Society."

Strictly speaking, it is not a society at all, but it is an annual enrollment of all who desire to aid needy and suffering humanity. It is somewhat analagous in its method to the "Red Cross Society," and it ought to have no less enthusiastic support than does that great System of Enrolment. The funds raised by the "Golden Cross Society" are really for the relief of poor people, who are sick or wounded, and, who cannot provide for their own treatment.

It is to be hoped that our people, especially our preachers, will read the paragraphs of the Discipline of 1926 from 530 to 544, found on pages 256, 257, 258, and 259. If these paragraphs are read, the work of the "Golden Cross Society"' will be greatly promoted; for its appeal is most pathetic and potent.

"The Golden Cross."

Bishop Collins Denny.

Our Golden Cross work is greatly needed, and is a most serviceable work. An average of even a few cents yearly from each of our members would supply this need, but all know that not the average man but the extraordinary man does his duty. Those ready to help in a truly Christian spirit can make no better investment than to join the Golden Cross, and thus by a small investment reap a large return.

"The Golden Cross Society."

Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is now committed to a definite program of hospital work. Methodism is definitely connectional. Our hospitals are not local institutions only, but enterprises of the entire church.

The Golden Cross Society, authorized by the General Conference, aims to secure the personal interest of our people in the cause of hospitals and to aid in their support. I sincerely trust that our people generally will realize the importance and significance of this undertaking. The annual enrollment fee of $1 is in itself a very small item, but the interest indicated by the fact of enrollment is a great matter; and if the Golden Cross Society enrollment should become general throughout the church, it is easy to see that the amount of money available thereby would be of great service to the hospital cause.

"The Golden Cross."

Bishop W. F. McMurry.

It would be a happy thing if our people everywhere would get interested in the Golden Cross Society of the church. Those of us who have even slight connection with the hospitals know full well the need of funds in connection with the ministrations to the worthy poor. One dollar a year is a small amount, and if our people generally would make this small contribution, great relief would come to the hospitals and great blessings to the people. I cordially commend it. Join the "Golden Cross Society."

"The Golden Cross."

Bishop H. M. DuBose.

The "Golden Cross" fellowship has appealed to a moderately comforting number of people in our church; but it should successfully challenge the body of our Methodism from one side the continent to the other. Next to the evangelistic call, the gospel of the blessed God, sent forth to human soul redemption, is the gospel directed to the healing of the suffering bodies of men. These walked side by side in the Galilean days of the Son of Man. Our spiritual appeal will he but half-hearted if this call to minister to human sickness be neglected.

"The Golden Cross."

Bishop W. B. Beauchamp.

Our denomination was somewhat late in beginning a real hospital program. The Commission of our Lord to his disciples and followers includes the healing function. The church cannot afford to overlook the appeal which the human kind makes to us to help them in their days of suffering. No other service has a finer Christian appeal than caring for those, who because of their sickness, have a special claim upon the church. The Golden Cross gives every member of our church an opportunity to help in this great service. The need is so apparent and so urgent that it ought to stir our people to complete co-operation.

"The Golden Cross."

Bishop James E. Dickey.

The "Golden Cross Society" was founded for a benevolent purpose, that of ministering, through our hospitals, to those who are not financially able to secure such ministry. This action is in keeping with our Lord's command: "Heal the sick, cleanse the leper, raise the dead, cast out devils, freely ye have received, freely give."

The "Golden Cross Society," a servant of the Great Physician, and in his name, makes an appeal to all who sympathize with suffering.

The Ministry of Healing.

Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs.

One of the most significant and gratifying movements in the progress of the church to-day is the increasing interest in the great hospital program which commends itself to nearly three million Southern Methodists.

When we become concerned about the souls of men we also take a very practical interest in the welfare of their bodies. We never approach more nearly the method and the ministry of the Great Physician than when we are engaged in relieving the sufferings of our fellow-men.

"The Golden Cross."

Bishop H. A. Boaz.

Man is material and spiritual—body and soul. Jesus ministered to both, healing body and soul. The church must minister to both soul and body.

Our Hospital Board is set to lead us in this worthy cause. Through the "Golden Cross" an opportunity is given every member to have a part.

For What Are Golden Cross Funds Used?

The funds of the "Golden Cross" Enrollment are primarily for charity. In Conferences owning or having part ownership in a hospital 100 per cent of the money goes for charity work in that institution.

In most of the Conferences which do not own hospitals 80 per cent of the funds have been directed by the action of their own Annual Conferences to support the charity work of the one connectional hospital the church owns, the Methodist Hospital and Sanitorium at Tucson, Arizona, which is our hospital for tubercular patients. The remaining 20 per cent is appropriated to the promotion of the Golden Cross and hospital work throughout the church. Yast year Southern Methodist hospitals gave more than $300,000 in service to charity. The Golden Cross bore a part of this burden. In all Conferences all the funds should be remitted to the Annual Conference treasurer.

Enrollment week embraces the second and third Sundays in May.

Associate Secretary and Treasurer, General Hospital Board.

TONGUE TWISTERS.

A few of the old-fashioned tongue twisters are simple and very valuable in obtaining facility with the organs of speech. These may also be printed on cards.

1. Six slim, slick saplings.
2. She sells sea shells; do you sell sea shells?
3. Around the rugged rocks the ragged rascals ran.
4. A cup of coffee in a copper coffee pot.
5. Some shun sunshine, some shun shade.
6. Amidst the mists and coldest frosts.
   With barest wrists and stoutest boasts.
   He thrusts his fists against the posts.
   And still insists he sees the ghost.

THE MAGIC GOOSE QUILL.

By Caroline Young.

Long, long ago, in a far distant land, a group of boys, freed from school discipline for a little while, amused themselves by looking at the oddly written, brightly colored books in the scanty library of the school.

"Here, boys, look! This is a book of old tales and legends relating to our very own country!" The speaker was a bright lad named Blandel.

Immediately the other boys gathered about and stood looking at the illustrations in the book as Blandel read aloud some of the old tales chronicled therein.

By far the most fascinating of the legends, in Blandel's opinion, was the story of the gray goose with silver-tipped feathers that furnished quills for Tristholm, a famous writer, to set down the thoughts that came into his mind. The legend related that Tristholm had tamed the goose, and could use nothing for writing save quills from the wings of the beautiful bird. There must have been magic in the great feathers, for one day the goose flew away from its master, and Tristholm could never write anything so good as before.

Blandel closed the book after reading the story of the gray goose, and looked at his classmates with an expression of rapt wonder. "Only think, boys, if one of us should find a quill from the great Tristholm's goose!"

"Ha! Ha!" laughed one of the boys. "Think you, Blandel, that the silver-tipped goose of Tristholm still lives? It would have to be a much longer-lived bird than the raven, if that were the case."

"But you forget that it is a bird of magic, and as such it may be flying not far away, even now."

Blandel used to watch the sky, trying to discover the gray goose of Tristholm winging through the air.

One day the boy was out on the green, gazing dreamily toward the sunset. "Oh, that I were a poet!" he cried to himself. "I should describe yonder sunset with words that would glow forth from the page, and make it seem as beautiful as though an artist had painted it with skillful brush."

As he spoke thus, a lone bird came between him and the sunset. It flew upward, and circled slowly about, and while Blandel watched it eagerly, a feather floated gently down and dropped at his very feet. It was gray, tipped with silver—a quill from a goose's wing.

Blandel could scarcely believe his eyes. He stooped and touched the quill softly. It was real, and he felt sure that at last he had gained his desire. He hastened home with his treasure and sharpened it into a pen. This done, he sat down to write, confident that musical rhymes and eloquent phrases would flow from the pen.

He meant to write a beautiful poem, but somehow the pen did not work as well as he had supposed it would. Try as he might, his poem did not sound as if it had been written with a magic pen.

Blandel was about to give up in bitter disappointment when the thought came to him that it would probably take some time to learn how to use the pen.

"Perhaps I must practice a great deal before I am able to draw the magic out—for I know that it is a quill from the magic goose. I will try and try, until I can master the power that it holds."

Thus it was that Blandel wrote many beautiful poems, some of them very beautiful indeed. The years rolled by, and he forgot all about the silver-tipped goose, for he had never found another magic quill. He became an old man, and still he wrote charming songs and verses, and people traveled great distances to see and talk with him.

Blandel was very fond of children. One day a boy knocked at his door and began talking eagerly to Baindel.

"Sir, I wish to ask you what you think of the legend of the gray goose of Tristholm. I read it yesterday in an old, old book which the schoolmaster lent to me."

"The gray goose of Tristholm!" repeated Blandel with a smile. "Ah, yes; I know the story. 'Tis a charming bit of fancy."

The boy seemed greatly disappointed. He drew from his pocket a gray quill, tipped with silver, which had fallen from the wing of a lone bird. He confided to Blandel that he had hoped the quill was from Tristholm's goose, and that it possessed magic virtues, for he was anxious to become a great writer.

Blandel took the gray quilt in his hand and smothered it with caressing touch.

"My dear boy," said the great man, "sharpen this quill and use it. Who can tell until you have exhausted its possibilities whether or not it is of unusual power?"

The boy departed hopefully, and Blandel said to himself in a thoughtful tone: "After all, even though his quill may not be from the gray goose of Tristholm, me thinks it is but a poor pen which possesses no magic."—Boy's Weekly.

A TREE STORY.

(In this story there are named thirty-five products of the forest, or objects constructed largely of forest products. Sometimes the name is formed by putting together the last part of one word and the first part of the next. Those contesting should be given unmarked copies of the story, and asked to underline as many names as they can find. The one who gets the most wins.)

Tom and Jimmy had just come to Grandma's that day. It was in the real country, and everything was great. In the afternoon they decided to go hunting. They had to have something to shoot, so they took down Grandpa's old gun. The gun-stock was worn, but they didn't mind that.

Soon they came to the big woods. The floor of the forest was covered with leaves. The trees were tall and straight. "Wouldn't those trees make good telegraph poles?" said Tom.

"Or masts for a ship," said Jimmy.

Old Towser, the dog, was weaving in and out among the trees like a shuttle, and finally jumped a rabbit. Tom didn't shoot.

"Just stand there and watch him while he staves off!" said Jimmy. "He handles a gun like he'd never held anything but toys in his hands!" muttered the disgusted Jimmy.

They kept following Towser and soon were lost. "Why, it's nearly night!" said Tom. "I see a star."

"I'm hungry," whimpered Jimmy. "Next time I go hunting I'll take a basket of eats."

"Makes me think of all the boxes and crates of food we saw at the station to-day," said Tom, hungrily.

"If I had some paper, I'd drop bits, so we'd know if we were going in a circle," said Tom. "I'll feel for the moss on this tree, and find the North. It's a pine; my hands are sticky with resin."

"I'm cold," said Jimmy. "I'm going to pick up some wood to make a fire."

Tom was fishing in his pockets. He pulled out a pencil, two spools, some tooth-picks, and finally, three matches.

Jimmy had hurt his finger. "Never mind!" said Tom, "when Grandma ties it up with turpentine it will be all right."

"But we ain't there!" wailed Jimmy. "And listen to the wind—ow—so creepy it goes!"

"Well, the moon's up now, maybe we can find our way," said Tom. "Our fire's out, anyway; nothin' but charcoal left." So they started out again.

"Oh, for a bed!" sniffled Jimmy.

"Or Grandma's chair!" sighed Tom.

Suddenly Tom stopped. "Say, what's this? Feels like a fence. Yes, here's a post and planks. We must be nearly there. Gee, I see the big pine! Oil up your joints and move along! We are right back of Grandma's. There's the stable."

"And here's the house—we're at the back door. I'll knock. Nobody home!"

"Grandma!"

"Yes, there is—she's coming. Hooray!"

Then Tom whispered. "Let's string 'er along, and never let on we've been lost."

"You bet!" agreed Jimmy.—Caroline Dormon.

"TIME OUT."

A colored agent was summoned before the insurance commissioner.

"Don't you know," said the commissioner, "that you can't sell life insurance without a State license?"

"Boss," said the darky, "you suah said a mouthful. I knowed I couldn't sell it, but Ah didn't know the reason."—Exchange.

"Why don't you bob your hair," asked a friend one day.

"I can't decide on the style," answered Miss Cayenne. "I don't know whether to have it look like a whiskbroom or a feather duster."—Exchange.

Two fishermen were angling in a river when one suddenly dropped his rod.

"Say!" he ejaculated, "did you see that feller fall off that cliff over there into the river?"

"Don't get excited, Bill," soothed the other. "Mebbe it was a movie actor makin' pictures."

"But, my stars! How kin we tell?"

"Well," counseled the judicious one, "if he drowns, he ain't."—Exchange.

Advocating an effort to check the steady progress of Protestantism in Flanders, the leading Flemish Roman Catholic newspaper, "De Standard," recently printed the following suggestions for members of the Roman Catholic Church throughout the land: "We must give more care to religious teaching; we must by special Bible studies carefully explain the New Testament; we must have special religious meetings for the children as the Protestants have and teach them beautiful religious songs, which we sadly lack, although we must confess that the Protestants have them; we should all learn to sing such beautiful prayers as the Protestant one, 'Nearer, My God, to Thee;' and above all we must intensify our Christian living so that we may preach by our personal example." No greater testimony to Protestantism has ever been given before in Belgium!

WEST POINT AND HOULKA.

elder, is new in official position only—in performing the duties of his office he is as adept as if he had been at the work all his life. The secretarial duties were admirably performed by Rev. V. C. Curtis and his assistant, Rev. W. M. Langley. The secretary will furnish an official report of the proceedings.

The women of the church served a lunch "that was a lunch" the day we were there; and we heard the brethren talking about the one that was served the day before. It was good to the use of tickling the palate and satisfying hunger.

From West Point, we went to Houlka, to attend the Aberdeen District Conference. We were not quite sure how we would get to Houlka until we found that Dr. Countiss was going to drive over in his car—and our problem was solved. Other passengers were Professor Stephens and Mrs. Riley. It was a wonderfully enjoyable trip, without mishap of any kind. We arrived at Houlka about 5 o'clock in the afternoon and went at once to the parsonage, where the pastor, Rev. W. C. Newman, and his charming young wife were dispensing hospitality and directing the arriving delegates and visitors to their homes for the night. Professor Stephens and the editor of the Advcoate were fortunate to be assigned to the home of General and Mrs. W. H. Griffin for lodging, and to the home of their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Griffin, for meals. We could not have received a more delightful hospitality.

The first thing we saw about the beautiful little church at Houlka that especially attracted our attention was the artistically correct signboard giving the name of the church and of the pastor, and the proper announcement of the evening service. Churches ought to have signboards. Many a time we have passed a church in a strange place and wondered what denomination it belonged to. We believe people like to know such things. We don't know what the board cost—but it is worth whatever it cost. It is simply one of many indications we saw that Brother Newman is a wide-awake preacher.

Rev. W. L. Pearson was announced as the preacher of the evening; but through some misunderstanding he did not get the news in time to be there. In his absence, Professor Stephens was pressed into service. He must have a head full of good sermons; certainly, without more than a moment's previous notice, he preached one worthy of the occasion. We think it came out of his heart as well as his head.

The conference opened promptly at 8:30 o'clock Thursday morning. The presiding elder, Rev. E. Nash Broyles, was on hand with everything ready, as far as he could make it so, as is the habit of all good presiding elders. After the devotional exercises in connection with the communion service, in which the presiding elder was assisted by Brother Young and Brother Shaw, the conference was organized by the election of Brother Pearson as secretary, and the business was promptly taken up. Brother Broyles very graciously gave the editor of the Advocate "first shot," and didn't exhort him either publicly or privately to "cut it short." He did not even suggest that the elder might be straightened for time. It would have been a shame for even an editor to take advantage of such generosity, so he spoke only six or eight minutes. Short speeches may not be worth much—but long ones are not, either. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

Mrs. Riley was given opportunity to make her effective presentation of the work of the Orphans' Home—and she does it capitally—and Dr. Countiss was invited to discuss the Grenada College endowment proposition. After his clear, straightforward, business-like statement, the vote was taken, and, as was the case at West Point, it was unanimously in favor of the plan. It is very evident to us that the North Mississippi Methodists have made up their minds to make Grenada College an A-grade college for women; and, in our opinion, they have never determined to do a finer thing. It is already an A-grade in everything but endowment; and if the other districts take the same position as the Columbus and the Aberdeen, that will soon be provided.

At 11 o'clock, Rev. C. A. Parks preached. His sermon was thoughtful, spiritual, heart-searching; and it was well delivered, which is no small part of a good sermon. The congregation was in a mellow spirit at the close of the service.

Brother Newman adopted a unique way to make hosts and guests acquainted: He read the names of the guests and then of the host, and asked each to rise as his name was called. In this way, everybody had a chance to find out "who's who." We thought it a fine method for a comparatively small assembly.

We greatly regretted the necessity for having to leave before the afternoon session—but the necessity was not so great as to take us away before lunch, which was served on the beautiful lawn of a near-by home. Again it was "some lunch"—all the good things to eat imaginable piled up in prodigious quantities on long tables and served in cafeteria style. It was good to be there.

Mrs. Riley and Professor Stephens forsook us at Houlka, deciding to return to their homes another way; but the editor availed himself of the privilege of driving to Grenada with Dr. Countiss, having as a fellow-passenger Rev. L. P. Wasson. We arrived at Grenada about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, where we had the privilege of a few moments' conversation with Rev. E. S. Lewis and Rev. J. H. Holder; then supper with Dr. Countiss and his gracious wife, charming daughter at home on a visit from New York, and her beautiful little daughter. Followed a delightful evening in spite of a downpour of rain; then to the train, and back in New Orleans early Friday morning. So to the office and a vast accumulation of work.

Rev. J. G. Sneiling, superintendent of the Memorial Home for Young Women, authorizes the Advocate to announce that Rev. T. H. Mills is in the employe of the Home, and that any courtesies shown him in that work will be appreciated.

We are glad to report that Rev. W. W. Graves, of Columbia, Miss., who recentiy underwent a delicate surgical operation at Touro Infirmary, this city, is able to be about. He paid a greatly appreciated visit to the Advocate office on Saturday of last week.

The Philharmonic Society of Jennings, La., composed of forty voices, rendered the cantata "Victory," at the Broad Street Methodist Church Lake Charles, La., on last Sunday night. This organization is one of the best known musical organizations of the State.

President Charles C. Selecman began the sixth year of his administration of Southern Methodist University on April 2. The university has made great progress during his administration, and suitable notice was taken of the significant event by the friends of the institution.

The following improvements are to be provided through the Millsaps College $650,000 campaign: Science building, $150,000; Gymnasium and stadium, $125,000; Dormitories for men (two) $175,000; Dormitory for women, $100,000; Central heating plant, $75,000; General improvements $25,000.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, Mississippi Conference evangelist, is now open for dates to assist the brethren in meetings, since Rev. C. C. Evans is now able to do full work at Centenary, McComb. Brother Griffin rendered efficient service at Centenary during the illness of Brother Evans. His address is Summit, Miss.

The new brick church at Summit, Miss., will soon be ready for the roof. The building will cost over $11,500. The pastor, Rev. H. L. Norton, and his people are rejoicing over the consummation of their plans for a modern church building. They are using the public school building during the erection of the church.

A class of five pupils from the Sunday school was received into the Methodist church at Kosciusko, Miss., on Easter Sunday, Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor. On Sunday, April 15, Mrs. Neblett gave a message to the church from the recent meeting of the Woman's Missionary Council, held at Nashville.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Abels, of Ponchatoula, La., were in the city last week, bringing a beautiful bouquet of Ponchatoula roses for Mrs. L. I. McCain, who recently underwent an operation at the Baptist Hospital. They were disappointed in not seeing Mrs. McCain, but glad to know that she was able to leave the hospital.

Rev. H. W. Jordan, our pastor at Covington, La., has been attending the Pastors' School at Vanderbilt University. He has just returned home, and asks that those who expect to attend the New Orleans District Confrence in Covington this week notify him immediately, in order that he may arrange for a suitable entertainment.

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of San Bernardino, Calif., is holding a tent meeting at Rayville, La., this week, where Rev. J. A. Alford is pastor. Brother Townsley was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference and pastor at Rayville. We dare say he is glad to set foot on Louisiana soil again—as his many friends are glad to have him do.

The school of missions held in the Minden, La., Methodist church this year was larger than that of last year—and the one last year was the largest in the Conference. Instead of raising the mission special quota of $475, the Minden church is carrying a home special and a foreign special amounting to three times the amount of the quota. Rev. Leon I. McCain is the pastor.

A report from Dr. Harvey Cushing, of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, Boston, Mass., to which Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Royal, of Natalbany, La., took their little child for treatment, is not very encouraging. He states, however, that everything possible will be done. Their brethren and friends will remember Brother and Sister Royal in their prayers in this time of anxiety.

Rev. J. Ernest Rattenbury, distinguished Wesleyan minister of Southport, England, will deliver the seventh series of Quillian lectures at Emory University, April 29 through May 3, on the general subject, "The Permanent Values of John Wesley." He will speak from the pulpit used by John Wesley in preaching to the miners of Wales, which was presented to Emory several years ago by L. B. Robeson, of the class of 1886.

Rev. Del Longgrear, of Mendenhall, Miss., writes: "We have recently closed a good meeting at Mendenhall. Rev. John W. Robertson, of Steele, Mo., North Mississippi Conference evangelist, did the preaching. His sermons were universally pronounced the best ever preached in a revival here, and the entire community was stirred. The meeting grew into a community revival, with all the churches co-operating. It resulted in a stirring and quickening of the religious and spiritual life of the town and surrounding country. The public schools and the agricultural high schools dismissed their entire student bodies and attended en masse each day. Eleven new members came to our church and several went to other churches. Brother Robertson is now engaged in a meeting at East Prairie, Mo."

The Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, will observe a schedule of special days, as follows: Sunday, April 29, baptism of children; Sunday, May 6, reception of children's class, with welcome from church officials; communion service; Sunday, May 13, Mothers' Day, Cradle Roll day, and opportunity for infant baptism; Sunday, May 20, Sunday School Day, with pageant and offering. The outlook at Carrollton is always bright. The Mothers' Club will soon begin a study in child psychology, led by Mrs. R. S. Crichlow, and the Wednesday evening prayer meetings will study for awhile, "What Every Methodist Should Know." All records were broken on Easter Sunday, with 380 at Sunday school and 418 at the morning service. Not the least of the good things of this church is an Advocate club of 126. Rev. H. L. Johns is the pastor.

The commencement exercises of the seventieth year of Whitworth College will be May 20, 21, 22, 1928. Besides several who are candidates for special diplomas and certificates, there are forty-seven who are candidates in the regular literary course for the degree of Associate in Arts. The commencemeut sermon will be preached by Rev. T. M. Brownlee, pastor of the Capitol Street Methodist Church at Jackson, Miss.; and the baccalaureate address Tuesday morning will be delivered by Rev. I. F. Hawkins, presiding elder of the Huntsville District, North Alabama Conference. Preceding the commencement proper, several gradnating recitals and other events will occur. The annual exhibition of the Physical Education Department will be giveu on the East campus at 6 p. m., April 30. The annual exhibitions of both the Home Economics and the Art Department will be given from 4 to 6 p. m., May 8.

A REQUEST BY TREASURER, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Dear Dr. Carley: I have a letter from J. F. Rawls, Treasurer, General Board of Missions, calling attention to the meeting of that Board, May 8 and 9. He asks for a full report of all funds on hand in time to be included in his report to the Board.

Over 40 per cent of the charges have as yet made no remittance on the special collection for missionary maintenance, and included in these are some of the larger churches of the Conference.

It is possible that some treasurers and pastors are holding the funds until the collection has been completed.

In order that our Conference may make a good showing at the annual meeting, please urge all such to remit at once the funds on hand so that I may get them to Mr. Rawls in time to be reported.

J. H. CARTER,
Treasurer, Louisiana Conference Board of Missions. Correct address: Room 615, Union Indemnity Building, New Orleans, La.

ADDITIONAL CLUBS.

Since the previous report, the following clubs have been received:

North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. W. C. Beasley, Buena Vista, 20.
Rev. A. W. Bailey, Sallis, 20.

Louisiana Conference.

E. L. Gill and A. S. Ford, Homer, 73.
Rev. J. S. Rutledge, Greensburg, 20.

We thank these brethren for their efforts in behalf to the Conference organ. The club offer expires on May 1. We trust that many others will send in clubs before the expiration of the offer. The club rates are lower than can possibly be provided on any other plan, and they ought to result in the addition of several thousand subscriptions to the Advocate list. The time is short—but much can still be done. We hope for the best.

IMPORTANT NOTICE CONCERNING SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

My Dear Doctor Carley: Please announce in the Advocate that it has been found necessary to change the date for closing Seashore Pastors' School and Seashore Divinity School to Friday night, June 29, so that the session will extend from the service at 8 p. m. Tuesday, June 19, through the service at the same hour on June 29, 1928.

This allows a ten days' session and takes preachers from their pulpits but one Sunday.

Detailed information will be sent each preacher in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana in a few days.

JENKINS C. BOWMAN died at his home in Lexington, Miss., Saturday, April 14, 1928. He was a son of John W. and Mary E. Bowman, and was born in Yazoo County, Jan. 28, 1875. His walk and conversation in life was an exemplification of the attributes of a pure and true Christian. He was self-denying and self-sacrificing, when by doing so it served in a measure to alleviate the wants, or added to the comfort and happiness of those less fortunate than himself. He was sincere, true, and steadfast in his friendships. He was kind, hospitable, amiable and generous. He spoke no evil of any one, and his hand and heart were ever ready to do a good act toward all in need or want. In early life he became a member of the Methodist church, and ever lived as a consistent Christian. For some months before his death he was in ill health, but bore his affliction and sufferings without a murmur, realizing, as he did fully, that God, in his infinite wisdom, doeth all things well. Surrounded by his loved ones, his gentle spirit winged its flight to that realm where there is no more pain, no more sorrow, and no more death. By the fountain of living waters, and under the shade of the tree of Eternal life, may his soul forever rest. He was a man who earned this, the greatest tribute which can be paid man: "He so lived that the world was better for his having passed through it."

C. S. BOWMAN.

On Feb. 13, 1928, the spirit of little JAMES EDWARD RONE, the son of Mr. H. V. Rone, was called from this world to that better home which Christ had prepared for him in the mansions above. He was born May 2, 1923, which made him at the time of his death 4 years, 9 months and 11 days of age. It is hard for the human heart to understaud the going of such a promising child, but we cannot afford to question the why of those processes at whose head is our gracious Heaveuly Father, who knows all things aud who is able to strengthen us in hours of such great grief. The little body was put to rest in Tabernacle cemetery in the presence of friends and relatives, who shared the burden with the heart-broken parents. The services were conducted by Rev. J. W. Gibson, his pastor. May we all live for Christ, that in the afterwhile we may meet James Edward in the world above.

JAS. W. GIBSON.

On March 19, 1928, the spirit of MARIELLA KING HUTCHISON took its flight from this world to the great beyond. She was in a hospital in the city of Memphis, her home city, at the time of her death, and had been ill only a few days. She was born in Ethel, Miss., Jan. 16, 1905, and joined the Methodist church there when only a young girl. She was married to Mr. C. H. Hutchison, of Memphis, on Sept. 2, 1927. The body was brought back to Ethel for burial, where it was laid to rest in the presence of many sorrowing relatives and friends. She is survived by her husband, mother, a sister and brother, her father having preceded her into the great beyond about a year past. May the hand of God our Father so lead the sorrowiug ones that in the by and by there will be an eternal uniting where death is not known. Funeral services were conducted by J. W. Gibson, her pastor.

JAS. W. GIBSON.

On April 1, 1928, the great summons came to TOMAS ALEXANDER KIMBROUGH while he lay sick in a hospital in Jackson, Miss., and his spirit took its flight into the realms beyond. He was born near Ethel, Miss., on April 25, 1894, and had spent his life there; but upon taking ill suddenly he was carried to Jackson for treatment; when all medical aid failed to relieve him, he passed on to the great beyond to receive his reward. He joined the Methodist church when only in his teens, at Liberty Chapel church. He is survived by his mother, one sister and two brothers to mourn his untimely death. The body was brought back to Ethel and laid to rest in Liberty Chapel cemetery, in the presence of an unusually large crowd of friends and relatives. Funeral services were conducted by J. W. Gibson, his pastor. May God's richest blessings rest upon each one that mourns his passing, and may they be led by the haud of God that in the by and by we shall meet him in the happy home above.

JAS. W. GIBSON.

Contracts for the sale of the property on which is located Kwansei Gakuin, the Methodist school for young men in Japan in which are enrolled about 2,000 students, and for the purchase of the new site for the school as well as contracts for the new buildings, were signed on Feb. 21, 1928. It is expected that the buildings will be completed and the entire school moved to the new site by March 31, 1929. The removal of the school will take it permanently away from the noise and confusion of the city of Kobe, give it two and a half times as much land as it now has, and will allow one million yen to be reserved for an endowment fund.

IN MEMORY OF MY MOTHER, MRS. EMMA WALKER BRADLEY,

Born Aug. 16, 1842, at Godley Hide, Cheshire, England; Died June 24, 1927.

No nobler thought my soul may claim,
No nobler word my tongue may frame,
Than just that one word, "Mother."

I.

A head dawned with ringlets of silvery hair,
A face so pure, so true, so rare,
A brow so noble, so sweet and white,
Eyes which brought always sunshine and light—
This face could never belong to another—
But like this face of my own mother.

II.

It was not alone her face I loved,
But her heart, which was true as the stars above.
Her face, her form, I miss more than any other,
For this is the face of my mother.

III.

I hear her singing, I hear her pray,
I hear her calling me again to-day.
I seem I see her by the old fireside;
Oh how I long in her to confide!
In all this world there could be no other,
So true as the love of my mother.

IV.

Oh if there's any one who needs the praise,
It's she who sacrificed and toiled always,
I thank my Maker for sending no other,
So sweet was the face of my mother.

Her daughter,
MRS. ANNIE BRADLEY BERRY.

Wrote Dr. Pierce— Now She is Well

Utica, Miss.—"I wish to express my thanks for the benefits which I received from the use of Dr. Pierce's medicines and kind advice of his physicians.

"I was weak and nervous and felt bad all the time. I felt as though I was almost an invalid. I wrote Dr. Pierce for advice. He advised me to take the 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery,' 'Pleasant Pellets' and also to use the 'Vaginal Tablets,' which I did, according to directions. After taking a few bottles I began to improve in strength and weight. I am now the proud mother of a ten weeks' old daughter which I desired so much. I have three little sons. I am recommending Dr. Pierce's remedies to others."—Mrs. Mary Ella Young.

If your druggist fails to have any of Dr. Pierce's medicines, just mention the one you want and send to Dr. Pierce's Laboratory in Buffalo, N. Y., for a trial package. Write for free advice.

MAKING HEADWAY AT BAY SPRINGS.

Following are the high spots of the work of the Bay Springs charge this Conference year up to the present: (1) Bishop Darlington's visit and dedication of the church; (2) A definite program to harness all the man-power of the charge through Conference and local organizations; (3) A special and painstaking effort to put on the Every-Member Canvass according to the Discipline at each church; (4) A special effort to revive the prayer meeting by putting on a program prayer meeting and some other extras; (5) A visit, two sermons, and a checking up of three of our Sunday Schools by genial John (Rev. J. C. Chambers) and finding each school checked in fair condition, considering buildings, etc., of those ont of Bay Springs; and Bay Springs just lacked four and one-half per cent of being a Progressive C Type, and the organization of a Home Department will bring it up to this type, which is scheduled to be done right away; (6) The School of Missions according to the Discipline; (7) Special definite preaching on Jesus, his crufixion, and missions; (8) The Missionary Special over-snbscribed and i feel sure i can soon send the whole amount to Brother Broadfoot; (9) A very interesting campaign to get at least fifty subscribers to the Advocate, with fifty-four easily got by "going after them" (two of the committee on literature assisted in this campaign, which was appreciated); (10) A social principally for the dormitory boys and girls of Bay Springs A. H. S., with a good local attendance in the form of an M. M. M. M. (Music, Merriment, Missions, and Money) night. The young people of the church, especially, seemed to enjoy this night so much. (11) On Easter Sunday night i made the effort of my life for the thousand superannuates, and some present felt i could have easily got the whole amount of our assessment in cash and subscriptions that night; but i felt peculiarly impressed to take the envelopes as Brother Morse had directed, for i had just three weeks before gone over the top with a public subscription for the Missionary Special, and you can ride a "free horse" one time too much. I believe our whole quota will be subscribed via the envelopes right away. Some cash is already in hand. it was one of the chiefest joys of my life to present this cause. Two laymen, members of the Superannuate Endowment Fund Committee, presented the cause at two other churches of the charge Easter morning.

Now what? Turning toward the chief objective of the year—a gracious, Pentecostal, old-time, knock-down, drag-out, sin-killing revival, under the leadership of Evangelist J. B. Kendall, one of our general evangelists of Lexington, Ky., and Rev. J. Moon, an unusually capable singer and worker with young people and children. The date is May 13-27, with the singer here (D. V.) a few days ahead of this date. Now, fellow-pastors in the Newton District especially, with the presiding elder graciously included, you will find a palatable spiritual table set by these men, under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, and you will do well to be with us all you can. All others are cordially invited. After this, Sunday School Day and a Cokesbury School, and on and on!

A GOOD MEETING AT TCHULA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: i am now in a meeting in my church here at Tchula, and have assisting me Prof. B. G. Grenfell, the little Welshman from Lakeland, Fla., who comes to me from Central Methodist Episcopal Church, Springfield, Ohio, one of the great churches of our sister Methodism.

Mr. Grenfell was associated with me when I was a general evangelist, and I regard him as the best all around help that a pastor can get. He was associated for several years with Arthur Moore when he was in the evangelistic field, and Dr. Moore will back me in my recommendation.

My meeting here closes two weeks from to-day.

Immediately after this meeting, Mr. Grenfell has an open date that he would like to fill.

I would appreciate if you would publish this letter in your good paper that some of the brethren might see this recommendation and use him.

The meeting starts fine, and I am sure we will have a great time.

Yours sincerely,

E. R. SMOOT.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

April 15 to 20, the Pascagoula Standard Training School was conducted. This school was for the Pascagoula, Moss Point, Escatawpa, and Kreole charges. Two of the superintendents and the four pastors took credit.

It was an inspiring sight to see the large group gathered each night for a week to do real study work for the advancement of righteousness.

Forty-five were enrolled in the school and we had 26 credits. Three of the students did all the work and could have gotten credit if they had been old enough. That was sad, because we wished to get at least thirty, but it was so. Sickness and death interfered with several.

While the number of credits was not large, I feel that this was a real beginning for greater and better work in each of the charges. It is hoped that this will become a regular permanent affair and that we can go there from year to year and have better and better results.

The people were very kind indeed to the faculty, and that whole section of country endeared itself to the working force.

Shubuta was No. 1 on the Sunday School Honor Roll last year and will so appear this year. Liberty comes next on the Sunday School Day Honor Roll. We saw in the public press that Fayette had also observed the day and was on the Honor Roll, but the Sunday School Board has not had the report.

We trust that the reports from Sunday School Day observances will come in rapidly now. We are beginning the tight-rope walking of the year now and we are hoping and trusting that we will be able to get enough income to carry us across in comfort.

Many have notified us they would let us hear from them later. Pray for the work and workers.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Ten schools from the Aberdeen District have ordered Sunday School Day programs; ten from Columbus District; sixteen from Corinth District; seven from Grenada District; six from Greenwood District; five from Greenville District; eighteen from Sardis District. Sardis, Red Banks, and Birdie have observed the day and sent in offering. If one school has the right to pass this day by, all the schools have the same right; if one can observe the day, it is possible that all can observe it. We cannot afford to let other matters of less importance crowd it out. Six standard schools are scheduled to be held. The Conference Board is expected to help finance these schools. The Board is depending upon the results of Sunday School Day to lend this help.

In the school we heid at Amory there were eighty-five credits issued; thirty-seven took their first credit in a standard school. Most of these have taken one or more credits in Cokesbury schools under Rev. W. R. Hammontree. One sad thing about ail our schools is the fact that so few superintendents can find time to attend. The head of the school needs training as well as the teachers.

The next school is to be held at Sardis, May 27-June 1. A course in "Adolescent Worship," one in "A Study of Middle Childhood," Bible (Old Testament), the "Christian Religion;" and if as many as ten want the course in "Organization and Administration," this will be given.

The announcement of the school to be held at Grenada, June 4-9, will be mailed out this week.

Mrs. George Baker has placed a Wall Chart in the school at Love.

A good freind wrote for Sunday School Day programs, saying: "Our school is not any type, but send programs to suit." All this school needs is a few trained leaders and more consecrated to God. Even one person with training and consecration can change the life of the entire community.

The presiding elders are working hard to build up the defective schools. They had the report blanks sent to the superintendents that we may discover where help is most needed and what heip is wanted. Brother Superintendent, send in your report to your presiding elder.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Echoes from the State-wide Conference are reaching our office: Mr. A. M. Mayo writes: "Had a great Conference;" Dr. J. J. Schisler, "I enjoyed my trip and visit to your Conference," and Rev. A. W. Martin, "My general impression was that your whole program is moving forward in a worth while way."

On Thursday noon, April 19, at the district conference at Lake Arthur, the Board of Managers for the Camp Conference Training School, at which Standard and Cokesbury credits will be issued, had their first meeting, with the following members present: Dr. R. H. Wynn, chairman; Mr. A. M. Mayo, Mrs. J. W. Buchanan, and Mr. J. [illegible] Mack, of Lake Charles District; Rev. J. H. Bowdon, of Baton Rouge District; Rev. J. T. Harris, of Minden District; Miss Elizabeth Langford, of Ruston District; and Dr. A. S. Luts, Rev. C. [illegible] Atkinson, and Rev. A. K. McLellan.

A LETTER FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers and Pastors: Since both of you are equally interested in the recent observance of our Anniversary Day program, I know you are equally anxious to know the returns. We have not yet reached our quota, but the amounts already remitted have been splendid, and news of others not yet reported to the treasurer, as well as a number that have postponed their observance until a later date, will take us very near the top. The office has received notice of amounts raised by De Ridder, Glenmora, Mangum Memorial, Pineville, Winnsboro, and Zion Rest, but these amounts have not been remitted to the State treasurer, hence they are not included in this report.

A large number of our Leagues have observed this birthday of Epworth Leagues, I am sure, and have not yet reported to us. If you have not held your program yet, you have until June 12 in which to do so.

May I call special attention to the wonderful report from the Monroe Leaguers? Isn't a love offering of $102.56 from one church something of which we all might be proud? Say, I'm glad my membership is in such a fine church. They say that our treasurer, who is also president of that Senior League, made that speech that brought such fine returns. I'd suggest that some of you who have not yet observed Anniversary Day get a copy of it from him!

I want to thank again Rev. C. K. Smith for his splendid efforts in bringing before the presiding elders and pastors the importance of observing this birthday. The district secretaries also co-operated with us in a wonderful way, and I'm always thanking them for their part, because our work could not go on without them.

Now, don't be the last one to send in your offering. You have us guessing as to what you will do, and we are too anxious, and may I say—curious—to wait much longer. If your League is mentioned below, may I thank you again for making this the banner Anniversary Year in Louisiana? May the God whom I love bless you as you continue to serve him.

Your Field Secretary,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD.

A HAPPY PASTOR WRITES FROM LAKE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: It has been quite a while since I gave an account of myself on the Lake charge.

When I came to this circuit four years ago there were three churches; now there are five.

I have been able to meet all the appointments; I am well and as happy and contented as any preacher in the Mississippi Conference.

Our baby girl is finishing at Millsaps College this year; the other six children have finished their school work and are fulfilling their misson in church and State to our satisfaction.

We are approaching our fiftieth anniversary; on the eighth day of August we hope to observe our golden wedding.

But enough of this. No preacher ever had a better bunch of people to preach to; they are loving, tender and kind, looking after all the details of the work, relieving the pastor as much as possible.

Regardless of the closing down of the Dubois lumber mill that gave large support to the church and the moving away of many of the members, yet the salary is maintained and is being paid promptly. The amount assessed this charge for mission special has been forwarded to Brother Broadfoot. The study of "The New Task" was very beneficial to our people. We have a fine bunch of women composing the Missionary Society active in all departments of church work; during the months of February and March they studied the book of Matthew, chapter by chapter; questions were asked and discussion was lively and interesting.

There are going into the homes of the people in the bounds of this circuit three copies of the Nashville Christian Advocate, and fifty-one copies of the New Orleans; also twenty copies of the Missionary Voice.

On the 6th of May we are expecting to begin our revival meeting here at Lake, having secured the services of Brother W. C. Swope, and singer, of Charleston, Mo. We hope the preachers and laymen nearby will take advantage of this great meeting that we're hoping to have.

Our new presiding elder, Brother Gatlin, is giving satisfaction; is a good preacher, full of pep, enthusiastic and optimistic.

The committee is busy looking after the belated superannuate fund; we hope to see it all paid.

M. L. WHITE.

The Chulwon district was formerly a very backward and undeveloped section of Korea, but during recent years many changes have taken place. The railroad from Seoul to Wonsan was built through the heart of the district; the electric lines from Chulwon to the Diamond Mountains begun; and a great irrigation project whereby many square miles of poor dry fields were turned into rich rice fields was put into operation. The church work has not failed to keep pace with the material progress; therefore, the Chulwon district is one of the very best in the Conference to-day.

All Methodist services at Chodzie, Poland, are conducted in German, as the majority of the people of the town are of German descent. The Rev. Ludwig Zolkiewicz is pastor.

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby ~Babies Have Nerves~

By RUTH BRITTAIN

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

IN LOVING REMEMBRANCE OF MRS. LOUISE ANDERSON BENNETT.

April 15, 1928.

One year ago to-day there passed to a more beautiful setting the sweet and gentle spirit of our friend, Louise. We, as a society and individuals, treasure her memory in our hearts. Her faith in the supreme goodness is a beacon light, the memory of her lofty character, her many admirable qualities an example for us to emulate.

As an officer of our society, always an interested worker for its success, she holds still in spirit a high place in our organization.

An oft-repeated expression, "I will do my part and leave the rest to the Lord," was exemplified in her daily living, and being guided by this principle she has left to her children a heritage better than gold—the example of noble Christian womanhood.

Sweet spirit, dear friend, we hope to meet you some day in "the beautiful Isle of the Blest."

DIZZY, NO APPETITE

Since Taking Black-Draught This Man Is Eager For His Meals and Feels Much Better.

Harrisburg, N. C.—Mr. M. F. Pink, of this place, says: "It must have been fully twenty-five years ago that I began taking Black-Draught regularly. It wasn't so long after I married.

"I was in town one day, and while talking to a friend I stooped over to pick up something. When I straightened up, I felt dizzy. I spoke to him about this and how I had not felt like eating.

"My friend told me to take some Black-Draught. I knew my mother had used it, and so I bought a package. When I got home, I took a good, big dose, and the next night, another. In a few days I felt much better. I was hungry and the dizziness was gone.

"A good many times I have had this dizziness and a bad taste in my mouth, or headaches, and then I take Black-Draught and get better. I do not have to take it very often. We buy from five to seven packages a year."

Thedford's Black-Draught has been found to relieve sick headaches in thousands of cases that were due to constipation. Containing no mineral drugs, it acts gently, yet promptly. Try it. NC-193

Two new churches have been established as a result of the work of the Seoul Ctiy Mission in Korea. This Mission is under the direction of the Rev. M. B. Stokes. Oue of the new churches is in one of the hest sections of Seoul and is one of the most promising groups of Christians in the city; the other church is considered one of the best on the Pochun circuit.

The Rev. N. B. Stump, pastor of the Mexican Methodist church at Nogales, Arizona, has received sixteen into the church during the present year.

The Sunday school room at the Hamp Stevens Memorial Church in the mill district of Columhus, Ga., has recently been freshly papered. This is just a little mission church and its members are practically all mill workers. When it was found that the Sunday school room needed papering, they decided that it must be done, although there was no way to get it done except to do it themselves. This was no easy task, especially for men tired from a long day's work in the mills, hut they made play out of it instead of work, and soon the job was well done.

Woodleaf, N. C.—"I was nervous and suffered most of the time and sometimes I would have to go to bed. My sister told me she was in the same condition and how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped her. After taking the first bottle I found I was stronger than I was before. Now I have taken three bottles, I can do my housework and most every other kind of work that I want to do. I will recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to anyone. I will answer all mail received asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Rosa Swicegood, R. 1, Woodleaf, N. C.

Benefited Beyond Expression

Jacksonville, Fla.—"I read an advertisement of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and have been taking it now for four years and find it a wonderful medicine for weak, run-down women. I do my own housework and work in an office besides and I would get cross and irritable and too sick to work. I have benefited beyond expression by the Vegetable Compound and will gladly answer letters from anyone who is suffering and needs help."—Mrs. Rose Morris, 2149 Walnut St., Jacksonville, Florida.

E. S. LEWIS, P. E.

Recently in a Sunday morning Bible class at Palmore Institute, Kobe, Japan, the teacher, Rev. J. Paul Reed, asked some of the members of the class to offer prayers in any convenient language. A Christian Korean student responded in good English and a Chinese Christian prayed in Chinese. Surely our field in Japan is not limited to the Japanese people alone!

CRENSHAW AND GRENADA.

Two more North Mississippi District Conferences met last week—and it was our pleasure to attend both of them.

The first one was the Sardis, at Crenshaw. In order to get there for the first day, we left New Orleans early Tuesday morning; very early, in fact—ten minutes after midnight. We are still in favor of a constitutional amendment we proposed several years ago, to the effect that it shall be unlawful for any train to leave a place after nine o'clock at night, or arrive at its destination before eight o'clock in the morning. If the arrangement could not be carried into effect in any other way, a separate train could be provided for every town, scheduled to depart and arrive within the given time limits. Of course the railroads would oppose such an amendment.

Notwithstanding the unearthly hour of our departure, we had a pleasant journey and a safe arrival. We reached Jackson, Miss., a little before six o'clock in the morning and stayed there until a little after seven; so we had plenty of time to get a cup of coffee in the dining-room of the magnificent new Illinois Central station. On our way to the dining-room, we ran across several brethren—Rev. J. L. Decell, Rev. T. M. Brownlee, and Rev. J. M. Morse—who were at the station to take an early train to Laurel to attend the Newton District Conference. We also ran across Dr. H. F. Tatum, of Meridian, Miss., who was en route to Clarksdale to attend a meeting of the Knights of Pythias, of which organization he is the Mississippi chief. It was a real pleasure to meet a relative coming out from Jackson; but his greeting was as cordial as if he were a special welcoming committee. We wished that he might go on to Crenshaw with us.

The Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad runs into the delta at Valley, a little station just south of Yazoo City, and continues through that wonderful region to Memphis. Some people like the hills and mountains; as for us, we wouldn't swap one acre of the flat country for all the mountains from here to Alaska. The only advantage we know of that the mountains have over the delta is that the water runs off them a little quicker—which, to tell the truth, is no small advantage.

When we got off the train to Tutwiler to take another one for Crenshaw, we found "Mister" Shipman at the station. No, he hadn't heard that we were to pass through and had come down to welcome us—he was there to meet a relative coming out from Jackson; but his greeting was as cordial as if he were a special welcoming committee. We wished that he might go on to Crenshaw with us.

We arrived at Crenshaw at 2:35 p. m., just a few minutes after the district conference was called into session. We got to the church in time to hear most of the devotional address delivered by Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, who was a visitor to the conference. In due time we were most cordially greeted and welcomed by the presiding elder, Rev. T. M. Bradley, and the pastor, Rev. W. W. Jones, and other friends and acquaintances.

With as little formality as we have ever seen and with as little apparent effort to carry out a program, Brother Bradley started the business of the conference without delay and carried it along in an amazingly easy way. He just goes ahead and does what is to be done—and nobody can do any better. We gathered from various sources that the people of the Sardis District think he is a good elder; and the fact that his district made about the best report in the Conference last year would seem to bear out their opinion.

We were fortunate enough to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Sledge, of Sledge, Miss. Sledge is only a few miles from Crenshaw, and it co-operated with Crenshaw in the entertainment of the conference. If anybody had a more delightful home than we had, we didn't hear anything about it, though the hospitality on all sides was all that could be desired. We didn't hear of anybody else that had the whole second floor of a beautiful home, with three beds, bath, etc., all for his own—and that is what we had. Perhaps it is only fair to add that we slept in only one of the beds. Sledge is a progressive little city, and we saw signs of substantial growth. The Baptists are just completing a beautiful little brick church. It was our privilege to preach Tuesday night at the Methodist church—an attractive frame structure—to an attentive congregation.

Before going back to Crenshaw Wednesday morning, we had the pleasure of driving with Brother Sledge for several miles over fine roads through some of the magnificent plantations of that section. It was a pleasure long to be remembered. The session of the conference Wednesday morning was largely given over to the presentation of various interests of the church by visiting representatives. The editor of the Advocate was heard courteously; Mrs. Riley spoke for the Orphanage; Judge Foreman and Mr. Johnson spoke in behalf of the Millsaps College building and equipment campaign. The real feature of the morning, though, was the presentation of the Grenada

Club Offer Extended One Month.

At the request of quite a number of brethren, including two members of the Publishing Committee of the Advocate and a presiding elder, and by authority of the chairman of the Publishing Committee, Dr. R. H. Harper, the club offer is extended one month—until June 1. The Club offer is as follows:

TWENTY TO FIFTY SUBSCRIPTIONS	$1.50 per year
FIFTY TO ONE HUNDRED SUBSCRIPTIONS	$1.25 per year
ONE HUNDRED OR MORE SUBSCRIPTIONS	$1.00 per year

In all cases the names must be sent in one list and the money must accompany the club.

We earnestly hope this extension of the club offer will produce results that will justify the action. The number of subscriptions received thus far at the reduced rate is far from enough to meet the financial obligations resting upon the Advocate. There have been hindrances to the campaign; but the way is open during May. We cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of securing clubs during this month. We hope the pastors will earnestly co-operate in the effort to put the Advocate into the homes of all our people and at the same time provide the financial resources for the publication of the paper. The need is urgent.

"A BEAST ON A CLOD OF MUD."

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

When one falls under the speli of materialism, the invariable result is the adoption of a degrading view of man. This is the logical outcome of materialism—which has been justly characterized as "the gospel of dirt."

This "gospel of dirt" reduces human nature to the level of a brute; accounts for all human conduct by physical elements and "reactions;" and obliterates the whole basis of free agency and moral responsibility.

A case in point is that of Mr. Will Durant, who published a year or two ago a vivacious volume entitled "The Story of Philosophy." It was by no means an exhaustive history of philosophy. It was not even accurate in its treatment of the partial list of the systems of philosophy chosen for discussion. Mr. Durant's mind is hardly capable of grasping clearly a single system of philosophy, to say nothing of accurately comprehending several systems. He is not a great artist, able to bind together in a uniform and harmonious whole things philosophical; but, he is rather like a gifted child arranging bits of broken porcelain in forms attractive to the eyes of those who delight in ingenious combinations of highly-colored objects. His style is brilliant and his conclusions inconsequential.

In his "Story of Philosophy" he evinced marked partiality for Voltaire's incongruous system, if system it may be called.

Thus bent towards materialism and other antireligious tenets, Mr. Durant has now published a book, which is a sort of mental autobiography or self-vivisection, in which he sets forth how he started life in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church and began preparation for its priesthood; drifted from that into socialism and other forms of radicalism; and finally renounced all Christian faith, and settled down in a complacent, not to say conceited, paganism.

His characteristic literary quality prevails through this latter work, and it may be called brilliant. But he rests in rank materialism, embraces the darkest pessimism, and reaches the conclusion that "man is little more than a beast living on a clod of mud."

If such indeed is the low estate of man, why take the pains to write the story of the philosophies of a few men, who have, while standing on the "clod of mud" which is called the earth, blown bubbles that expanded in brilliant colors, and then burst, disappearing with the poor, senseless brutes' that blew them? What does the philosophy of such a beast amount to, anyhow, if Mr. Durant's conclusion is correct?

And why should Mr. Will Durant, "a beast on a clod of mud," pester himself and others by writing and publishing the account of his transition from the position he occupied when he proposed to be a priest to that in which he now stands accounting himself an animal browsing on tuft of earth? Why should a mere brute make such an exhibition of his inwards to the sight of other brutes living on the level of "dumb driven cattle" and doomed to perish with the other beasts treading the sorry "clod of mud" which they foolishly imagine is a planet in a great solar system?

Why should "beasts on a clod of mud" go about publishing books and trying to make believe that they are something more than beasts?

Books, newspapers, libraries, schools, colleges and universities, are wholly unnecessary to "beasts on a clod of mud."

To this absurd and repulsive end all the forms of materialism lead; and yet many misguided minds accept it as the final philosophy.

In recent years it has invaded the fields of psychology; and strolling men and women, claiming to be great psychologists, are wandering over the land preaching "the gospel of dirt."

The real students of psychology, or teachers who think they are such, are very much to blame for this state of things. They have been so eager to be called "scientists" and to be classed with the students of physical sciences that they have surrendered their field to physiologists, showing an amazing want of self-respect as well as a humiliating lack of respect for the lofty subjects they are supposed to study.

And this apostasy of the psychologists is working practical results of evil. It is impairing the sense of human responsibility, and corrupting the processes of the courts of criminal law.

Murderers slay fellow-men, and then seek to save their necks from the gallows by dishonoring their heads with psychologic pleas of irresponsibility. To excuse their destruction of other lives they seek to prove the degradation of their own natures.

At last materialism always degrades mankind. It is a debased and debasing system, which denies the teaching of the psalmist that "Man is a little lower than the angels" (Psalms viii:5), and declares that he is only a little higher than the apes.

Of course, if man is such a creature as materialism makes him, "beast on a clod of mud," he is beneath the notice of God, even if the materialists allowed that there is such a being as God.

Jesus Christ cannot be accepted as the Redeemer of a herd of beasts tramping around on "a clod of mud." Indeed, if Mr. Will Durant's materialism is true, and if Jesus Christ was a mere man, he was himself "a beast on a clod of mud"—a thought so blasphemous as to make one hesitate to put it in words.

All history, especially Christian history, is past all understanding if all men are but beasts "on a clod of mud." How did brute beasts bring to pass such vast results, permeated by intellectual and spiritual elements, which are far beyond and above what any animals below man have accomplished or ever can achieve?

And how did this "beast upon a clod of mud" acquire the power of intelligible speech? The celebrated philologist, F. Max Muller, said, "Language is our Rubicon, and no brute will dare cross it."

He might have said that no brute can pass it; for there is "no reason without language and no language without reason." When Mr. Durant's "beast on a clod of mud" is found talking to his fellows, and they are seen to be able to understand him and reply in speech, he can no longer be called a beast without such classifying of him with the lower animals becoming a reproach to him who thus miscalls him.

Furthermore, this "beast on a clod of mud" is the only animal who foreknows that he will die, and dreams that he is immortal. Whence comes this far-seeing capacity, if he is no more than a beast?

No one can forbid Mr. Will Durant reckoning himself to be "a beast upon a clod of mud;" but he must not place all other human beings on the same low and base level.

THE COLUMBUS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The fifty-eighth session of the Columbus District Conference met in West Point, Miss., Tuesday morning, April 17, 1928. West Point measured up to her far-famed friendliness and hospitality. Her doors were flung wide to all comers, whether they were delegates or visitors. The women served a bountiful noon lunch to all in the basement of their splendid new church plant. Much has been done since we met there in Annual Conference in 1924. The building and equipment are now complete, with handsome pews, fine pipe organ, and a finished spacious basement. Across the archway, in the rear of the auditorium, hangs a long massive drapery curtain that not only adds to the richness and beauty of the Gothic auditorium, but tones down the reverberation.

Our genial pastor-host, Rev. W. R. Lott, spared not in preparing for our coming. Not a minor detail was forgotten. There was much evidence of his popular and efficient leadership and administration.

Our new presiding elder, Rev. W. N. Duncan, charmed us with his skill and mastery as a presiding officer. His rapid and easy dispatch of business, fine courtesy, warm spirituality, and brotherly kindliness, along with a simple, unassumed dignity, went far toward making this a most harmonious, progressive and working session.

The attendance was good, and the delegates sat through the sessions. Only one pastor was absent, Rev. R. A. Tucker, who is in Hot Springs, Ark., for treatment.

Rev. J. L. Jerdine, a long time leading missionary to Korea, now pastor of Macon, and Rev. H. M. Ellis, a member of the Mississippi Conference, now pastor of Louisville, delighted and edified us with their thoughtful and timely sermons at the 11 o'clock hour. The evening hour was given over to the laymen. The writer was not present, but he heard men discussing the masterly address of Judge Foreman, of Jackson, Miss., on "Fruit-Bearing Christians," as they collected in groups on the church lawn Wednesday morning.

The sunny nature and inspiring zeal of our fallen leader, Rev. J. B. Randolph was sadly missed, also the saintly T. H. Lipscomb. God's soldiers fall in the trenches, but the battle goes on to victory.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, presiding elder of the Corinth District, and Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Greenwood District, looked in on us. Rev. S. A. Brown, of the Grenada District; Rev. H. E. Carter, of the Aberdeen District, and Rev. B. F. Bullard, of the Corinth District, were welcomed as visiting pastors. A goodly number of connectional officers came along, bringing Conference-wide news and encouragement. Among them were Dr. J. R. Countiss, President of Grenada College; Rev. J. H. Holder, President Conference Sunday School Board and Secretary of Education; Rev. A. T. McIlwain, Conference Director of the Superannuate Clean-up Campaign; J. G. Houston, Conference Lay Leader; Mrs. Riley, Field Secretary Orphans' Home; Mrs. L. H. Roberts, District Secretary Woman's Missionary Society; Miss Pauline Wynn, Methodist Student Secretary M. S. C. W. We were also delighted with the presence of our efficient editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It is a long way, but we hope that he will come often.

There were no applicants for recommendation for admission on trial or for orders. Archie P. Stephens, of Kosciusko, was granted license to preach. J. H. McKinnon, of Ackerman, was re-elected District Lay Leader. He was also elected to the Board of District Trustees to take the place of the late J. Lem Seawright.

The following were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference: N. C. Oaks, of Starkville; A. H. Pegues, of Columbus; Dr. N. G. Guerry, of Artesia; J. H. McKinnon, of Ackerman; E. D.

Ervin, of Starkville; L. H. Roberts, of Agricultural and Mechanical College; H. E. Sanders, of Longview; B. L. Smith, Jr., of West Point; F. S. Jackson, of Brooksville; M. C. McAlilly, of Louisville; Mrs. T. J. Lee, of Louisville; Rev. A. P. Stephens, of Kosciusko; H. C. Campbell, of West Point; J. H. Sullivant, of Kosclusko; Charles Strong, of Macon. Alternate delegates: Mrs. R. P. Nebiett, of Kosclusko; J. W. Overstreet, of Noxapaler; A. B. Harrington, of Starkville; E. C. Cochran, of West Point; W. J. Nesom, of Louisville; Mrs. W. M. McIntosh, of Columbus.

The following were elected to serve as the District Licensing Committee: W. R. Lott, V. C. Curtis, R. A. Tucker, Dr. W. M. McIntosh.

Dr. J. R. Countiss presented the plan to raise $200,000 for the endowment of Grenada College. His argument was so forcible and made the need so clear that, without further discusslon, the conference, without a dissenting vote, enthusiastically endorsed the plan.

The next district conference goes to Kosclusko.

W. M. LANGLEY, Assistant Secretary.

ABERDEEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Aberdeen District Conference met in Houlka on April 19, at 8:30 o'clock a. m., Rev. E. Nash Browles presiding. Dr. H. T. Carley, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, conducted the worship period, after which the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by Presiding Elder E. Nash Broyles, assisted by Rev. W. M. Young and Rev. E. M. Shaw.

The conference opened for business with the election of the secretary, and the official roll call. An unusually large number of lay delegates and pastors answered at the first roll call, and many others came in during the next few hours.

The entire conference entered into the formal business in a very commendable way, and each session was marked with interst and enthusiasm on the part of the members. The reports of committees were gratifying, and showed that the district is moving forward in every phase of the work.

At the 11 o'clock hour of the first day Rev. C. A. Parks, pastor of First Methodist Church at Amory, preached a most forcible and appropriate sermon to a large congregation. Rev. Carrol Varner, pastor of First Methodist Church of Tupelo, was announced for the evening hour of worship, and preached a very fine sermon to a congregation that filled the house.

Rev. A. M. Shaw, pastor at Nettleton, preached at the 11 o'clock hour of the second day. Brother Shaw preached one of those fine sermons which is typical of his preaching.

The following visitors were introduced to the conference and given a hearty welcome by the presiding elder: Dr. H. T. Carley, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate; Dr. J. R. Countiss, President of Grenada College; Prof. J. E. Stephens, of Millsaps College; Mrs. Alma G. Riley, of the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson; Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Greenwood District; Prof. Morgan Richards, of Millsaps College; Brother James G. Houston, Conference Lay Leader; and Rev. A. Y. Brown, Conference Director of the Golden Cross Society.

Rev. W. C. Newman, the pastor-host of the conference, and the good people of Houlka entertained and cared for the members of the conference in a most commendable way. Suitable resolutions of appreciation were adopted by the conference for the courtesies and kindness shown by both pastor and people of Houlka.

On motion of Rev. W. M. Young, a rising vote of appreciation was extended to Rev. E. Nash Broyles for the way in which he so systematically and efficiently presided over the conference.

A spirit of co-operation and Christian fellowship prevails within the district, and the outlook for the present conference year seems to indicate a great year materially and spiritually.

W. L. PEARSON, Secretary.

THE LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT CONFERENC.

The Lake Charles District Conference convened in the Methodist church at Lake Arthur on April 18, at 2:30 p. m. There were some lay delegates present for the opening and a number of the preachers. During the afternoon ssesion the preachers present gave reports of their work for the year. Rev. R. W. Vaughan, of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, was present and represented his work. Brother Vaughan has done a very great work at Ruston, and has the sympathetic co-operation of our people throughout the Conference.

At the evening service, Rev. R. F. Harrell, of Many, preached a helpful sermon, calling attention to the fact that the small things count greatly in God's service. His sermon was encouraging to many who labor in obscure and difficult fields.

On Thursday some of the pastors who had not been in attendance the day before arrived, and reported their work. All the preachers in the district attended the conference except two who were detained on account of sickness, and one who was in the midst of a revival meeting. The reports of the preachers-in-charge showed that 117 have been received into the church on profession, seventy-eight by certificate, and sixty-five have been lost since the beginning of the Annual Conference year. This leaves a net gain of 130 thus far. Some of the churches had had revival meetings. Others have planned for these meetings. The reports showed that most of the churches are in a good condition. With reference to finances, the salaries of the preachers are very well up in most instances. The Special for Missions has not received an encouraging response. The district is very much behind in the amount asked for. Orphanage collections were reported very well—up to the standard. The brethren are not unmindful of the benevolent claims. The Superannuate Endowment has not received encouraging consideration.

On Thursday morning Dr. N. E. Joyner presented the cause of Christian Education and the educational crisis now before Louisiana Methodism. At the 11 o'clock hour Dr. F. L. Wells presented the cause of Superannuate Endowment. In the afternoon, reports were received from the various committees. Delegates to the Annual Conference were as follows: A. M. Mayo, W. L. Doss, J. J. Davidson, Robert Jones, S. H. Porter, Mrs. W. M. Buchanan, Rev. R. P. Howell, J. Ed. Eaves, and Mrs. R. H. Wynn. The following alternate delegates were elected: H. N. Pharr, T. L. Freeman, J. W. Wynn, Mrs. H. Demanade, J. C. Mack, R. H. Wynn, R. S. Walton, W. H Jordan and H. W. Ledbetter were elected as Licensing Committee to serve until the next session of the Annual Conference. J. Ed. Eaves was elected District Lay Leader. J. W. Wynn and R. A. Frasar were elected as Associate Lay Leaders. A. M. Mayo was re-elected District Sunday School Secretary.

Besides the visitors mentioned above, the following were among those visiting the conference: Miss Elizabeth Langford, Conference Epworth League Field Secretary; Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Conference Sunday School Secretary; Rev. A. K. McLellan, Dual-Extension Secretary; Dr. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District; Rev. Hy. W. Bowdon, of the Keener Memorial Church, Baton Rouge; General Evangelist J. O. Hanes, of Birmingham, Ala., and his singer, Mr. Scott. Most of these were present to give consideration to the camp for girls being promoted by the Sunday School Board to be held at the Lake Arthur camp ground next August.

Dr. R. H. Wynn gave a talk by request of the presiding elder on the work of continuous evangelism in the local congregation under the leadership of the pastor. It was a very helpful talk.

In view of the fact that the second Sunday in March, which was fixed as Education Day by the Annual Conference session, was not observed as such, the district conference voted to observe this day on the second or third Sunday in June, in accordance with the plans of the General Board of Education. The Sub-district Training School to be held at Crowley, April 29-May 4, was announced, as was also the Pastors' School planned for next summer to be held at Centenary College.

J. M. Spires, C. B. Powell, and W. L. Doss, Jr., conducted the devotional exercises for the three sessions of the conference. Rev. R. F. Harrell was elected secretray.

The conference completed its work at about 5 o'clock on Thursday afternoon. Most of those who had not already left the seat of the conference did so immediately after adjournment.

HIDDEN CHURCH MEMBERS.

By Rev. W. R. Lott.

It has often been discussed why so many people care so little about their church membership. We all know many people who live for years in one community and have their church letters in some other church. When they are approached about the matter, they will give many excuses for their negligence. Some will say that they love the old home church, with its sacred memories, and are loathe to give up that relation; others will plead that the church where they came from needs their support. Some will be forward enough to say that they will not move their membership until they can better live in accordance with their obligations. The majority of the people who hesitate seems to take a secret joy in being free, as they think, from the restrictions of church membership, and have the appearance of hiding away. Quite a few look at the church as a financial burden to them and are glad to remain without, so they may not be called upon to help in its work.

All these excuses spell religious tragedy in human hearts. It reveals a blighted hope and shows that as far as they are concerned the church life has been a failure. They may not say so; but if they would open their hearts and tell the truth hidden there, it would be like this: "Yes, I joined the church, thinking it would help me and make me happy and useful, but it did not. It means nothing to me here or back yonder. Why should I start in here?"

Let me say here that I think the fault is not altogether in the individuals spoken of, but largely in the life of the church where they lived. It meant nothing to them. When they moved, they felt no loss and hence they seek no gain. Every minister knows people who come to him for their letters when they move, saying, "I want my letter—I must have the church in my life."

Let me repeat: When people move out of one town to another and do not carry their church letters, the reflection is on the church where they move from. If the church means anything, it means Christian fellowship, and when that is taken away, people miss it and will seek for it. When people are neglected by the body of the church and never taken into the Christian fellowship, they will not love it. An audience is nothing; a crowd is of little use; what counts is a band of people who feel for each other in all the interests of life.

The cure for this evident evil of hidden church members is for every church to make itself felt as a Christian brotherhood. The strong magnet is genuine love and interest in each other.

THE FORGOTTEN MAN.

By R. M. Weaver, Corlnth, Miss.

To be forgotten is the saddest destiny in the world. To be neglected, overlooked or looked down upon is bad enough—but to be dropped into the deep, black, bottomless well of forgetfulness is a terrible fate.

I saw a lonely old home, once filled with life, hope and laughter; it was empty—door sagging open, forgotten. I saw a once beautiful rose garden grown over with weeds—gorgeous American Beauties, dwarfed to tiny hard buds—forgotten.

I saw a church, in the wild wood, neglected; folks out in autos—worshiping at strange shrines—God forgotten.

I saw a little boy—parents at outs, running the streets, hard-faced, a prospective criminal—a forgotten asset.

A home, a rose-garden, a church, or a boy—forgotten—is bad enough—tragic enough; but I tell you the most pitiable and sad forgotten thing is a servant of God, old, worn, forgotten by the people and church he served all the sturdy years of his life.

The tender hand and voice that baptized, married, buried the loved ones of the land—half starved, neglected and forgotten.

I have seen children forget parents; pupils, a teacher; recipients of love and affection, the giver; and all have betokened something wrong in the person forgetting; but to forget the old, tired, worn preacher and his family seems to me a terrible thing.

Forgetfulness of God's good things is the greatest sin of modern times.

The superannuate preacher brought high ideals, the Bible, and a forgiving Christ into many a rude and dangerous neighborhood. The Bible and Christ always bring a Christian culture nothing else can produce. The old superannuate taught by life and precept the finer morality, the gentler forgiveness the world cannot have. He entered saddened homes and brought the light; he handed a flaming torch of ambition to a poor boy or girl shut out from a great future seemingly.

He taught men and women how to pray and talk to God and believe in him. As he cleared a place for a church, a school house speedily followed. He demanded little—was made to live so often in poor homes, given small pay and had to live hard.

Few before me whose heads are bald or have threads of silver in them who cannot remember the old circuit rider when he came into the home—his open Bible, his long prayer for each child in the home and each sin in the decalogue. He builded the great and splendid Methodism we enjoy. He laid deep the mud sills of morality, clean living, a belief in sin, repentance and forgiveness. He built hundreds of small churches whose united light has made America the most Christian of nations.

His advice, counsel, kindness and undying patience are among the precious treasures of Methodism. He's old, worn out; could not save. He was paid so little and gave so much; and now—white-haired, lonely, robbed of his loved work by a new generation who clamor loudly for a young man—now, hands, head and heart idle—he stands helpless and forgotten.

The church has promised him support and care, but she has rushed collections to carry her far-flung missions and educational program far and farther, and the superannuate fund is far from completed. There are many calls on everybody—money seems to flee from fingers as rapidly as if some wicked magician had touched it; but we must stop, get very steady, and this year enlarge our giving to this great cause.

No wonder it is the saddest day of a preacher's life when he is read out by his bishop as superannuated; no wonder its shadow dogs his days and those of his wife.

May I try to picture to you a true scene in the life of an old preacher 75 years old, who has blazed the trail for Christ over wilderness and danger? He has been superannuated at Conference and returned to his charge to preach his farewell sermon. He was a stalwart, greatly loved and honored and desired by many, but had been finally blacklisted. He came into the pulpit in his old, worn, long-tailed black coat and with his snow-white hair and fine face with the light of God shining in. He announced he had come to say good-bye and to "Stack arms."

He took his old saddlebags and held them up and said: "I stack arms to-day and place first my old saddlebags. In their pockets I carried the Bible, Discipline, and hymn books, candy for lonely little country children, and lunch for myself. For fifty-five years you have served me and my old horse—now gone. I stack my saddlebags.

"Second, I stack my hymn book. I have raised hymns, sung them over dead and dying, saved souls with their ringing melody, and flung them out to saint and sinner alike. I stack my old hymn book.

"Here is my old Discipline. I have read from it the baptismal service for your little children; I have united young people in holy wedlock, and have said the last work over your dead from its pages. I stack my old Discipline.

"Last, here is my old blessed Bible. I have read cousoling passages to you in sorrow; I have seen conviction flame into conversion when I preached its sound promises; I have seen waiting sinners change to shouting saints; I've used it to teach men and children even to read and write; in it I have learned whatever fate may come to me, therewith to be content. And now I stack arms—my Bible," and with bowed head the old man went out with his arms laden with his "stacked arms" he had used long and well—now useless.

There was not a dry eye in that church that day, and I'm telling this true story to you that you, with your love, memories, appreciation, honest-to-gooduess men, desire to remedy the forgetfulness we have thrust on these men and their wives. I come to beg you to roll up the superannuate fund and sleep well in your own good home to-night when you realize for once you have done your duty to the "forgotten man."

THE JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

An unusually pleasant and profitable session of the Jackson District Conference was held in the Glendale church at Jackson on April 19 and 20.

The conference had been changed from Florence on account of the great sorrow which had recently befallen the parsonage home of the Rev. and Mrs. S. B. Watkins at Florence in the death of their daughter. The Rev. C. E. Downer, pastor, and his membership at Glendale church endeared themselves to the preachers and delegates by the efficient manner in which they took hold of the duties of host on short notice. Brother Downer and his people have done a monumental work in the erection of a beautiful and commodious church in a rapidly growing section of Mississippi's capital city.

Rev. J. Loyd Decell is a good presiding officer, and under his wise leadership the business of the conference was dispatched with precision and fairness, and there was not a dull moment in the whole session. This is Brother Decell's fourth and last year as presiding elder of the Jackson District, and no man has ever been more universally loved or accomplished more for the cause. As an evidence of love and esteem, the preachers and laymen had purchased a beautiful silver water service, and at an opportune time on the last day of the session the Rev. T. M. Brownlee, in a most felicitous address, presented the service in behalf of the people of the district. This was one of the most tender and touching points of the session.

The reports of the pastors showed a healthy condition of the church throughout the district, with revival fires burning nearly everywhere, finances in good shape, and a healthy interest in all the affairs of the church.

One fine young man, Garnett K. Adair, was granted license to preach, and the Rev. C. E. Downer, who located at his own request a few years ago, was recommended to the Annual Conference for re-admission.

The preaching was of a high order, sermons being delivered by T. O. Prewitt, and L. L. Roberts; devotional services were conducted by Brothers Decell, H. W. Featherstun, J. H. Foreman and C. H. Ellis.

The work of the laymen was exemplified in a program conducted by J. C. Wood, District Lay Leader, in which capable addresses were made by Judge J. M. Foreman and Dr. J. M. Sullivan. Dr. J. R. Lin delivered a stirring address on "Our Lord and His Miracles." The Superannuate Endowment movement was represented at a special meeting on Thursday evening under the direction of the Rev. J. M. Morse, Conference director.

Fifteen delegates to the Annual Conference were elected as follows: J. C. Wood, Mrs. Daisy M. Stevens, Dr. J. M. Sullivan, I. O. Brown, J. M. Foreman, Dr. D. M. Key, Mrs. W. H. Watkins, W. E. Harris, J. J. Childress, W. H. Bradley, Mrs. J. H. Fox, J. A. Lindsay, J. M. Bush, H. O. Middleton, W. C. Davis. Alternates are Dr. J. R. Lin, Mrs. W. M. Tribble, C. L. Ray, H. L. Clark, Mrs. R. E. Rutledge.

The conference, in adopting the report of the Committee on Temperance and Social Service, went on record as demanding that only delegates known to be in favor of prohibition be sent to the Democratic Convention, and declared against the nomination of a "wet" candidate for president.

The Rev. M. H. McCormack, of Clinton, was secretary of the conference.

The 1929 sessons will be held at Florence, according to unanimous vote.

DEL LONGGREAR.

THE GRENADA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Grenada District Conference held its sessions at Grenada, April 25-26, with the presiding elder, Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding.

Encouraging reports were made by the various pastors of the district. They reported 230 additions to the church and about one hundred of these were additions on profession of faith. These reports also indicated that attention is being given to the great program of our church.

The members of this conference listened with interest to the preseutation of the various programs of our church by the representatives of these programs. Grenada District is vitally interested in the program of our church.

The conference voted unaulmously to approve the plan for the endowment of Grenada College as it was presented by Dr. J. R. Countiss. The Millsaps College campaign for more physical equipment was outlined before the conference by Judge J. M. Foreman, of Jackson.

The following resolution was adopted by the conference: "Whereas, your Committee on Superannuate Endowment realize the great importance of the sacreduess and need of this fund; and, whereas, we greatly appreciate the splendid address made on the subject by R. M. Weaver, Therefore be it resolved by the Grenada District Conference, That we urge all our pastors to present faithfully this cause to every congregation in this district."

This resolution was also adopted: "Inasmuch as Rev. E. S. Lewis has been presiding elder of the Grenada District for the past four years, and inasmuch as it is the Methodist custom to move a presiding elder at least once in four years;

"Inasmuch as Brother Lewis has proved himself capable, faithful, efficient and impartial in the work that has been committed to his hands, and has really been a good minister of Jesus Christ;

"Therefore, be it resolved by a standing vote of this conference, That we express to Brother Lewis our sincere appreciation of his untiring efforts and his unabated zeal in the building of God's kingdom;

"And that we have the utmost confidence in him as a Christian gentleman of the very highest type, and we most heartily commend him to those to whom he may be sent to minister."

The conference accepted the invitation to hold its next session at Coffeeville.

WM. L. ROBINSON, Secretary.

When Southern Methodists without concern ignore the clarion call in behalf of superannuated preachers, they disregard something vital in the faith which they profess.

Any clear-thinking Southern Methodist is requested to study the faces of this group of noble superannuates. There is abundant evidence of age, impaired sight, and other physical infirmity. The only claim made for them, not apparent in the picture, is their deprivations which they in modest pride conceal.

But, withal, note the Christian fortitude of these braves. There is no resentment shown here for neglect in old age by the Church which through the years has profited by their powers and graces. In beautiful resignation they stand by, as the Church's army moves forward, urging their active brothers to press the battle to their utmost endurance.

Some Superannuates of the North Arkansas Conference—1927

What heroes! What noblemen of God! What self-abandon! Shall the Church accept all this from such warriors and leave them the prey of poverty vultures? Shall they, having spent for her their physical prowess to the last residuum, be required also to sacrifice their mental and spiritual ease?

Surely a Church which proclaims tender regard for those in distress will not continue unmindful of the preachers reduced to distress by having worn out themselves preaching this Gospel. If the Church neglects her superannuated preachers, she invites the qustion whether she herself has not reached the time of superannuation.

We can never solve the problem of an adequate support for the Church's used-up preachers until we are willing to "use up" something worth while in doing it.

BOBBY MAKES A SUPREME SACRIFICE.

By P. S. Prior.

It was sports' day at school—the first sports' day for 10-year-old Bobby Duncan, and he was feeling very proud and happy.

First of all, he was going in the hundred-yard race, and Patterson, the captain of the school, had watched him at practice and actually told him he ought to win.

Secondly, the prize was a camera, which Bobby wanted more than anything; and, lastly, his own brave Daddy who had fought in the Great War, and won several honors, had brought mother and little Joan to see the sports.

It was because Daddy was there that he wanted so much to win the race—he felt that he would hate to be beaten. He knew that there was only one boy who might beat him, and that was Jack Fellows—the "rather silly," shy boy—who was standing just in front of him with his mother. Jack's father had been killed at the front. Bobby felt sorry for him, but he was timid and nervous.

"There you are, son," said Daddy, as the bell rang out in preparation for the next race. "Clear off and get ready, and mind you win."

Bobby nodded and ran over to Jack.

"Come on, Jack, it's time for us," he said, and then stopped, for he saw that Jack was shaking with nervousness. He turned away, but heard Jack's mother say:

"Don't be nervous, Jackie. Remember Dad would expect you to win." She smiled at Bobby, and the two boys ran off together.

"Don't you hope you'll get the camera, Jack?" said Bobby.

"Yes," said Jack. "Dad promised me one when he came home, but, you see, he never came back."

"Never came back!" Supposing his Daddy had never come back? Bobby's freckled face was very serious as they took off their sweaters in the big tent.

"Say, Jack," he said, "will your mother buy you one if you don't win?"

"No," said Jack shortly, "we can't afford cameras now," and he walked out of the tent.

They were ready to start, waiting in a long line for the pistol shot, and Bobby was conscious of only two things: Daddy sitting just over there by the shrubbery, and Jack waiting beside him—Jack, whose Daddy never came back.

Then Patterson passed quite near.

"Run as hard as you can, Duncan, and don't stop to look back," he said.

Bang! They were off. Bobby shot ahead at once, running as hard as he could, and he could hear Jack just behind him.

Perhaps Jack would pass him, and then—but Jack didn't, he kept just behind and they were getting near the winning post now. Bobby would win easily. Every one seemed to be shouting and cheering. Why oh, why didn't Jack come along?

He slackened his pace ever such a little, but still Jack wouldn't come up to him.

Then he made up his mind, and just as they were at the post Bobby tripped and fell, and Jack raced past—first!

They walked back to the tent together—Jack flushed and happy—Bobby very quiet.

"You'd have done it easily if you hadn't fallen, Bob," said Jack. "Was it your knee?"

Bobby shook his head and struggled into his sweater. Daddy didn't say anything except, "Better luck next time, Bob. I thought you were going to win it, though."

It was very difficult then to keep back the tears, and the ribbons on Major Duncan's breast looked all misty and funny for a minute or two, but, after a while he felt better and was able to get very excited over the tug-of-war.

Presently Patterson came up.

"I can't think why you fell, Duncan," he said. "You were winning easily."

Bobby nodded.

"I'll try again next year," and that was all he would say.

It was later on, when the prizes were being given away, that Daddy took hold of Bobby's shoulders and turned him round.

"Look at me, son," he said.

Bobby obeyed and looked straight into his father's face.

"Did you fall over anything in the race?"

"No, Daddy," said Bobby truthfully.

"You could have won?"

"Yes, Daddy."

"Jack wanted the camera, didn't he?" Bobby fidgeted.

"Yes, Daddy."

"Would his mother have bought him one if he'd lost?"

"No, Daddy," he said, "she couldn't afford it."

"H'm!" Then Daddy held out his hand. "Shake, Bobby," he said. "You are a true-hearted little gentleman."

And Bobby didn't mind losing after that, because he knew Daddy understood—but, then, brave men like his Daddy always do.—Sunday School Times.

LONG AGO BROUGHT TO DATE.

By Jane Winters.

The story of Sophia Smith might begin after the manner of all stories of bygone days—"Once upon a time." On the other hand, her story cannot be called a tale of long ago, for it is still going on. One of the great women's colleges of the eastern United States—Smith—was made possible because of her foresight, her self-sacrifice, and her love of learning.

In days gone by girls were not supposed to thirst for knowledge. To be sure, they were permitted to learn to read and write, but once having mastered c-a-t, cat, r-a-t, rat, and a few other mysteries of the English language, all their time was spent in learning to set dainty stitches in their samplers, to brew tea from camomile or sage leaves, or to accomplish sundry other domestic achievements, all of which, of course, were extremely good for the little maidens. They were, however, sadly inadequate if the girls happened to have a deep-rooted desire to learn the far-off cities and countries different from their own, or of kings and queens who had lived and died long ago before they themselves were born.

Little Sophia Smith was a girl who was hungry for every crumb of learning which she could get, but alas! these were few. Her family did not have a great deal of money, and so on that account her opportunities for schooling were even more limited. But Sophia had, in addition to her love of learning, a kind and a generous heart. In every way that she could she tried to make the lives of the people about her happier. All her life she was interested in the various educational institutions which were then beginning to spring up in New England. Then the Civil War came, and there were many things to be done not only for her neighbors but for the soldiers as well. She did not have large sums of money to give, but whatever she had she used generously to help those about her.

Sophia Smith lived a quiet, rather uneventful life, at least so it seems to us who know her only from reading the story of her life. In 1861 her brother Austin died, writes S. K. Bolton in "Famous Givers and Their Gifts," and left some money to his sister, Sophia. Miss Smith never thought, however, of using it to fill her own declining years with more comfort and luxuries. The dearest wish of her heart was to found a school in which girls might learn all the things which she had wanted to know. But the sum was not large enough, she felt, to found such an institution as she wished to establish. Nevertheless she clung to her ideal, and a few months before her death made a will in which she gave about four hundred thousand dollars for the founding of Smith College. It required much urging on the part of her friends to persuade Miss Smith to allow the college to bear her name, but she finally agreed. It was dedicated in 1875 at Northampton, Mass., a little town which then was said to be the prettiest town in New England.—Queen's Gardens.

"TIME OUT."

A politician in making a speech commented on the ease with which it was possible to be misunderstood. On one occasion, when a small boy, he had been whipped for telling the absolute truth. "Well, it cured you, all right!" came the emphatic comment from the back of the hall.—Selected.

The native genius of a Lancashire man had carried him to big success in business without much aid of education.

He was asked to distribute the prizes at a school, and made the usual speech of good counsel.

"Now, boys," he said, "always remember that education is a great thing. There's nothing like education. Take arithmetic. Through education we learn that twice two make four, that twice six make twelve, that seven sevens make . . . and there's geography."—Selected.

A revival was raging in a Virginia colored church. The fruits had been considerable. One obdurate soul, however, resisted the efforts of the elder. Called to account for his reluctance, he replied:

"Yo see how it is, Elder. I'se got a problem. I don't see how I'se gwine git mah shirt on ovah mah wings when I gits to Glory."

"Dat ain't yo' problem," retorted the exhorter promptly. "Yo' problem is how is yo' gwine git yo' hat ovah yo' horns."—Everybody's Magazine.

A live-wire salesman rushed up to the home of a doctor in a small village about 3 a. m. and asked him to come at once to a distant town.

The Doctor cranked his flivver and thus drove furiously to their destination.

Upon their arrival the salesman asked, "How much is your fee, doctor?"

"Three dollars," said the physician, in surprise.

"Here you are," said the salesman, handing over the money, "the blamed garage keeper wanted $15 to drive me over when I missed my train."—Keystone Motorist.

CRENSHAW AND GRENADA.

College endowment plan by President J. R. Countiss. He gave a clear-cut statement of the situation and of what is proposed, and the conference unanimously endorsed the plan. We believe the Methodists of Mississippi are going to make Grenada College one of the great educational institutions for women in the church. They can do it.

Lunch was served by the women of Sledge on Wednesday—and it was a good lunch. The women of Crenshaw were to serve the next day, but, much to our regret, we could not stay to enjoy it. Through the kindness of Dr. Countiss, we left shortly after lunch for Grenada in his trusty car, having as fellow-passengers Mrs. Riley and Mr. R. M. Weaver, who had spoken in behalf of the superannuate endowment campaign. His address was so impressive that the conference adopted a resolution requesting him to furnish his address to all the church papers for publication. We hope he will do it, for the good of the cause.

We greatly enjoyed our visit to Crenshaw. Brother Jones is an ideal host, and the good people of Crenshaw and Sledge maintain the best traditions for hospitality.

After as delightful a trip as we have ever had, we arrived at Grenada late in the afternoon and were the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Countiss for the night. The night session of the Grenada District Conference was given over to worship, the sermon being preached by Rev. J. M. Bradley. It was a good sermon—a very good one, in fact. One statement the preacher made has given us a good deal of food for thought—a statement to the effect that the reason that the world is not yet a Christian world is due to the fact that no church has yet proved itself to be big enough for the job of making it Christian. What a tragedy!

Rev. E. S. Lewis knows all about the presiding elder business and about how to run a district conference, and Rev. J. H. Holder, the pastor at Grenada, knows all about entertaining a lot of delegates and visitors. So there was nothing to mar the pleasure of the occasion.

Thursday morning the elder graciously gave the editor of the Advocate an opportunity to speak, as he did also the representatives of the other interests—Mrs. Riley for the Orphanage, Judge Foreman for Millsaps College, and Dr. Countiss for Grenada, and Mr. Weaver for the superannuate cause. Again the plan for endowing Grenada College was unanimously adopted by a rising vote. The conference also passed a resolution "instructing" Mr. Weaver to furnish his address in behalf of the superannuates to the church press for publication. It so happens that we have not had an opportunity of hearing Rev. A. Y. Brown speak in behalf of the Golden Cross enrollment at any of the district conferences—but we know him well enough to know that the cause has been well represented. We regret that we could not stay for the devotional address by Rev. S. L. Pope.

Special interest attached to this session of the Grenada District Conference in view of the fact that it was the last that will be held in the present historic church, which has stood for perhaps three-quarters of a century. Ground has already been broken for a new church plant, to cost about $80,000, and it is expected that the new church will be ready for use within a few months.

We left Grenada Thursday a little after noon, reaching New Orleans at 7:50 p. m. We had planned for a big day's work on Friday—but tooth trouble developed over night and a visit to the dentist early Friday morning and the extraction of the offending member "purty nigh ruint" the day. Anyhow, we worked through a stack of mail—and wished for the morrow.

We appreciate very greatly indeed what these brethren and friends have done in circulating the Advocate. With the extension of the offer for one month more—until June 1—we trust many others will do likewise.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We thank Rev. C. C. Clark, of Lucedale, Miss., for a list of nine subscriptions recently sent in.

Rev. T. L. Oakes is now receiving his mail at Becker, Miss., a new post office. His former address was Amory, Miss., R. F. D. No. 1.

Mr. H. C. Norsworthy, Hattlesburg, Miss., in New Orleans last week on business, paid the Advocate office a greatly appreciated call.

Rev. Randolph Saucier, pastor, closed a good meeting at the Back Bay church on April 15, in which he was assisted by Rev. Charles Assaf.

We express our thanks to Dr. Cleanth Brooks, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Alexandria, La., for a club of seven subscriptions recently sent in.

Mrs. Percy Bell, of Greenville, Miss., has been awarded the first prize in the annnual competition sponsored by the Women's Clubs of Mississippi for her poem, "While Beauty Waiks."

Rev. F. J. McCoy, pastor of the First Methodist Church, West Monroe, La., has our thanks for two subscriptions recently sent in. Brother McCoy has received fifty-nine members since Conference, and all the work of the church moves forward.

Prof. J. B. Berry, associate professor of Religious Education at Millsaps College, has been elected head of the department of Religious Education at Birmingham-Southern College. He will be succeeded at Millsaps by Prof. R. L. Nesbit.

In the communication from Rev. J. M. Morse in a recent issue of the Advocate concerning the superannuate endowment fund, in which reference was made to Brother Perritt, the initials should have been H. B., instead of H. T., as they appeared.

The meeting at Rayville, La., in which the pastor, Rev. J. A. Alford, is being assisted by Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of San Bernardino, Calif., is making good progress. All the churches of Rayville are co-operating. The music is in charge of Mr. C. Stark.

The commencement sermon for Whitworth College will be preached on May 20 by Rev. T. M. Brownlee, pastor of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., and the commencement address will be delivered on May 22 by Rev. Ira F. Hawkins, of Huntsville, Ala.

Rev. A. E. Barrett, who was granted the superannuate relation at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference, is now making his home at Tickfaw, La. He has contracted for a little farm, where he hopes to be able to make a support for himself and family.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, general evaugelist, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call last week. He recently held a three weeks' meeting in Benton, Ky., with gracious results. He is assisted in his evangelist work by Mr. Virgil P. Cassaday as leader of the music.

Evangelistic services are announced to begin at the Leakesville Methodist church, Leakesville, Miss., on Sunday, May 6, with services twice daily through May 20. The preaching will be done by Rev. S. W. Bryant, and the music will be in charge of Mr. John O. Bryant.

The great new Sunday school plant of the Court Street Methodist Church, Lynchburg, Va., which cost about $100,000, will be ready for occupancy early in June. This great achievement was wrought under the leadership of Dr. E. K. Means, fromerly of the Louisiana and the Mississippi Conferences.

Rev. Victor G. Clifford has received fifty-six members into the First Methodist Church, Gulfport, Miss., since Conference, twenty-seven by vows or baptism, and twenty-nine by certificates. On the second Sunday in April, the attendance at Sunday school was 792; at the morning service, 624, and at the evening service, 434.

We enjoyed the privilege of meeting at Crenshaw, Miss., Brother L. P. Bailey, of Coldwater, Miss., who has two preacher sons—one a graduate of Millsaps College, and the other a graduate of Hendrix College. He has been a subscriber to the Advocate since 1891. He and his wife celebrated thier goiden wedding on Jan. 23.

Rev. J. A. Moody, a superannuate member of the Texas Conference, formerly of Louisiana, died in Houston, Tex., on April 1. He was 66 years old. He was connected with the Louisiana Child and Home Finding Society at one time for a period of ten years. Rev. John L. Williams, the present secretary of the Society, assisted in the funeral.

A very successful revival meeting was held at Eunice, La., beginning on April 15 and continuing ten days. The preaching was done by the pastor, Rev. I. T. Reams, and devotional meetings were led by Professsor J. Andrus, of the high school faculty. Brother Reams and Prof. Andrus will hold a meeting at Basile, La., the latter part of May.

Mr. L. L. Williams, lay leader at Fiorien, La., sends us the distressing news that his pastor, Rev. C. B. Powell, has had to take his eleven-year-old daughter, Mary, to a hospital in Shreveport, desperately ill from a stroke of paralysis following an attack of measles. Earnest prayer will be made by many for the recovery of the stricken child.

It is estimated that 900,000 people are doomed to death by starvation in the famine-stricken section of China. Unless prompt help is given, another 900,000 will also starve to death. The National Campaign Committee for China Famine Relief, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York, is making an appeal for $10,000,000 with which to meet these terrible needs.

The many friends of Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Cunningham, of Rayne, La., will sympathize deeply with them in the sorrow caused by the tragic death of their little daughter, Jane, who was accidentally killed by an automobile on last Saturday. The funeral services were conducted last Sunday by Dr. Briscoe Carter, assisted by Dr. R. H. Wynn and Rev. W. H. Jordan.

The commencement sermon at Southern Methodist University will be preached by Dr. Forney Hutchinson, of St. Luke's Church, Oklahoma City, Sunday, June 3, and the commencement address will be made by President J. H. Reynolds, of Hendrix College, Tuesday, June 5. Beginning June 11, the Summer School of Theology will continue for ten days. Among the speakers on this program are Bishop E. H. Hughes and Dr. Forney Hutchinson.

A most successful revival has just closed at the First Methodist Church of Monroe, La. The preaching was done by Dr. T. D. Ellis, of Louisville, Ky., while the singing was in charge of Rev. J. B. Gambling, of Grand Cane, La. Dr. Ellis preached two truly great and inspiring sermons each day, and Brother Gambling delighted the large congregations with his singing. About sixty members will be received into the church as the result of this meeting.

By an oversight, the name of the editor of the Advocate appeared in connection with "Important Notice Concerning Seashore Divinity School" in last week's Advocate. The notice was properly signed by Rev. H. M. Ellis, who is secretary. The notice was addressed, as is customary in all communications, to the editor by name, and it inadvertently got into the types. The editor is, however, a director of the School, and he hopes that the session this year will be one of the greatest yet held.

We had the pleasure of meeting at the Sardis District Conference at Crenshaw, Miss., last week, Brother W. C. Sturdivant, a steward of the Mount Vernon church on the Tyro charge for fifty-two years. He is advanced in years, but hale and hearty and interested in the work of the church. We also had the pleasure of meeting Brother M. L. Childress, a steward of the Free Springs church on the Tyro circuit for forty-two years and a Sunday school superintendent for thirty years. He was a leader in the building of what is said to be one of the finest rural churches in the connection, at Free Springs, which cost $9,000.

The death on Friday of last week of Mr. D. Beach Carre brought great sorrow to many friends in New Orleans and throughout the South. Mr. Carre was prominent in business and social circles, and was an active member of the First Methodist Church of this city. He was a member of a family that has been prominent in the life of New Orleans for many years. He was a brother of Dr. Henry Beach Carre, whose recent death was such a shock to his family and friends. The funeral was held Saturday afternoon, conducted by his pastor, Rev. John Brandon Peters, with interment in Metairie cemetery. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to his sorrowing family and loved ones.

At the recent session of the Jackson District Conference held in Glendale church, Jackson, Miss., Rev. H. G. Hawkins, in making some statement about affairs at Whitworth College, referred to the fact that although at the close of the 1925-26 session the preparatory department, which had been in continuous operation for sixty-eight years, was discontinued, and although at the close of the 1926-27 session the junior and senior classes had been discontinued, still the enrollment of students in the college classes has been kept up to the figure previously prevailing, totaling more than 200. Reference was made also to the nice condition of the grounds and buildings, several thousand dollars having been spent in repairs and improvements. Also, the present session of 1927-28 is the first session for several years in which the school has been self-supporting. The students' fees, the income from endowment, and Conference assessment, will be more than enough to take care of the expenses of the session. A vote of appreciation was given President Hawkins by the conference for his work at Whitworth.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

McCoy and West Monroe.

At West Monroe Methodist Church, McCoy has made a splendid impression. His work has been such as to place that charge in the forefront of the Methodist congregations in this district. He has received nearly one hundred members during the time of his pastorate; his salary was given a substantial increase over that of last year; his Sunday school has broken all previous attendance records, and his congregations have been the largest in the history of the church.

On Easter Sunday, the offering for our Orphanage was more than $400. The finances of the church are now on a better basis than ever before. The Board recently re-financed in the Building and Loan Association, which lowers the monthly payments, making them less burdensome, and at the same time arranging for some new money to be expended in repairs and re-decorating for their practically new building.

With the splendid spirit of our congregation at this point; the able leadership of Brother McCoy; the rapidly growing city on the west bank of the Ouachita will show great gains for Methodism this year and in the years to come. We look for mighty achievement along all lines with the combination we now have in West Monroe.

REV. T. H. MILLS TO REPRESENT MEMORIAL HOME.

Dear Dr. Carley: The three Annual Conferences that are supporting the Memorial Home passed a resolution during their annual sessions last fall, granting the president of the Memorial Home privilege to place in the field men and women to represent the Memorial Home and solicit funds for the same.

Rev. T. H. Mills, who formerly worked for the Home for a short while, did such splendid work that we asked him to take up the work again. He has agreed to do so, and we have assigned him for the present to the Mississippi Conference. We will appreciate very much indeed any assistance that the brethren may give to Brother Mills, especially since at this time we are very much in need of funds.

On April 20, 1928, at his home near Oakland, Miss., JESSE B. MASSEY died. The reading of the above lines will bring sorrow to many people here and in other places. The pastors of the North Mississippi Conference who have had the privilege of being here will know what a great loss this is to this charge and his family. Mr. Massey was in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and had lived here, and near here, for the most of his life. In early life he joined the Methodist church, and ever after he served his church in an acceptable manner. He was a Christian all his long life, for he was reared in a Christian home; his father was a local Methodist preacher and his mother was a devout Christian, and it was just the following of the training he received in this Christian home that made him the great Christian character that he was. He lived as perfect a Christian life as we rarely ever knew. He served his church as steward and Sunday school superintendent, all of which he did well. He was a friend to all people that needed help, and he will be sadly missed here, for his great heart was always ready to respond when there was a call for help. He was successful in his business, and with it all he was always the same humble Christian. His home life was beautiful and his hospitality was great, and many people can testify to the fact that he lived a good life. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Sallie Frost Massey, who is following on to meet him in the world above. He is survived by two children, one son, J. A. Massey, and Mrs. R. L. Mathews, of Oakland; two grandchildren, Margaret Mathews, of Oakland, and Bonnie Massey, of Memphis, Tenn. He is also survived by two brothers, S. M. Massey, of Oakland, and Drew Massey, of Oklahoma. The funeral was conducted at the home by Rev.H. N. McKibben, his pastor, assisted by Rev. James Porter, a former pastor, and Rev. H. Y. McCaleb, of the Presbyterian church. The floral offerings were beautiful, and the great number of friends attending was an indication of the esteem in which he was held by them. His remains were interred in the Oakland cemetery, where he sleeps until the resurrection day comes. May God's richest blessings be with the sorrowing family.

JAMES PORTER.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God, in his divine wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst that splendid young man, WILLIAM THOMPSON, and to lay this deep srorow upon his parents and our dear friends, Dr. and Mrs. C. L. Thompson; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Missionary Society of the Wesson Methodist church, extend to them our tenderest sympathy and heartfelt sorrow.

2. That we earnestly pray that sufficient strength be given them to bear their great affliction and point them to him who is so willing to help bear their grief.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Society and a copy be sent to the Wesson Enterprise and the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed: Mrs. J. A. Boyd, Mrs. Perry Bagley, Mrs. W. L. Little, Committee.

MRS. ROSA PEAVY WARREN, a faithful member of the Methodist church, departed this life March 23, 1928. She had been a member of the Pine Ridge church for many years, and was loved by all who knew her. Her life was an opened book, manifesting beautiful Christian virtues, only as one could do by believing and trusting and serving their Lord, as she did. She was devoted to her husband and children, her friends, and her church, always anxious and willing to do her full part in carrying on the program of the church, and to make her friends happy, and her home comfortable. She regularly waited upon the ordinances of the church, going with her husband and children to preaching, Sunday school, prayer meeting, and revival services. She seemed most happy when she knew she had won a soul for Christ and a friend for herself. She was a mother of ten children, and leaves to mourn her passing a husband, and nine children, four girls and five boys, besides a host of other relatives and friends. May God's benedictions abide with the husband and children, and may they some day be joined in an eternal world of glory where there is no death or separation.

B. D. WATSON.

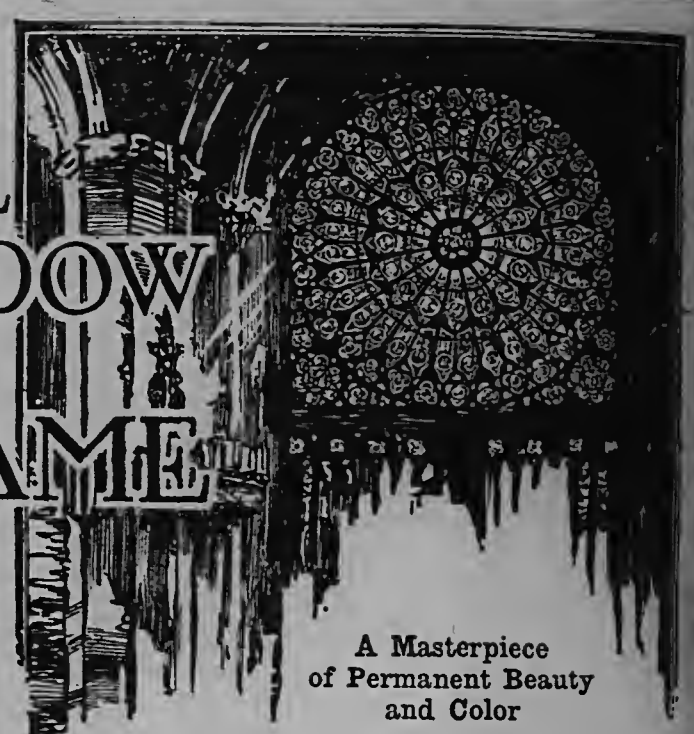
The BEAUTIFUL ROSE WINDOW of NOTRE DAME



A Masterpiece of Permanent Beauty and Color

THE Famous Rose Window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris is a work of infinite beauty and splendor. It is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. The color of gorgeous gems and precious stones are wrought into this magnificent spectacle for the admiration of passing thousands through all the years. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the beauty and color of these jewels become visible. Could a more beautiful monumental stone be found anywhere than this?

Winnsboro Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable mineral known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society was held at Central Church, Meridian, April 10-13. This session was one long to be remembered in that it was our Jubilee meeting, celebrating fifty years of organized work and marvelous growth. Special honor was given our pioneers, who, in their humble beginnings, launched a work in our Conference that has grown to proportions undreamed of by these strong and courageous women who had the vision of the possibilities of Methodist womanhood under the leadership of God. It was a privilege, pleasure and an inspiration to the conference to have had seven of these honor guests with us, and the younger members of the conference value the rich heritage that is theirs in the lives and labors of these choice souls who have given the best years of their lives to the work of the Master.

It was a happy occasion on the first night when a reception was given the delegates in the basement of Central Church, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and a huge birthday cake, decorated with fifty candles, adorned the table in the center of the room. To Mrs. E. D. Jones, of Carlyle, Miss., was given the honor of lighting the candles, and Mrs. Sallie Smylie Ferguson, another honored pioneer, was asked to cut the cake.

Miss Bettie Hughes, of Daleville, who represented our conference in China for a number of year, was a blessing and benediction to the conference.

We were indeed fortunate in having as our Council guest Miss Julia Lake Stevens, Council Superintendent of Young People's Work. This was her first visit to our conference, and she won the hearts of all present by her charming personality and rare consecration. Her addresses on "Our Work in Japan" and "The Young People's Work" and her presence throughout the conference were a great inspiration. The valuable help that she gave in the conference sessions cannot be overestimated.

The presence of Mrs. Velma Maynor, missionary to Korea, added greatly to the spiritual value of the meetings. Her earnestness, efficiency, and consecration made her messages so vital.

We greatly appreciated the messages and presence of Mrs. Nellie N. Somerville, State President of the W. C. T. U.

The noon Bible hour conducted by Dr. A. F. Watkins, at which time he used the subjects, "God's Purpose," "God's Day," and "Our Relation to This Purpose and Day," meant a great deal to the conference.

The exquisite gift flowers that adorned the church each day brought their messages of joy and beauty.

The music, under the able leadership of Mrs. J. D. Tucker, organist of Central Church, was beautiful, inspiring and greatly appreciated.

The drive to Wesley House was a treat, and brought the work close to the hearts of the women of our conference.

Mrs. L. W. Alford, our efficient president, presided throughout the sessions of the conference, and her messages and the reports from the other officers showed that the organization has made marvelous gains during the past year.

The members of the local auxiliaries spared nothing to make those few days a season of joy and helpfulness, and their royal welcome and gracious hospitality will be treasured in the memory of all who were privileged to be there. As the years go by we shall always look back with great pleasure to our Jubilee meeting in the beautiful and progressive city of Meridian.

Recording Secretary.

ZONE NO. 1, GREENWOOD DISTRICT.

The fourteenth meeting of the first zone, Greenwood District, composed of Marks, Lambert, and Crowder Missionary Societies, met in Marks, March 21, at 2:30 o'clock, at the library. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. G. C. Jones, zone chairman. The devotional was given by Rev. M. E. Scott, of Lambert, who used a part of the first chapter of Romans as the basis for his remarks. Good reports were had from all the auxiliaries, showing that our work is still going forward. Numbers in attendance: Marks, 18; Lambert, 19, and Crowder, 7.

A very interesting Jubilee program was rendered by the Lambert auxiliary, led by Mrs. M. E. Scott, in such a delightful way that made all present feel uplifted and glad to enjoy the privilege of being there. Mrs. Madison Wells gave, in her talented and unique way, "The Jubilee Handbook," stressing the five objectives for the year. Mrs. R. E. Chapman gave very interestingly "Stewardship" and what it would mean to our church if we but practice it. The Voice was ably discussed by Mrs. T. F. Durham. The Young People's Work was given by Mrs. M. E. Scott, showing the lack of training we are giving our young people and stressing the fact that the young people are the powerhouse or manufacturing plant of our church, and how necessary it is to direct their activities. Music was rendered by Mrs. A. T. Mason, saxaphone, and Mrs. Gordon Cooper, piano—two numbers; and Mrs. Cooper sang very impressively, "His Eye is on the Sparrow," Mrs. Mason accompanying.

The meeting was held in the beautiful library at Marks, which added much to the occasion. The hostess Society served delicious refreshments in their usual hospitable way. Crowder was chosen as the place for the next meeting and Marks giving the program.

THE FINE ART OF LIVING.

The art of life consists in taking each event which befalls us with a contented mind, confident of good. This makes us grow younger as we grow older, for youth and joy come from the soul to the body more than from the body to the soul. With this method and art and temper of life, we live, though we may be dying. We rejoice always, though in the midst of sorrows; and possess all things, though destitute of everything.—James Freeman Clarke.

In a recent election in Japan, the first to occur under the Manhood Suffrage Law, about twenty Christians were candidates for the House of Repsentatives, and every one of them was elected. Both missionary and Japanese leaders declare that although there are only about 300,000 Christians in Japan, including some 100,000 Roman Catholics, the influence of Christianity is out of all proportion to the actual number of church members. Christian influence is especially strong among the educated classes, where one in every hundred is a professed Christian.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Last month our missionary offering was the largest we have ever had, and we are hoping that we will have a still larger offering this month. We have already heard from the regular faithful ones and the offering looks good; now we are ready to hear from those who send in occasionally, and from that large group of schools who do not send in at all.

We have heard from five Sunday schools from their Sunday School Day observance and five of them are on the Honor Roll, most of them with a very much larger offering than ever before.

From the Galloway Memorial Church bulletin:

Sunday School Day.

"Our General Conference has set aside one Sunday in the year to be observed by all churches in Southern Methodism as Sunday School Day, at which time the opportunities and needs of the Sunday school shall be presented to the whole congregation and an offering taken to aid in carrying on the work in each Conference. This year, April 29 is to be observed as Sunday School Day. A most interesting service, in the form of a pageant, is being prepared and will be presented in this church on next Sunday evening.

An Interesting Workers' Council Meeting.

"On last Wednesday evening an unusual crowd gathered at the hour of the mid-week prayer service. A special service had been planned as a surprise to the pastor and the Sunday school superintendent. Dr. B. E. Mitchell presided, and Mrs. H. R. Shands stated the purpose of the meeting. Mrs. F. L. VanAlstine and Dr. Spragins gave interesting reports from the Conference-wide Sunday School conference recently held in Hattiesburg. The leaders of the various departments in our Sunday school gave reports which showed an increase in attendance and a splendid quality of work being done. The period of evangelism was observed in the school with gratfiying results. All the departments expressed appreciation of the improvement recently made and the added equipment. A word of exhortation was given by Mr. A. B. Campbell that the membership of our church be more loyal to all of the work of the church. Special musical numbers were rendered by Miss Magnolia Simpson, and by the male quartet. About one hundred and fifty were present at the service, and at the close there were many expressions of appreciation of the interesting and helpful program, and the desire that similar services be held in the near future."

The Standard Training School at Canton was called off. This was a source of great disappointment to us, and we trust that the way will open for a school at a later date. We were deprived of their co-operation with us in the Jackson training school, and then lost this opportunity for service.

When you read this we will be in the midst of our school at Biloxi. We trust that we will have a great school there. We are hoping that it will be bigger and better than ever before, that there will be more students and, if at all possible, a finer spirit.

All is in readiness at Laurel for the Standard School to begin. This is good news. Will not all who are interested in the ongoing of religious education lend a hand with your faith and prayers for a great school here? The people seem to be so interested and I am anxious for all they hope for to be accomplished.

While in Laurel last, we had the opportunity to see the plans of their annex. It is a good set of plans, and I hope the way will be wide open for them to build this building. It will prove a most usable and useful building, and it will, I am sure, build the kingdom there.

We need you to send in the Sunday School Day offerings and to pray earnestly for us, the work, and for those who are aiding us in the work.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBRERS.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Last Sunday the Shaw school observed Sunday School Day. The offering amounted to $20. We are grateful to pastor, superintendent and teachers for this good work. In remitting money, please state Sunday School Day offering, that we may know how to enter the amount. Orders for programs are coming some better since the weather is warming up. There is one reason why a number of the schools are slow and indifferent as to the observance of Sunday School Day. You will hear it said, "Here is the Mission Special, Grenada College, Millsaps, Superannuate Endowment, when will we ever stop?" The faithful, loyal lovers of the Lord are not planning to stop until the Lord says stop.

More than fifty of the workers in the Greenwood and Price Memorial churches gathered at a banquet recently to consider the matter of holding a standard training school some time in the near future. Rev. L. P. Wasson, Rev. J. H. Felts, Mr. Ed. Taylor, and the writer made brief speeches on the subject of training leaders. The request for the school was practically unanimous. The possibilities for development are well nigh boundless at Greenwood. Mr. Taylor is making every effort to have a trained leadership to work with him in building the kingdom of God. Verily the light of a new day is shining upon this fine group of workers.

The folder, announcing the Conference school to be held at Grenada, June 4-9, is being mailed to pastors, teachers, and other interested workers. We have asked that a notice be put in the local papers, that a poster be placed in the Sunday school rooms, and that personal work be done that we may have at least two hundred and fifty in attendance at this school. Since the printer finished the job, Miss Bruce McDonald, of Columbia, S. C., has been substituted for Mrs. Clay E. Smith for Junior Materials and Methods.

Rev. R. G. Lord, District Superintendent of the Greenville District, planned three institutes in succession, Leland, Duncan, and Lula. The attendance and interest were very gratifying. More than one hundred and fifty workers came together to discuss the problems that constantly arise and to lay hold upon the goals set for the district. Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, Rev. J. E. Cunningham, Rev. H. D. Suydam, Rev. J. J. Garner, Mrs. W. H. Ratliff, Mrs. E. H. Rawles, Rev. J. L. Neill, Mr. Shelby Carlton, Dr. H. F. Brooks, Rev. W. W. Woollard, and others rendered fine service on the different occasions. The number of schools asked to observe Sunday School Day, 30, is more than half promised; the number of volunteer teachers who have been requested to teach a class in the training work went beyond the goal for this item. We asked for ten and we have the promise of fourteen who will do this work. It looks as though every goal for the Greenville District will be reached. The reports from the seventeen schools represented indicate progress. In every case where the schools are following the program of work, the progress is constant and definite. The majority of the schools of the district are using the program of work. With a united effort we could have every school controlled by our church following the plans given by the General Board. Rev. R. G. Lord, District Superintendent, and Mrs. Ratliff, Elementary Superintendent, have done most excellent work in these institutes and will follow up the fine work that is under way.

Brother Mohler will co-operate with Rev. S. H. Caffey of the Grenada District, Rev. C. A. Northington of the Columbus District, and Rev. C. A. Parks of the Aberdeen District in holding similar institutes by the latter part of May. The writer will work with Rev. A. T. Clanton of the Sardis District, Rev. J. D. Wroten of the Greenwood District, and Rev. A. T. McIlwain of the Corinth District in holding institutes.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Sunday morning I was in Lecompte, and at night was in Bunkie. The pastor, Rev. H. B. Thomason, of Lecompte, we regret to say, is on the sick list. Brother Hoffpauir, of Bunkie, was answering a call to a sick friend in Shreveport.

Monday night found us en route to the Monroe District Conference. I reached the district parsonage about 10 p. m. To my great surprise the new presiding elder Rev. E. C. Gunn, had put about $3000 in improvements on his parsonage, and in many respects it is the best furnished district parsonage in the Conference.

Tuesday, in company with the presiding elder and Dr. Goodrich, of Shreveport, we reached Bastrop for the opening of the district conference. Rev. L. W. Smart preached the opening sermon, and during the afternoon and night sessions many important items of district work were considered. The following Sunday school district officers were elected: District Secretary, Mr. I. A. Hearne; Elementary Superintendent, Mrs. M. S. Monk; Adolescent Superintendent, Miss Alice Henry; Adult Superintendent, Rev. J. W. Faulk; Missions, Mr. W. D. Harrison. Rev. L. W. Smart, member of the Conference Board, was elected Sunday School Day promoter.

Dr. Goodrich preached at the evening hour. The new presiding elder, Rev. E. C. Gunn, and the pastor at Bastrop, Rev. Ellis Smith, were co-operating in such a way as to have one of the greatest district conferences in the history of the Monroe District. The writer was a guest in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Billington. This layman is a druggist in Bastrop, but was brought up in the Sunday school at old Felicity Street Church in New Orleans in the days of the Parkers and Carters.

Rev. W. S. Henry, pastor of Winsboro, announced at the district conference the date and faculty for his great Standard Training School, June 3-8—Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Harper, Mrs. R. E. Smith, and Rev. A. K. McLellan.

Mr. G. T. Dawson, superintendent of the Lisbon Sunday school, writes: "Am writing for 'C' type Wall Chart for our Sunday school. We have an enrollment of seventy-nine, and an average attendance of fifty-five in our school."

Mr. Leon Campbell, superintendent of White Chapel Sunday school, sends us a program of his sub-district meeting to be held in Opelousas on the fifty Sunday. He is also preparing for Rev. J. O. Kim's visit.

Miss Ella K. Hooper, of Houma, writes: "I was disappointed at not being able to attend the conference in Alexandria this month. I hear that it was a splendid one. I had a talk with our presiding elder and the pastor of the church here in Houma, and they have decided to work for the Standard Training School again this year. You may remember that it had to be put off last summer on account of the flood and other conditions. About the only date that the school buildings will be available will be the week beginning Aug. 20, 1928."

Miss Cassie Moss, superintendent of the Jonesville Sunday school, writes for Sunday School Day programs; she states that they will observe Sunday School Day on June 24.

Mrs. Byron Harwell, who has helped us in so many of our Standard Training Schools, has been called to the bedside of her mother in California, on account of a stroke of paralysis.

There is one simple yet inexpensive way to reduce inflammation of swollen toe joints and help get them down to normal and that is to apply Moone's Emerald Oil night and morning.

Ask any first class druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and refuse to accept anything in its place. It is such a highly concentrated preparation that two ounces lasts a long time and furthermore if one bottle of Emerald Oil does not give you complete satisfaction you can have your money refunded.

Special note: People who want to reduce swollen or varicose veins should get a bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at once. Applied night and morning as directed they will quickly notice an improvement which will continue until the veins and bunches are reduced to normal.

The Holy Communion

THERE is no time in the Christian's life when he comes into closer and more intimate relationship with the Divine than when he sits at the Lord's table. Why not approach its celebration with unalloyed joy; discarding all fears, thinking only of the wonderful privilege?

"The Sanitary" INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION Cups

It is now generally recognized that the Sanitary Individual cup increases the attendance because it removes all fear of uncleanliness, and promotes a deeper reverence in the communicant. The Sanitary Communion Outfit Company offers an improved and satisfactory outfit throughout, including the highly polished beautiful mahogany tray here shown, which eliminates all noise, is lighter and more easily handled than others and is more in keeping with the furniture of the church than a tray of any other material.

MINDEN DISTRICT NEWS.

Union Organized.

On Sunday, April 22, an all-day rally was held in Rochelle, for the purpose of organizing a sub-district union in that section of the district. The program began with the morning service, with a splendid and very fitting sermon by Rev. J. T. Harris, pastor at Rochelle. Lunch was served, picnic style, at noon, by the ladies of Rochelle. After lunch, the rally proper began with a short devotional led by Mrs. Rufus Rogers, president of the League there.

Following the devotional, four departmental classes were held as follows:

First—Mrs. J. T. Harris.
Second—Mary Searles
Third—Chas. N. White.
Fourth—Louise Laird.

After classes the young folks assembled again and were favored with a vocal duet. Then followed four short talks on:

The Chapter—Mrs. Harris.
The Union—Mrs. Harris.
The District—Miss Searles.
The Conference—Mr. White.

This being the conclusion of the program, the business of the organization was taken up by the district secretary. Officers elected are:

President, Miss Carmen Moffett, Selma, La.; Vice-President, Mrs. S. S. Holladay, Standard, La.; Secretary, Mrs. Rufus Rogers, Rochelle, La.; Treasurer, Mr. Willie Verne Hall, Winnfield, La.

The special objective for the coming month was that of organizing new chapters, and re-organizing old ones. A committee was appointed to bring in suggestions for a name for the union at the next meeting, to be held May 27, at 2:30, in Selma, in honor of the newly-elected president.

The chapters represented were: Colfax, 12; Selma, 8; Standard, 8; Winnfield, 10; Rochelle, 16. There were also six from Alexandria who were most welcome. We were most fortunate in having our State president, Mr. Charles White of Alexandria, with us, and hope that he will be able to attend future meetings of this union. We regret that the field secretary, Miss Langford, was prevented, because of illness, from being present.

Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Harris are surely doing a wonderful work in Rochelle, and we feel that under their efficient leadership, this section of the district is going to grow and succeed in all lines of League work.

MARY SEARLES,
District Secretary.

Cute in a Baby—Awful at Three —and it's Dangerous

by Ruth Brittain

Thumb sucking does look sweet in a baby, but it is disgusting in the three-year-old and sometimes it hangs on until fifteen or sixteen! The habit may cause an ill-formed mouth or induce adenoids; and it always interferes with digestion. Pinning the sleeve over the hand; attaching mittens, or putting on cardboard cuffs, which prevent bending the arms at the elbows, are some of the ways to stop the habit.

Another bad habit—irregularity in bowel action—is responsible for weak bowels and constipation in babies. Give the tiny bowels an opportunity to act at regular periods each day. If they don't act at first, a little Fletcher's Castoria will soon regulate them. Every mother should keep a bottle of it handy to use in case of colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, loss of sleep, or when baby is cross and feverish. Its gentle influence over baby's system enables him to get full nourishment from his food, helps him gain, strengthens his bowels.

Castoria is purely vegetable and harmless—the recipe is on the wrapper. Physicians have prescribed it for over 30 years. With each package, you get a valuable book on Motherhood. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper so you'll get the genuine.

ABERDEEN DISTRICT METHODIST MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Aberdeen District Methodist Ministers' Association met at Houlka, Wednesday afternoon, April 18. Rev. J. J. Baird, the president, being absent, Rev. E. M. Shaw, vice president, presided. After song No. 216, "Count Your Blessings," was sung, Rev. J. W. York led in prayer.

Brother Shaw announced the following program committee for May: W. C. Matton, S. M. Butts, and L. B. Wimberly.

The following program was rendered:

Subject: "Christian Character."

1. "What Are the Essential Elements in Developing Christian Character?" W. R. Hammontree.

2. "The Moral Element," W. R. Hammontree.

3. "The Spiritual Element," W. M. Young, J. W. York.

The discussions were very interesting and helpful.

Before the program proper was entered into, the Association enjoyed an interesting informal service. Rev. W. M. Young took the witness stand, and out of the abundance of our ignorance some of the young preachers propounded to him questions on certain points of doctrine. At least one or two of us were so dense that we never quite understotod the terms he used, such as the difference between sinfulness and sin. But somehow or other, while he was talking, we felt our hearts strangely warmed, and we could understand quite well the spirit of his discussion. Long may Brother Young live and teach and preach.

The May meeting will be held at Woodland. It is earnestly hoped that every preacher in the district will be present, as well as any one else who may desire to come. Moreover, come to Woodland Thursday, May 17. The chickens will be ripe.

R. T. HOLLINGSWORTH,
Secretary.

FROM ABBEVILLE, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: Thinking a note from Abbeville would be of interest to the brethren, I am writing.

We have just closed a good meeting at Abbeville. I had with me Rev. J. O. Hanes, general evangelist, of Birmingham, Ala., and Mr. H. M. Scott, of Milan, Tenn., as song leader. They make a good team. We had two weeks' meeting, closing out on Easter Sunday. We received on Easter twenty-three on profession of faith; and baptized two adults and one baby. The church was greatly helped spiritually.

Brothers Hanes and Scott are fine help in a meeting. They are deeply spiritual and sympathetic.

All honor and praise to Him who loved us and gave himself for us that we might have life and have it more abundantly.

J. R. ROY, P. C.

FROM HOLCOMB, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just closed a revival meeting in the Methodist church here at Holcomb. We had a fine meeting. At the close of the meeting Sunday night, at least seventy-five people came and said they had been blessed, and pledged to live a more consecrated life. Received only one into the church on profession of faith. One fine young man joined, with others to follow soon.

I have never held a meeting where the pastor had the co-operation of the people as we did here. We began on Wednesday night, preaching two sermons a day for the next week, closing out on Sunday night, the 22nd. There are very few people of our town not already members of the church, but we had a great revival in the church, for which we are grateful to God. The pastor did the preaching.

THE SUNFLOWER MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

Dear Dr. Carley: Since my last communication the Sunflower Ministerial Association has had three meetings, one at Drew, the second at Price Memorial in Greenwood, and the third at Itta Bena. This association is composed of the preachers of the Greenwood District, which district lies almost wholly between the Sunflower and the Yazoo rivers. This district is in the heart of the great Mississippi Delta. I suppose that it would be hard to find a more fertile section in the wide world. The lower part of the district was hurt last year by the flood, so this year finds our people impoverished by the overflow and not in so good shape as they were last year. Our people, however, have not lost their courage. This is a wonderful people. When calamities strike them, they just buckle up their belts a little tighter and set to work with larger determination to wrest success out of their failures.

At our Drew meeting Rev. J. A. George, our pastor at Moorhead, brought us our monthly sermon from the text, "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." Brother George speaks out of his heart to his hearers, and, when he had finished his sermon, he had left a message in our hearts. Brother George has had wonderful success in revival work. He is very much sought after for revival meetings. After the sermon the ladies of the Drew church served us a great dinner in the new Drew Community House. The pastor-host, Rev. E. E. McKeithen, looked after everybody in fine style. The people in Drew, and everywhere else, as far as I know, love McKeithen.

One of the pleasant features of our Drew meeting was the attendance of Sister John Beck. She and her lamented husband used always to attend our Annual Conferences. They, with that princely layman, Mr. George Stokely, who was also present, could, with the other good people of the Drew church, be counted on to uphold their pastor and support every worthy cause that came their way.

Our next meeting was held in Price Memorial, the second Methodist church in Greenwood. Price Memorial is named for the late Dr. Price, of our Conference. Dr. Price was a great preacher and a sweet-spirited Christian gentleman. He did a great work in his day pioneering in this delta country. Our monthly sermon was preached by Rev. H. D. Suydam, of Swiftown. His subject was "Prayer." Some of us had never heard Brother Suydam preach before, but all of us want to hear him again. He brought us a most helpful message. Rev. O. W. Dowdle, pastor-host, is one of our youngest men. His members love him and he stands high with the people in this district. He entertained us most delightfully in the homes of his members. Among our visitors was Rev. A. T. McIlwain, of Corinth. He has charge of the wind-up of the Superannuate Endowment campaign. He is the right man for that place. Each pastor carried away delightful memories of the day spent at Price Memorial.

Our April meeting was held in our Itta Bena church, where Rev. T. E. Gregory is pastor. Brother Gregory stands for the best in this fast-moving day. He and his people entertained us with a good dinner in the dining-room of their beautiful church. Brother Conner, of Schlater, was to bring us our monthly sermon, but for some reason he was not present. Rev. G. C. Gregory reluctantly preached for us. The preachers frequently responded with hearty Amens. The preachers all feel that the good people of Sidon will be spiritually fed as long as they have Brother G. C. Gregory for their pastor.

In our discussion of the topic, "What Books Should a Preacher Read?" quite a number felt that a preacher should read those books which most appeal to him. There were some, however, that thought that a preacher should read those books that would enlighten him on those subjects of which he ought to know and yet does not know. They felt that he ought to read those books whether he wants to read them or not.

We were delighted to have with us Dr. T. B. Holloman, a splendid physician of Itta Bena and a worthy son of the late Dr. T. B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference. He brought us, in a very appropriate way, some tender remembrances of his sainted preacher father. We were also pleased to have with us Dr. Posey, pastor of the local Baptist church. We enjoyed his addresses. Each member of our association left Itta Bena at the close of the day with a mighty big place in our heart for Brother T. E. Gregory and his good people.

JAS. T. McCAFFERTY,
Secretary.

TOO MUCH COMPANY.

We lose ourselves in too much company. We have too much that is worthless. We talk too much that weakens even ourselves. We need to be alone. "The continuous presence of other people is fatal to the growth of the soul."

The thought is thus expressed by Dr. van Dyke:

"Jesus' love for men was deep and steadfast and invincible. Yet he frequently withdrew for solitary communion with God. Even when he wanted the support of Peter and James and John in the Garden of Gethsemane, he wanted them to abide here and watch while he went forward a little to pray. There are things that the soul must face alone, though it be comforting to have friends near."

Learn to be alone. It will give meaning to your fellowship with others. It will save you from the shallow, the unsatisfying, the stunting, which are the fate of those who know not what it is to be alone with God.

To be alone with God is to find life's correctives, life's bases, life's measurements, life's mysteries explained. Too much company brings no aid either to ourselves, or to those we really are intruding upon. Friendship and conversation are worth more from him who takes time to sit alone with God—God and his own soul in consultation.—Central Christian Advocate.

South Carolina Lady Then Tried Cardui and Says She Noticed Remarkable Improvement.

Anderson, S. C.—"I suffered a long long time, before I tried Cardui, and my only regret is that I did not know about it sooner," says Mrs. Lillie Pruitt, 130 "K" Street, this city.

"I was badly run down in health. My nerves 'went to pieces', and I had to go to bed. I was not able to do my house work for many months.

"I got so bad off, I could not bear to have anybody walk across the floor of my room. The least little thing upset me. Sometimes I became hysterical. I had bad pains in my back and sides, and my head and limbs would take spells of aching, which almost set me wild.

"One day I was reading and I saw where a woman, who had a trouble like my own, had been relieved by Cardui. I decided at once to try it; so I began on a course of the 'Home Treatment'.

"It began to help me from the very first. I took Cardui regularly, for several months, and my improvement was so remarkable, that my family and friends were delighted.

"Cardui has no equal, in my opinion. I gladly recommend it to others."

Doctor Found What is Best for Thin, Constipated People

As a family doctor at Monticello, Illinois, the whole human body, not any small part of it, was Dr. Caldwell's practice. More than half his "calls" were on women, children and babies. They are the ones most often sick. But their illnesses were usually of a minor nature—colds, fevers, headaches, biliousness—and all of them required first a thorough evacuation. They were constipated.

In the course of his 47 years' practice (he was graduated from Rush Medical College back in 1875), he found a good deal of success in such cases with a prescription of his own containing simple laxative herbs with pepsin. In 1892 he decided to use this formula in the manufacture of a medicine to be known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and in that year his prescription was first placed on the market.

The preparation immediately had as great a success in the drug stores as it previously had in his private practice. Now, the third generation is using it. Mothers are giving it to their children who were given it by their mothers. Every second of the working day someone somewhere is going into a drug store to buy it. Millions of bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin are being used a year.

Its great success is based on merit, on repeated buying, on one satisfied user telling another. There are thousands of homes in this country that are never without a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's

THE MILLSAPS COLLEGE CAMPAIGN.

The Millsaps College campaign to raise $650,000 for buildings, equipment, and improvements will begin next Sunday, May 13, in all the Methodist churches in the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences. Of the total, the churches are expected to raise $375,000; Jackson and Hinds County are conducting their campaign this week to raise their portion, $150,000; and the alumni and former students of the College are expected to raise $125,000. The opening of the campaign will be featured by the observance of Millsaps College Sunday in the churches of the two Conferences, which is the Christian Education Sunday designated by the Board of Education. The campaign will continue from May 13 to May 21. During this period the Methodists of Mississippi have the opportunity to furnish and equip their great college in a way that will make it the equal in every respect of any other institution of its kind in the whole church. We believe they will take advantage of the opportunity.

CLINTON, LA.

The Baton Rouge District Conference was held at Clinton, La., last week. Clinton is one of the oldest towns in Louisiana. It was necessary for us to take an early train from New Orleans in order to get there at the appointed time, and to take a still earlier one in leaving, hence we are still in favor of the constitutional amendment to regulate the time of departure and arrival of trains. But the trouble of getting up early was really worth all it cost with Clinton at the end of the journey—a beautiful old town, the seat of Silliman College for girls, and rich in historic associations and memories. One of the striking features of the town is a three-story brick building more than one hundred years old. Originally it was a Masonic temple, so we were told, and later it was used as a cotton mill; now it is used as a warehouse. There are some beautiful homes of the old style still in use, but they have been kept in a fine state of repair and have had modern conveniences installed. We should think Clinton would be a delightful place in which to live.

The Methodist church is an attractive brick structure, not very large, but ample for all needs, as we were informed. Rev. B. D. Watson is the faithful pastor, to whom we are indebted for fine courtesies. The whole conference was most hospitably entertatined.

Rev. L. W. Cain is the presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District. He took up presiding eldering somewhat late in his ministerial life, but he takes to it "as a duck takes to water," and we heard many fine things about his administration from the brethren. He had his conference program in fine shape, and the business moved along smoothly. He had enough "connectional" visitors to take up a good deal of the time of the conference; but he was generous in allotment of time and patient through the presentation of many special claims. The afternoon we were there, Rev. R. W. Vaughan spoke in behalf of the Orphanage; Dr. N. E. Joyner represented the educational interests of the Louisiana Conference; Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Ruston District, spoke for the Superannuate Clean-up Campaign, and the editor of the Advocate had a few words to say. Miss Langford, representing the Epworth League, was in attendance, but she was scheduled to speak the day after we left, as perhaps others were. Rev. J. H. Bowdon was the efficient secretary of the body.

The conference was not without exciting incidents. About the middle of the afternoon the cry of "Fire!" was raised just across the street from the church, and a glance showed the roof of a near-by residence in flames. The motion to adjourn was entirely superfluous—the brethren joined the bucket brigade and assisted in quenching the flames. The editor of the Advocate took part in the fight to the extent of toting one bucket of water. Fortunately the fire was put out without much damage. Then later in the afternoon it was reported that the bandits that had robbed the bank at Columbia, Miss., had passed through town, hotly pursued by officers from the neighboring State and near-by towns. We saw one man come from his home with a rifle, climb into a car and speed away but, unfortunately, the robbers escaped.

We heard good things of the sermon preached by Rev. O. L. Tucker at the opening of the conference Thursday morning. We heard the fine devotional address by Rev. J. M. Boykin at the opening of the afternoon session, and the great sermon preached by Rev. C. C. Miller at the evening hour. The accomplished vested choir from Silliman College added to the pleasure and profit of the service by giving some special musical numbers, and Rev. J. P. Bonnecarrere sang a helpful solo.

The editor had the pleasure of taking supper with the presiding elder at the beautiful home of Mrs. Boles, and of being a fellow-guest with Dr. N. E. Joyner at the fine home of Dr. and Mrs. Toler for the night. The only unpleasant thing about our trip to Clinton was the necessity of getting up in time to catch a 5:10 train back to New Orleans; but that is not worthy to be mentioned in connection with the pleasure of the trip. The rather tedious ride from Baton Rouge to Clinton was made pleasant by the company of Mr. J. R. Abels, a faithful and loyal lay delegate from Ponchatoula. It was a special pleasure to meet Mr. W. H. Underwood, of Watson, La., who has been a subscriber to the Advocate from the days when Bishop Galloway was the editor, and who still reads it with pleasure and profit (so he said), and Mr. A. D. Carpenter, Jr., of Hobart, La., another long-time subscriber to the Conference organ. Time would fail to tell of the many other friends met and the many gracious courtesies extended. It was a good conference.

A GO-GETTER.

Rev. Leon I. McCain, our pastor at Minden, La., likes for his church to make a good showing in all the work of the church. In fact, he likes for it to make a fine showing. So when he undertakes anything, he undertakes it with all his might. A week or so ago he brought a club of 184 subscriptions to the Advocate office and inquired if any other church had sent in a larger one. He then modestly added that he would like for his church to have the honor of securing the largest list at least in the Louisiana Conference, and requested that he be informed if a larger club came in. We didn't send him the news—for we didn't have it to send; but a few days ago, evidently to be on the safe side, he sent in another club of sixty-nine subscriptions. He has the palm thus far in the whole territory, and we "take off our hats" to him. He is a go-getter. The club offer is still open till June 1, and somebody else may beat him before the end of the race—but he has a long lead. A hard-working pastor, in co-operation with a fine people, can do wonders. Brother McCain is that kind of preacher, and he serves that kind of people.

A TRAGEDY IF IT HAPPENS.

Recent political events seem to indicate very clearly the probability of the nomination of a wet candidate for the Presidency of the United States by the Democratic Party at its convention in June. In our opinion, a great moral issue is involved in the presidential election this year. The American people have committed themselves by a great majority to the policy of destroying the liquor traffic, adopting a Constitutional amendment to that effect. Yet the policy is being vigorously fought by those in favor of the traffic. It is well known that all the liquor forces are doing all in their power to bring about the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency who is avowedly wet in his personal views and sympathies. If the friends of prohibition want to prevent such nomination, they must definitely and vigorously oppose it. To this end, the Southland Committee of Safety, sponsored by the Tennessee Anti-Saloon League, of which Bishop H. M. DuBose is president, is circulating a petition addressed to delegates-elect to the National Democratic Convention, protesting against the nomination of a wet. This petition appears on page two of this issue of the Advocate. We urge all those interested in maintaining the integrity of the Eighteenth Amendment to sign this petition, secure as many other signatures as possible, and forward it promptly to the address given. The nomination of a wet candidate by the Democratic Party would, in our opinion, be a political blunder and a moral tragedy.

THE GOLDEN CROSS ENROLLMENT.

The week of May 13-20 is the time set for the Golden Cross enrollment. The Golden Cross, as all Methodists know, is the agency through which the hospital work of the church is carried forward. It costs a dollar to enroll, all the money being used for the support of our hospital activities. It is a good investment.

LIQUIDATING OUR INDEBTEDNESS.

By Rev. W. R. Harvell.

I am thinking this morning of the ministry and I think I have a perfect right to think of them and to say some things that are in my heart to say.

In the first place, to be a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ and to bear witness to the saving power of the Son of God, he must know God through Jesus Christ as his personal Savior. He must have a definite Christian experience. But not only must he know that he is God-saved; he must also know that he is God-called, God-ordained, and God-sent, conscious of the realization of this in his own heart. Of course, he will make all the preparation from an educational standpoint that he possibly can, "studying to show himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." But this is not all—there must be a willingness to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. This brings me to the consideration of the subject I wish to write about.

I want to say, first, that I am glad that I can express myself through the columns of the press, for by so doing no one can say I am personal; but I hope that every one who reads these lines will consider this a personal message.

If I owed any one a debt, I could not have any peace of mind unless I was doing my "dead level best" to liquidate that indebtedness. There are two creditors we can never pay. One is Jesus Christ; the other, the ministers who in the Methodist church have gone before us, living and telling the story of Jesus and his power to save, winning men to Jesus, organizing churches, building houses of worship, building and furnishing parsonages, educating the people in their responsibility to the ministry, and by so doing have made it easier for us who are coming after them to do the Lord's work in a bigger way and to do it with so much more ease and comfort. I sometimes think that if we had a few "hard bumps" in this day and generation in which we are living, we would be better and also stronger men and more valiant soldiers of Jesus Christ.

I am a descendant of Methodist stock. My two great-uncles, Tom and Allen Castle, were Methodist preachers of the old-time type. I have been told by those who knew him that Uncle Tom was some camp meeting preacher. That may be one reason why I was converted in a camp meeting. It was at Bluff Creek Camp Ground, East Feliciana Parish, Baton Rouge District, 1891 A. D.

Having been born, reared, and converted in this district, I feel a very great interest in it and am indebted to those men who preached here in other days and are now unable to preach, but are what we call "superannuated," or more appropriate to my way of thinking, "Our Honor Roll Ministers."

This is the last year designated by the General Conference when we are to finish the raising of the ten million dollars endowment to take care, in a small way, of these grand old men and their faithful wives.

Brother L. W. Cain, our presiding elder in the Baton Rouge District, has been appointed Conference director of this great work. He is doing all he can, and I trust that preachers and laymen all over the State of Louisiana will rally and help make this Conference the first in the connection to liquidate this indebtedness, and that the Baton Rouge District will lead the procession, and that Hammond station will be the first to meet this obligation; and I believe we will do it, as this charge is the only charge in the Baton Rouge District that has up to date met this obligation. We only have this last year's quota to raise.

"So Mote It Be."

JESUS.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis.

Jesus is the one big, outstanding fact of history. Nothing that has come to us out of the past is more firmly established as an historical fact than is the life and death and resurrection of Jesus Christ written upon the pages of history. "What shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?" was asked by Pilate. From that day to this, every generation has been compelled to face that question. Those individuals and those generations who have pushed that question aside while they went forward in the realization of their selfish thoughts and purposes, have but postponed the answering of the paramount question of history until an hour when God himself will answer the question for them by writing into their eternal destiny the fruit of a life of opportunity that said individuals and generations neglected to their own souls' damnation.

The church is indeed a great fact of history. Her beneficent, uplifting, self-sacrificing service for the good of mankind and the salvation of the lost souls of humanity is a work of love that deserves the praise and loyal support of every son of man. But, whence the church? Whence the inspiration that has caused and is causing devout men and women to make great sacrifices for the work of the church? There is but one answer, Jesus. In the last analysis, every activity of the church has been inspired through the life, grace and power of Jesus Christ. Jesus is not only the center and the biggest fact of history, but Jesus is the life, the joy, the inspiration and the hope of the church. Through him and by him was the church established. Yea, and it is only through and by him that the church lives. That denomination or individual church that has shifted its center of thought to some point other than upon Jesus Christ is but dying with dry rot. There is no irresistible drawing power upon the heart of the sinner. Said denomination and individual church are cold, calculating, and formal. They sing, they pray, they give alms, they support the institutions of the church; but it is all like sounding brass and clanging symbals.

The great Christian doctrines thought out and formulated by devout men of the past, are worthy of our most serious consideration. The doctrines advocated by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are safe, sane and according to Bible teaching. But whence Christian doctrine? Whence the inspiration that led to the drafting of these great Christian doctrines that some of us worship more than we worship God? The only answer is, Jesus Christ. It matters not how true a man may be in his doctrinal beliefs and pronouncements, his wisdom avails him nothing except Jesus, who is the inspiration of all Christian doctrine, be the center and inspiration of his life. "If any man have not the sprit of Christ, he is none of his."

The Bible is another great fact of history. To read the history of the writing of this great book and to read the story of the persecutions directed against this wonderful book is one of the real thrilling experiences of serious minded people. The Bible is without doubt God's book of revelation to man. Its inspirational contents, its illuminating teachings, and its wholesome, uplifting influence upon men are one of the great facts of history. No other book has even approached the Bible in its wholesome, uplifting influence upon mankind. But whence the Bible? There can be but one answer, Jesus. The Old Testament points to the coming of Jesus the Messiah. The New Testament tells of his having come to earth and the wonderful things done by Jesus. That man who worships the Bible, boasting of believing everything therein from "kiver to kiver," yet who fails to live in the demonstration of the spirit of Jesus Christ in his every relationship of life, is as big a hypocrite and enemy of Jesus Christ as were the Pharisees who crucified him. Those men who are loud in their pronounced allegiance to the Bible as the Word of God, yet who hate and damn others who cannot pronounce their shibboleths, would have joined with the rabble to crucify Jesus had they been in Jerusalem at the time Jesus was put to death. All such are but fetish worshipers, who do not know Jesus Christ as their personal Savior and companion, though they prate much about the Bible and Christian doctrine.

There is no gospel save Jesus Christ. He who preaches anything save Jesus Christ and him crucified for the redemption of the world, yea, resurrected and ascended to glory to lift man back to God, is declaring but empty words. Jesus is the power, strength, and life of every Christian. Read the great hymns of the church, if you will, and you will find that the thought of every one of them begins, centers, and ends in Jesus Christ. Read the lives of the great Christians of the centuries, if you will, and you will find that every one of them talked and wrote only about Jesus. The great preachers of Christendom have all put Jesus at the forefront and center of every message that they preached.

"Jesus is all the world to me,
My life, my joy, my all;
He is my strength from day to day,
Without him I would fail."

NEWTON DISTRICT CONFERENCE, APRIL 24-25.

First Church, Laurel, entertained the conference in royal style, which is their usual custom on like occasions.

By appointment of the presiding elder, the writer preached Monday evening, using as a text Job 14:14. At the close of the preaching service, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by the presiding elder, assisted by several of the brethren.

The conference was convened Tuesday at 8:30 a. m., after religious services, conducted by Brother Gatlin, in which he brought a most inspiring and helpful message.

One would never suspect that this is the first district conference that Brother Gatlin had ever presided over. He had prepared himself for this important task and performed it splendidly. Kindness, firmness and accuracy were very pronounced.

All the pastors were present, and their reports and plans for future activity bespoke a high tone of optimism. W. H. Jones was elected secretary.

A goodly number of revivals were reported, showing that the main object of our holy ministry is not being lost sight of in this hurry age.

Connectional matters were given prominence in the conference, such as missions—regular and special—Superannuate Endowment, Orphans' Home, etc. Rev. T. M. Brownlee presented the Orphans' Home needs for Brother Lewis, who could not be present. Rev. J. M. Morse and Rev. J. Loyd Decell gave stirring addresses on the Superannuate Endowment, and we feel sure that this most worthy cause will not be neglected as it has been in the past. Brother Decell, who was designated as the main speaker on this subject, did more than make an address. It was a sermon of unusual clearness and power. The conference, by a unanimous vote, requested him to furnish a copy of this sermon for publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Rev. M. L. McCormick preached a very helpful sermon on Tuesday at 11 o'clock, as did Rev. R. H. Clegg on Wednesday at the same hour.

Drs. D. M. Key and J. M. Sullivan ably presented the importance of Christian Education, and the great vital needs of Millsaps College. This program should appeal to every Methodist in Mississippi.

Three splendid young men were licensed to preach: Clinton Leon Stewart, Sam Jones Mayo, and Derwood Leland Blackwell.

I am quite sure that it would be hard to find a more representative lay delegation to the Annual Conference than will represent the Newton District, composed of the following: G. W. Mars, P. L. Blackwell, M. H. Turner, W. H. Jones, Mrs. M. M. Black, W. C. Mabry, Mrs. O. S. Hopkins, T. T. Winstead, R. L. Abney, J. B. Bridges, W. A. Ellis, J. H. Currie, O. C. Hull, C. M. Davis, W. E. Prisock, and O. M. Abney. Alternates: Mrs. G. E. Allen, M. M. Cassity, John C. Darnell, Rev. R. M. Gibson, and W. L. Burton.

A more obliging conference host cannot be found than Rev. B. L. Sutherland.

Carthage was chosen for the meeting place of the district conference next year.

It is very gratifying to note the activity throughout the district in increasing the circulation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Along all vital lines the outlook throughout the district is unusually hopeful.

SARDIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Sardis District Conference met in Crenshaw, Miss., April 24, 25, 26, 1928. Rev. T. M. Bradley, presiding elder, called the house to order, and Rev. J. T. Lewis, pastor at Water Valley, conducted the devotionals.

Rev. C. T. Floyd, Dr. H. T. Carley, Dr. C. M. Chapman, and Rev. H. R. McKee, did the preaching for the occasion—it is superfluous to add, we had excellent sermons.

Mrs. A. G. Riley represented the Orphans' Home. She told of their work and the new home on the farm. The slogan of her message was: Strees the monthly offering for the Home until each church in the district has fallen in line.

Judge J. M. Foreman, Hon. H. G. Johnson, and Mr. J. H. Williams made telling speeches in behalf of Millsaps College. When they had finished we realized to a greater extent the magnitude of this great college, and the need of its expansion; and last but by no means least, Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of Greenwood District, stated his faith in Christian education, in the church colleges of our State, and led us to believe that he believed that we should believe in this great cause.

Dr. J. R. Countiss, President of Grenada College, brought before the conference the business matters of the college. He called attention to the plan proposed by the Board of Trustees of Grenada College that bonds be issued on the North Mississippi Conference for the endowment of the college. This resolution followed: "Resolved, That we, the Sardis District Conference, endorse the proposed plan of the Board of Grenada College in issuing bonds for the endowment of Grenada College, as is accepted by the Board of Education of the North Mississippi Annual Conference." The resolution carried by unanimous vote.

Miss Myrtle Pollard, missionary to Mexico, made an excellent talk on "Evangelism."

Mr. R. M. Weaver, of Corinth, Miss., spoke in behalf of the Superannuate Endowment. His address will be given to the press, and also put in pamphlet form.

Dr. H. T. Carley represented the New Orleans Christian Advocate. One of his outstanding remarks: "Staud for the Conference organ and the program of the church, the agencies through which the purpose of the church is accomplished." The presiding elder believes this to the extent that he keeps it before his district. Subscriptions are increasing.

Dr. L. L. Minor presided over the meeting of the laymen.

J. G. Houston, of New Albany, gave a great address. His major term was: "The tithe will take care of all the financial problems of the church."

Judge J. M. Foreman, former Conference Lay Leader, preached a great lay sermon. Theme, "Fruit Bearing."

Each pastor made a good report, also the various committees. Each member of the district conference is worthy of honorable mention, but lack of space prevents.

Rev. A. Y. Brown, of Minter City, presented the Golden Cross in a worthy and unique way. Rev. E. G. Mohler, Sunday School Extension Secretary, spoke in behalf of Sunday school work and the observance of Sunday School Day.

Rev. W. W. Jones, pastor-host, is a past master in the art of entertainment. With a good committee to work a systematized plan, and the open homes and hearts of the good people of Crenshaw, the entire district conference felt as though they had entered a haven of rest.

"Boston is the hub of the universe." You do not believe it? Well, I agree with you. But I will tell you a fact: Rev. T. M. Bradley is the "hub" of the Sardis District—black locust, well seasoned. Dignity? He said, "I can't feel natural with that," so the pastors turned it all into the hands of Mrs. Bradley, and everything is all right: The Hub keeps turning and every time it turns, the wheel goes round. We are moving into bigger and better things.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE IN THE GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

We broke the Greenville District Sunday School Institute up into three units for the convenience of the workers. The first unit was held at Leland, April 25. Over thirty workers were present, representing five schools. The second unit was held at Duncan, April 26. Seven schoools were represented by about forty workers. The third unit was held at Lula, April 27, and was the largest group, eight schools being represented by about sixty workers. Several schools which were not represented sent written reports.

We used largely the workers of our own district as leaders for the programs. Rev. R. H. B. Gladney was present and rendered his usual efficient service. Mrs. W. H. Ratliff, of Sherard, District Elementary Superintendent, was present at Duncan and Lula, and was most helpful in many ways. Others taking part and rendering faithful service were: Rev. H. D. Suydam, of Swiftown; Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, the presiding elder; Rev. J. E. Cunningham; Rev. J. J. Garner; Prof. C. W. Brooks; Mrs. E. L. Rawls; C. P. Shelby; Rev. N. J. Golding; Rev. W. B. Baker, and Rev. E. G. Mohler. All discussion was free and open, and many took part.

The many different phases of the work were emphasized. Rev. J. L. Nelli, who was at Shelby in a revival, closed the day at Duncan with a most inspiring address. Some definite things were accomplished. Almost every school represented agreed to put on a reading course for the parents, using the American Home Series pamphlets. This work within itself was worth the effort of the institutes. It will give religious training to all the members of the Sunday school and church. We set as our district goals the following: The observance of Sunday School Day in thirty schools; the observance of Missionary Day monthly in 30 schools; two Standard Training Schools in the district; a District Institute (which we were holding; Wall Charts placed in ten schools that do not have them; ten volunteer taechers who will teach one or more classes.

We are in a fair way to realize these goals. Many schools are already planning to hold Sunday School Day, some having held it already. Most of the schools in the district are taking part on the Dual Special Missionary work. We held the institutes. Instead of getting ten volunteer teachers, we got fifteen. They are as follows: Mrs. M. E. Dakin, Shaw; Rev. O. E. Clark, Arcola; Mrs. J. G. Chastain, Leland; Miss Ruth Kellogg, Boyle; Rev. R. G. Lord, Duncan; Mrs. W. H. Ratliff, Sherard; Mrs. John W. Burton, Alligator; Mrs. C. H. McCrain, Alligator; Mrs. M. H. Alford, Duncan; Rev. J. J. Garner, Gunnison; Rev. N. J. Golding, Jonestown; Rev. H. F. Brooks, Clarksdale; Mr. Alcorn Russell, Jonestown; Rev. W. B. Baker, Lula; and Mrs. J. H. Williams, Dundee.

In every place the ladies acted as most hospitable hostesses, and served very delectable luncheons.

R. G. LORD,
District Sunday School Superintendent.

THE NEW PRESIDENT OF WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

In Dr. George F. Winfield, one of the leading educators of Texas, the Methodist educational system of Mississippi has secured to fill the presidency of Whitworth College, which Dr. H. G. Hawkins recently resigned, a valuable addition.

Dr. Winfield has for a number of years been one of the leading educational figures of Texas. As a member of the commission on classification and accrediting of the schools of Texas since 1917, a member of the executive committee of the Texas State Teachers' Association, and the president of three junior colleges, he has been prominent in the educational affairs of the Lone Star State.

Before his entrance into the field of the college executive, the new head of Whitworth served for twelve years as a pastor in Texas. During this period of time he was instrumental in the building of six Methodist churches and two Methodist parsonages.

That Dr. Winfield is eminently qualified to serve as the head of a junior college is attested not only by the fact that he has been successful as the president of three colleges, but by his having been the author of the first dissertation on the junior college in America, and the president of the American Association of Junior Colleges, and by his being the present president of the Methodist Educational Association.

As the president of Meridian College from 1911 to 1919, of Wesley College from 1919 to 1923, and of Lon Morris College since 1923, he has had extended experience as the head of junior colleges. Lon Morris College was, under his leadership, recently admitted to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

The new Whitworth executive will take over the presidency of the college next session. As a result of the recent co-ordination of Whitworth with Millsaps College, it is probable that the curriculum at the Brookhaven school will be remodeled so as to conform with the work of the freshman and sophomore classes of Millsaps, where the Whitworth graduates will be accepted as full-fledged members of the junior class. The new arrangement is expected to result in increased efficiency in the educational system of the Mississippi Methodists.

A. V. BEACHAM.

REV. JOHN J. GOLDEN.

Rev. John J. Golden was born in Wayne County, Miss., not far from Waynesboro, May 15, 1870, and died in Dallas, Tex., March 12, 1928. His parents were John and Nancy Hays Golden. He was the third of a group of eleven children. He was educated in the public schools and at Millsaps College. He joined the church under the ministry of Rev. J. A. Godfrey when 12 years of age. He was admitted on trial into the Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1897, and ordained a deacon by Bishop Wilson. He was ordained elder by Bishop Key in 1903. During the years 1898 to 1913 he served the following charges in the Mississippi Conference: Vaughn's, Topisaw, Camden, Beauregard, Morton and Pelahatchie, Taylorsville, Rosehill, Lucedale, Kingston (Laurel), Philadelphia, Brooklyn and Bond. In October, 1913, on account of his health, he transferred to the New Mexico Conference, where he served Gallup, San Marcial, Almagordo, and other charges, as his health permitted.

Among his strong characteristics were cheerfulness, patience, and constant and enthusiastic devotion to the church and to his family. His zeal for his church was evidenced in his early career, because through his influence both his parents, who had been indifferent members of other denominations, became active Christians and united with the Methodist church, the father serving for a number of years as Methodist steward and Sunday school superintendent. All of his brothers and sisters became members of the Methodist church.

A broad circle of acquaintances in Mississippi, Texas, and New Mexico remember well the cheerfulness of his presence, and his audiences can recall the cheerful wit that oftentimes characterized his pulpit utterances. The patience and cheerfulness were also marked throughout the years of bodily weakness, because for some months after going to Texas he was confined to his bed in a tent, but through patience and perseverance he came out of that condition, and during much of the remaining fifteen years of his life engaged in active service, though never robust, and at one time about five years before his death subjected to a serious operation.

At the last session of the New Mexico Conference he was assigned to Loving and Lake Arthur, and in the early fall entered upon the work of his charge with zest; his children were all in college, either as teachers or students; and his wife, writing of the beginnings of his work in the new charge, stated that it was somewhat like a honeymoon. After a few weeks he was rushed to a hospital in Dallas with a cancerous condition of the stomach. It was decided that he was too weak for an operation. A little later the family secured a home at 3644 Haynie Avenue, Dallas, and he spent his last days in comparative comfort, ministered to by his children and loved companion. The second Sunday of the new year he had a very confidential talk with Dr. Selecman, President of the Southern Methodist University, asking that he conduct his funeral service. Physicians did not anticipate that his end would come so soon, but a very few days before he died he began to fail rapidly, his wife being beside him when he breathed his last. Dr. Whaling, a son-in-law of Bishop Ward, and Bishop Moore assisted Dr. Selecman with the funeral service, which was conducted at Highland Park Methodist Church, Dallas. The body was laid to rest in Restland Memorial cemetery. There was a wealth of floral offerings from far and near.

Brother Golden was married June 31, 1899, to Mary Hawkins. Six children were born of this union, two of whom died in infancy. Of those living, Eloise, the eldest, is teaching in a junior college in Stephenville, Tex. The eldest son, Hawkins, after taking a master's degree at Harvard University in June, 1927, is studying law in Southern Methodist University, and the other two sons, George and Ira, are also students in the same university. The devotion to his family is evidenced in many ways. He was always doing the little things that make life pleasant; and, notwithstanding the difficulties, the educational work of the children of the home proceeded constantly.

The following quotation is from a letter recently written by his widow: "As you know, there were some limitations, owing to a lack of educational advantages, but oftentimes I was amazed at his command of words and power. The best of all is, God was with him, and I feel that my life was enriched through the relation. I might have married a wealthier or more educated man, but I couldn't have married a better one, one whose heart was pure gold." The letter added: "The main thing in writing the record of his life is to impress the importance of living faithful Christian lives so that the circle will be unbroken in that beautiful land that is fairer than day." Brother Golden was indeed a power with an audience. There are preachers at work to-day who were converted under his ministry.

Brookhaven, Miss. HENRY G. HAWKINS.

MONROE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The annual session of the Monroe District Conference was opened on Tuesday, April 24, 1928, in the First Methodist Church at Bastrop, La., with the presiding elder, Rev. E. C. Gunn, presiding. Rev. D. C. Barr led in prayer.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. L. W. Smart, of Waterproof. After singing hymn No. 416, Mr. S. M. Collins was elected secretary, and F. J. McCoy assistant. All the preachers of the district answered to their names but Rev. A. S. J. Neil, who was at the bedside of a brother who was seriously ill, and the Rev. J. A. Alford.

The evening hour was occupied by an address on Christian Education, delivered by Rev. N. E. Joyner, followed by a stirring sermon by Rev. R. E. Goodrich, of First Church, Shreveport.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, our Sunday school secretary, was on hand and gave us a splendid talk on the Sunday school and its work. Brother R. W. Vaughan represented the needs of the Orphanage, and told us of its splendid work.

Miss Elizabeth Langford, of our State Epworth League, was with us and gave a good account of the work done by our young people of the Leagues.

The Committee on License to Preach reported the name of A. T. Ezelle, and recommended him to the conference for license to preach. The Committee on Orders recommended him to the Annual Conference for local elder's orders, he coming to us from the Methodist Protestant Church.

The following were named by the presiding elder as Ad Interim Committee of the district conference: M. S. Monk, Ellis Smith, F. J. McCoy, and J. A. Alford.

At the morning session, Wednesday, April 25, the devotional was led by Rev. David Tarver. The morning was taken up by the pastors in their reports, telling of the advance of the work. Several new preaching places were reported, and all showed good growth in membership.

There was a fine attendance of lay delegates, who took an active part in the proceedings of the conference.

Several of the brethren reported the full amount of their Missionary Special paid in full.

The largest gains in membership were reported by Rev. M. S. Monk, of Monroe, with about 140; Rev. Ellis Smith, of Bastrop, with near 60; Rev. F. J. McCoy, of West Monroe, with 58.

The election of delegates to the Annual Conference resulted as follows: S. M. McRenolds, S. M. Collins, Mrs. A. J. Alford, Mrs. E. C. Gunn, Mrs. S. M. Collins, Mrs. J. L. Cummins, Dr. Leavelle, and Dr. Dollarhide. Alternates: Mrs. J. B. Pollard, Dr. J. R. Henry, E. E. Stidhill, Mrs. Marion Monk.

Rev. J. G. Snelling addressed the conference on the Missionary Special, and also on the Memorial Home.

Mrs. J. B. Pollard addressed the conference on the work being done by the women of the district and State.

Three places were placed in nomination for the next session of the conference—West Monroe, Lake Providence, and Columbia. Lake Providence was chosen.

Dr. M. S. Monk made a pleasing address in behalf of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, representing the editor in his absence.

President D. B. Raulins was with us and represented the work of Mansfield, which is indeed splendid.

S. M. McReynolds was elected District Lay Leader; T. W. Stidhill and J. L. Anding, Associate Lay Leaders.

The newly-elected leader took the chair, and called upon Brother S. M. Collins, who made a fine talk on the work of our men in the church, stressing Stewardship, and showing how, with work and cultivation, the assessments of the district had been raised from 39 per cent to 73 per cent, and that the aim this year is 100 per cent. Here Brother McReynolds pledged help to all the brethren who may need it in raising all assessments in full.

We were delightfully entertained by the good people of Bastrop, a place that about six years ago was a small country town; but now, due to the location there of two big paper mills, there are over 7,000 people, with the promise of a splendid growth in the near future.

Our presiding elder, Rev. E. C. Gunn, has, by his kindness and interest in the work, endeared himself to all, lay and clergy alike, and has entered upon his work as a good soldier and laborer with Him. He presided with ease and grace, and at all times commanded the conference, without any difficulty at all. We predict for him a useful term in his appointed field of labor.

S. M. COLLINS, Secretary.
F. J. McCOY, Assistant.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

This body will meet in Greenville for a two-day session, beginning at 9 o'clock on May 17, and adjourning on the afternoon of the 18th. Two days are enough, but to compass the items embraced in a good lively district conference in that time requires promptness in arriving, thorough preparation on the part of all speakers, the boiling down of all addresses, lectures, exhortations, etc., to the central and vital points the speaker wishes to get home.

Let pastors see that delegates are promptly elected and their names forwarded to Rev. J. E. Cunningham, the pastor-host, and to the "Elder" for record. If you will mark opposite each name with a "P" or "A" whether you are sure they will be present or absent, you will help the pastor-host very much and save a lot of trouble and confusion.

L. M. LIPSCOMB, Presiding Elder.

If YOUR Charge is to get on in raising its quota balance, it will have to do something besides look on while other charges are raising theirs.

For twelve weeks on this page various groups of the church's superannuated preachers have been brought to your attention. It seems unthinkable that you could during this time study their faces, know their service record, realize their deprivations, and still be unwilling to aid in providing for them a reasonable support.

We are now faced with the question whether these grand old men of the Gospel shall be comfortably provided for or left the prey of want. Many Charges have met the issue in a manner to their credit, and they can always find comfort in the thought that they did not fail the old preachers in their emergency.

Some Superannuates of the South Georgia Conference—1927

But what about your Charge? Have you done, or really tried to do, your part? Can you, in good conscience, say that you have given this cause the same chance that you gave other specials? If all the church's superannuates were before you, now, in one group, could you look them straight in the face and say: "We did our best for you?"

If you have not done all that you could, will you do so before it is too late? There is time yet to make amends, if you hurry. Your church is calling to you for loyal co-operation now. She needs her "man power" to the last man in this emergency. With you she can win. Without you, her colors may go down in defeat.

A prominent man when asked why he had such consideration for aged people in distress, said: "I'm trying to reduce the number of my death-bed regrets."

WHAT ROME DOES WHERE SHE HAS THE POWER.

Striking Illustration of the Aim and Animus of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy—Pastoral Letter of the Cardinal Archbishop of Turin Against Protestantism—A Remarkable Document Proving an Unchanging Intolerance.

There was published in Il Momento, a leading daily paper of Turin, Italy, on Jan. 28, 1928, a Pastoral Letter of the Cardinal Archbishop of Turin against Protestant propaganda. Part of the Letter was also published in the Observatore Romano of Rome, a semi-official organ of the Vatican, and other Catholic papers in Italy. It was read in all the churches of Turin and vicinity on Jan. 29, and commented upon by the priests who read it. It was also published in pamphlet form and distributed in all the schools. Further, the Catholic boy members of the Y. M. C. A. were visited by a priest who threatened the parents and all the family with excommunication if the boys did not leave the Association.

The Pastoral Letter puts the recent Papal encyclical into active effect in an effort to suppress all Protestant work in Italy. It is a very perfect illustration of how Italy, ruled by a despotism in the State, is ruled equally by a despotism in the church. It expresses the spirit of high Roman ecclesiastics toward Protestantism. This special attack is not merely upon the Y. M. C. A. alone, but upon all Protestant effort. This Letter, our readers will mark, is not medieval but of this very year 1928. The Cardinal Archbishop of Turin, moreover, is one of the sixty-six cardinals who will elect the successor to the present Pope, and is himself eligible for the succession.

The Pastoral Letter being too long for publication in full, from the translation we give the following abstract and extracts which reveal the spirit and temper of the document.

The Letter opens with reference to the special perils of youth at this decadent period, and then solicits earnest co-operation "against another and extremely serious peril now facing the faith of our youth . . . the recurrence of more intensive Protestant propaganda in our midst." "From the start of the present century, various Protestant sects fell with peculiar fury upon Italy as upon a land of conquest, aiming at evangelizing her, or at protestantizing her. Thanks to the complicity, or at least tolerance, of those then in power, the Protestants were able to take a footing in various parts of the country, gaining ground, at the most, among the poorer folk and among those whose mode of life little resembles that of the Christians. The Holy Apostolic See has with vigilant care many times given warning against them. . . . If the propaganda carried on by those sects did not achieve such apostasy, it has nevertheless succeeded, and is now succeeding further yet, in spreading that religious indifferentism which is so serious and ruinous an evil for souls. . . ."

The Letter then calls special attention to one of these "sects," "assisted by a strong organization, . . . and the too indulgent Italian hospitality." After charging the Y. M. C. A. with taking advantage of the war time to spread wide its activities, and with camouflaging its real ends, the Letter says: "The war over, the Association threw down its mask and showed what it really was—'an instrument for insidious anti-patriotism and anti-Catholicism, organized at great breadth by the Protestants of various sects, more particularly American Baptists and Methodists. . . . As such, it seeks to lay ambush for the Catholic Church. Strong because of its powerful financial resources—but poor in its spiritual resources—the Y. M. C. A. would be the scout of that Evangelical Propaganda that is to civilize and Christianize Italy.'"

To gain its end, the Letter says, the Association has a thousand means—everything to build up an irresistible attraction for the young. It says a well informed review, the Civilta Cattolica, has revealed "the excessively underhand work of disintegration of the Catholic conscience that the Y. M. C. A. carried on among the young, acting as the most cunning tool, not only of the Methodist heresy, but also of the sect which is the church's sworn enemy, Masonry."

The Letter then quotes from the Apostolic See its 1920 warnings "over the insidious maneuvers of anti-Catholic sects in general and the Y. M. C. A. in particular," and its reminder to bishops that "it is their important and most special duty to watch vigilantly that the young 'be kept immune from all contact with such society.'" The quotation which follows (from the Acta Ap. Sedis, No. 14, Dec. 17, 1920) is especially significant: "Moreover, by dint of being in constant touch with pastors and comrades of another faith; of talking intimately with them, of helping them in their lectures, which are not free from error, of reading their books and even the Bible and the Gospel, falsified according to Protestant usage . . . the young people lose almost unconsciously that suspicion and repugnance they might have had toward Protestantism and towards its promulgators, so that every barrier is thrown down and the step of adhesion to the sect is made much easier."

Accusing the Association of carrying on the Protestant propaganda with "diabolical cleverness," the Archbishop turns to his pastors, as well as to all parents, educators, and Catholic teachers, to guard everywhere the young people against "Protestant insidiousness" in general and the Association in particular. Then follows a warning, the meaning of which no Catholic would misunderstand: "Persuade those who have imprudently given in their names, to withdraw them immediately; and those who attend the premises, never to set foot there again; remind them also of the heavy penalties that the church has established against heretics, apostates, and all who knowingly in whatsoever manner collaborate in the spread of heresy."

In closing the Archbishop says:

"I feel sure that you will appreciate the full importance of my letter and will be tireless in preventing the inroads of a propaganda like this Protestant one, which is extremely destructive not only of souls but even of the social fabric of civil society. . . .

"Particularly do I urge all very dear pastors fervently to warn the faithful regarding the gravity of the duties incumbent upon all Catholics: (a) to avoid any contact whatever with Protestants from fear of the risk of adhering to their doctrines, and more especially are they obliged to abstain from taking any part in their lectures, meetings, etc.; (b) they are, moreover, strictly forbidden to read, diffuse, or in any way whatsoever lend their collaboration to periodicals issued by Protestant societies, or to books dealing with religious subjects that they publish for their following; (c) it is, moreover, a great sin to put down one's name in a Proestant society or sect, whatever its name may be, and in particular it is forbidden to belong to the society of the Y. M. C. A.

"In order to protect members of our Catholic Associations from the grave peril, I hold all ecclesiastical auxiliaries and their presidents bound to strike out from the rolls of their own Associations those members who, even if they are not registered at the Y. M. C. A., frequent its quarters and those of other Protestant societies."

"Fully confident that the Lord will bless this work (that of the Pontifical Society for the Preservation of the Faith) and will give us grace to block the fatal and pernicious propaganda of the Protestants, thus freeing our beloved archdiocese from the most baneful of perils, I invoke upon all the choicest blessings of heaven."

JUNALUSKA SCHOOL OF RELIGION.

By Rev. J. Q. Schisler.

Few of those persons in places of responsibility in the field of religious education in our church had an opportunity to secure special training for this task before they were called into this service. This is due to the fact that the whole program of religious education was only recently inaugurated, and our colleges and universities have only recently established chairs of religious education. It has been necessary, therefore, for those who are engaged in this work in order to keep up with the rapid developments in this field to go away to universities offering graduate courses in religious education. For the most part these universities are located in the North and East.

The announcement, therefore, that provision has been made for graduate courses in religious education at Lake Junaluska next summer is one of peculiar significance to our church. The need for a graduate school at Lake Junaluska has been recognized by the General Sunday School Board for the past several years. At the same time there is need for a close articulation of this graduate work with one of our universities. Dr. John W. Shackford, General Secretary of the Sunday School Board, has called attention to this need repeatedly since he became Superintendent of Training Work in 1915. The opportunity for the establishment of such a school at Lake Junaluska has come with the enlargement of the plans and purposes of Duke University. Dr. W. P. Few, the president of the university, is also a member of the General Sunday School Board.

At the last meeting of the Board, a committee was appointed to confer with a like committee from Duke University to work out plans for such a school. This joint committee completed these plans in a meeting held in the president's office at Duke University on Nov. 8, 1927. The committee is composed of Dr. W. P. Few, chairman; Dr. John W. Shackford, Dr. Edmund D. Soper, Dr. E. B. Chappell, Prof. Holland Holton, Prof. Harvie Branscomb, and Rev. J. Q. Schisler, secretary.

The school is to be known as the Junaluska School of Religion. It will be conducted in the Sunday school building at Lake Junaluska under agreements arrived at in the joint committee representing Duke University and the General Sunday School Board. It is hoped that other General Boards of the church will co-operate in the school.

The first session of the Junaluska School of Religion will be held at Lake Junaluska, North Carolina, July 24 to September 4, 1928, under the joint management of the General Sunday School Board and Duke University, with the co-operation of other Boards. The Junaluska School of Religion will be open to men and women. Certain courses will be offered which will be accredited by Duke University on the Bachelor of Arts degree and certain other courses on the Bachelor of Divinity degree.

Courses will be offered in the New Testament, Old Testament, History of Religion and Comparative Religion, Religious Education and Christian Missions. A student may register for three courses, each meeting five times a week. Each of these courses, satisfactorily completed, will earn a credit of two semester hours toward the Bachelor of Divinity degree.

Three professors in the School of Religion of Duke University will offer two courses each. The courses in the New Testament will be offered by Professor Harvie Branscomb, those in the Old Testament by Professor Elbert Russell, and those in the History of Religion and Comparative Religion by Professor Edmund D. Soper, who will also act as dean of the school.

The General Sunday School Board has secured the services of Dr. B. S. Winchester for two courses in Religious Education. Dr. Winchester is Secretary of the Commission on Christian Education of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The school is designed for pastors, church workers, and students who desire to fit themselves the better for their work or to add certain credits looking to the securing of the Bachelor of Arts or the Bachelor of Divinity degree.

A small matriculation fee of $15 will be charged. Those desiring further information concerning courses and conditions of work should address John Q. Schisler, General Sunday School Board, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., or Edmund D. Soper, Duke University, Durham, N. C.

A LITTLE BIT.

A little bit of sugar makes the bitterest coffee seem Like an aromatic flavor in a cup of bonny cream.
A little bit of sunshine makes the cloudiest spell appear
No longer than a minute, no damper than a tear.
A little bit of loving makes a century of strife
Like an amaranthine morning on the honeyed hills of life.
A little bit of courage makes an age of quaking glow
With the spirit of the heroes when the world began to grow.
A little bit of laughter makes the saddest day a thing
In whose gates of apple blossoms everybody wants to sing.

LITTLE GOOD-FOR-NOTHING.

A little Good-for-Nothing sat on the top of a wooden fence, her stubby toes caught under the rail below. Her sharp little elbows were on her knees and her chin was resting on her upturned palms. She was very pretty to look at; almost as pretty as the great goldeu sunflower that peeped over her shoulder with head so heavy that it seemed to long for a pair of arms of its own to lean on.

Little Good-for-Nothing was very happy. She had just eaten a huge bowl of bread and milk, and there was nothing to do. Of course, the dishes were still unwashed in her mother's kitchen, and there was a hole in the toe of her best stocking, and her hair needed a good washing; but there was nothing she had to do, so she sat in the sun and watched a brilliant green fly skate ovals and circles of gleaming light on the violet rink of the distant sky.

A big bee droned like an aeroplane onto the landing field of the sunflower behind her head.

"M'mm," droned the bee, "a pretty good old world, even if I do have to work so hard for a living."

"You're a noisy old fool!" cried Good-for-Nothing. "Only fools work as hard as you do."

"M-m-," droned the bee, "who says such a silly thing!"

"I do," answered Good-for-Nothing, "and I mean it, too. If you were as smart as I am, you would get some one else to slave for you."

"M-m," droned the bee. "Who slaves for you?"

"Why, every one, you silly bee. My mother and father and little sister, the butcher, the baker and candlestick-maker, the moo cow and the growing corn, and even yourself, you silly bee, for when you have worked yourself nearly to death, I shall come with a big pail and rob your hive."

"Mm! Mm!" droned the bee. "Can that be so?"

Now little Good-for-Nothing did not know it, but right under her, sitting on a daisy throne, was the Queen of the Spirit Things. She heard every word that was said and her violet eyes grew sad and drops of dew, which may have been tears, glistened in them.

"You foolish Good-for-Nothing, I must save you against yourself. It will be hard on you, I know, but you will be happier when you have learned your lesson."

So saying, the Queen of the Spirit Things blew a golden dust in the little girl's eyes, and then flew away on the wings of a blue butterfly.

"I must go home now," said little Good-for-Nothing. "It is time for my bowl of porridge and cream."

As she approached the cottage she found the door hanging open on the hinge. The glass in the windows had been broken with stones. There was no sign of her mother and father and the old stove was cold and rusted.

"Oh, what has happened!" cried Little Good-for-Nothing. "Where is my porridge? What shall I eat?"

As no one answered her she went outside and took the path to the cold fern-covered spring. Alas! it was full of dead leaves and a frog sat on the edge and puffed out his yellow throat at her. Because she was thirsty little Good-for-Nothing cleaned out the spring and sat near by until it had cleared enough to drink from. It was evening now and the wind was chill, so little Good-for-Nothing went back to the cottage, pushed the broken door into place and built a fire in the old stove. In the pantry she found a tin can full of meal. With a heavy heart and slow fingers she mixed some in a rusted pan and, after cooking it, ate it without cream or sugar.

All that night little Good-for-Nothing shivered and shook because she had no bedclothes to cover her. When morning came she went down to the village. No one seemed to know her. She went into the butcher shop and ordered a chop. "Have you the money to pay for it?" asked the butcher.

"Money!" exclaimed little Good-for-Nothing. "You never asked me for any money before!"

"You're crazy!" said the butcher. "Do you think I run an almshouse?"

"I shall try the baker," said little Good-for-Nothing, so she went into the store. It smelled so sweet of ginger cookies that her mouth watered.

"I shall take a dozen ginger cookies," said little Good-for-Nothing.

"Twent cents is the price," said the baker.

"Twenty cents!" cried the girl. "You used to give them to me for nothing."

"You're crazy," said the baker. "Dou you think I run an almshouse?"

"Well," said little Good-for-Nothing, "at least I shall not sit in darkness to-night. I shall see the candlestick-maker and get some candles," but when she asked for a dozeu the candlestick-maker asked for fifty cents.

"Fifty cents!" cried little Good-for-Nothing. "You used to give me all I wanted without paying a cent."

"You're crazy," said the candlestick-maker. "Do you think I run an almshouse?"

"I know what I shall do," cried little Good-for-Nothing. "I shall open a hive and get some honey. The bees know nothing of money, so will not ask for any."

So saying the little girl went into a field of clover and lifted the lid from a hive that stood in the corner. Instantly the air was black with bees that buzzed and hummed and grew angrier and angrier until finally they all lit on little Good-for-Nothing and stung her so badly that she ran screaming from the clover patch. One of the biggest and most savage of all the bees was the one that droned into the landing field of the big sunflower.

"I've been waiting for you, little Good-for-Nothing, to come with your pail, as you said you would, to take my honey. Instead of giving you honey I shall sting you well."

Just then little Good-for-Nothing tripped on a stone and fell heavily. When she came to her senses she was sitting on the ground under the rails of the old fence. The big friendly sunflower was leaning over anxiously to see whether she was badly hurt. Little Good-for-Nothing rose slowly to her feet.

"What a terrible dream!" she cried. "I wonder if the world is such a hard place. Dear me, I shall run right home and wash the dishes and darn my stocking, and comb my hair, and scrub my face."

She was off in a second and the Queen of the Spirit Things on the wings of the blue butterfly floated once more gently down on her daisy throne.

THE LESSON THE TREES TAUGHT.

By Z. I. Davis.

How many have heard of that kind father who had two dear sons, of whom he was very fond, but who on a certain day, began a quarrel? This made the father feel very bad, so he called to them:

"Come here, my boys, for I have something to tell you."

The two sons went to their father and he took them out to an orchard of young trees.

The story tells us that he began thus:

"I have a sermon," he said, "which I wish to preach to you. I do not profess to be a minister and yet the tree taught me this sermon many, many years ago. I wish each one of you would pick out the tree that you think is the best one in the orchard. Then I shall cut that down after you have had a good look at it so that you may know what a beautiful tree it was."

The two sons were astonished to hear their father's declaration. They knew that it had taken quite a few years of toil and cultivation to bring the trees to their present state of perfection, and they were puzzled at what he said, and replied:

"Why do you do such a thing. Why do you cut down the best trees in the orchard just because we think they are the best?"

The calmness of their father's countenance amazed them, as he answered them with a smile:

"So that you may see how you look when you allow anger to cut down the tree of kindness which at other times is deep-rooted in your heart. We all like to see you as you look when that tree of kindness is blossoming forth in good deeds, and not like the jagged stump of a tree that the scythe has hacked down."

The two sons looked at each other and as they thought of their father's words and the sermon of the tree, they forgot their quarrel and shook hands.

Then their father said: "Then I am led to believe that you do not want to see the beautiful trees cut down, so I will not do it, unless I see you in another quarrel. This orchard is for you when you grow up, and if every tree remains standing, it will remind you that it pays to be temperate in language.

"But much instruction is often needed in order to help a person to learn a hard lesson, so do not be surprised at what happens to you during the coming weeks, until you are established in this discipline."

Henry and Amos did not understand what their father meant by these words until the next day at dinner. When they came from school for their usual hot meal, Henry, who was very fond of rhubarb pie, found a piece of juicy strawberry shortcake by his plate; while a large cut of rich rhubarb pie was set for his brother, who was exceedingly fond of strawberry shortcake.

The two boys exchanged glances that hinted of covetous anger, but they softened into smiles of understanding as they thought of the lovely trees all blooming in the orchard, and all still rooted safely in the ground.

"Mother, may we exchange our desserts that you have so nicely prepared for us?" It was Henry speaking.

"Certainly," was the smiling response, for was not mother in the secret, too? This was done, and both boys were happy.

It was not so easy the next time, for he got a handsome tennis racket that he cared nothing about, as a birthday gift, knowing that Amos had wanted one like that for two years. He had quite a struggle to give it up to his brother, for he knew if he did not take it, he would not get any present. But the victory was finally won, and Amos realized his long-cherished dream.

Maybe it was not hard for Amos, when on his birthday he received a fine suit of clothes, that he know Henry needed and wanted. Not wishing to be outdone by his brother, he fairly begged him to wear them in his stead, which he did. So there was no more chance to quarrel.—The Presbyterian Advance.

Editorial

THE DEATH OF REV. ROBERT SELBY.

A press dispatch to one of the New Orleans newspapers on Monday of this week announced the death of Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder of the Meridian District, while sitting in his automobile in front of Salem church in Clarke County, where he had gone to preach, last Sunday. No further details were given, and none have been received by the Advocate at the time of going to press.

This news will bring great sorrow to many, as it did to the editor of the Advocate. We have known Brother Selby intimately for many years, and had an affection for him that makes his death a keen personal sorrow. We think we knew him—and we have never known a truer, better man. He was sometimes misunderstood—as all men are; but he had a great heart, a clear mind, and a devotion to his friends and to the church that was rarely beautiful. We shall miss him as a friend and as a fellow-laborer in the kingdom of God. The tenderest sympathy of many friends will go out to his devoted wife and children. We hope to have a suitable memoir for publication in due time.

A fine meeting recently closed at the Gibson Memorial Church, Vicksburg, Miss., of which Rev. H. A. Wood is pastor. A fine class of new members joined the church. This church has received about 150 members since Conference.

The Howard Williams meeting in Kosciusko, Miss., which closed recently, resulted in many conversions and reclamations. From Kosciusko, Mr. Williams and his party went to Vaiden, Miss. where he began a meeting last Sunday.

Rev. Tinsley B. Thrower is in the fourth year of his pastorate on the Evansville and Dubbs charge, North Mississippi Confereuce, and the work continues to go forward. Plans are being made for a complete renovation of the parsonage.

Mrs. P. W. Shell, Houston, Miss., although somewhat advanced in years, is an active and loyal member of the church whose interest in the Advocate we greatly appreciate. She has been a reader of the paper since early life—and she still reads it. Blessings upon her!

The Methodist congregation at Kilmichael, Miss., is planning for a "Home-Coming Day" on the third Sunday in May—May 20. A cordial invitation is extended to all former pastors and members, as well as present ones, to attend the services of the day. A cordial welcome is assured.

Dr. Mark Terrell, of Dallas, Tex., general evangelist, has an open date beginning on May 27 that he would be glad to give some pastor in Louisiana or Mississippi. He has recently held one meeting at San Antouio, Tex., resulting in one hundred additions to the membership of the church.

In a supplementary note, Rev. Del Longgrear, who wrote an account of the recent Jackson District Conference, speaks especially of the sermon preached by Dr. Rolfe Hunt. After the sermon, an old-time camp meeting scene was witnessed around the altar.

Students of Belhaven and Blue Mountaiu Colleges have contributed a total of $452 to the Millsaps College building and improvement campaign, according to a recent announcement by President Key, of Millsaps. This represents a contribution of $1 from each student of these schools.

Bishop H. M. DuBose will preach the commencement sermon at Athens College, Athens, Ala., on May 20; Dr. R. L. Owenby, of Nashville, will preach that night, and Dr. F. N. Parker, of Emory University, will deliver the commencement address on the following Tuesday morning.

Mr. J. S. Otis, one of the oldest and most active members of our church at Logtown, Miss., died on Monday of this week at Touro Infirmary, this city, as the result of an automobile accident last week. The church suffers a great loss in his passing. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to his family and friends.

Rev. J. W. Faulk, our pastor at Mangham, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Tuesday of last week. He was in the city to arrange for a corner stone for the new brick church at Mangham, construction of which will begin about June 1. The cost of the building will be about $10,500.

A good revival meeting has just been brought to a close at McLain, Miss., where the pastor, Rev. A. J. Boyles, was assisted by Rev. W. T. Griffin, Mississippi Conference evangelist. There were eight additions to the church. The old church at McLain has been sold, and a new one will soon be built.

Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Greenwood District, reports an unusually good quarterly conference at Longview, on the Carrollton circuit, recently. The reports were all fine, and a great congregation was present. The pastor, Rev. S. E. Ashmore, was sick, but he got up out of bed to attend the conference. The Carrollton circuit will probably lead the district on the mission special.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to attend the graduating exercises of the high school at Sibley, La., on Friday evening, May 18, from Miss Clauda May Sheppard, a member of the class and daughter of our pastor at Sibley, Rev. C. F. Sheppard. To her we extend congratulations and best wishes.

Rev. W. W. Graves, of Columbia, Miss., who underwent a delicate and difficult surgical operation at Touro Infirmary, this city, about a month ago and who was able to return to his home, has returned to New Orleans for further treatment. He will probably make other trips back and forth during the process of his recovery.

Rev. C. B. Powell, Florien, La., writes that his little daughter, whose illness was reported in these columns recently, is still in a very critical condition, and he asks the prayers of the brethren in her behalf. The child had been in bed sixteen days at the time Brother Powell wrote. We are sure his request for prayer will be heeded by his many friends.

Mrs. R P. Neblett, Corresponding Secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society, North Mississippi Conference, and wife of the pastor at Kosciusko, has been sick for ten days with a severe throat infection, but has sufficiently improved to be up. It was necessary for her to cancel several engagements, in various parts of the Conference, to speak in the interest of the Council, which was recently held at Nashville.

Rev. Robert A. Clark, pastor of the First Methodist Church at Mayfield, Ky., who was called to Kosciusko, Miss., by the death of his brother-in-law, Sam H. Atkinson, occupied the pulpit at the First Methodist Church on Sunday morning, April 29, and preached a splendid sermon to a great congregation. Brother Clark was among his boyhood friends, as he was reared in Kosciusko, going into the ministry from that section.

The episcopal assignments for this year are the same as last year, with the exception of adjustments made necessary by the death of Bishop Dickey. Bishop Candler, who is greatly loved throughout the church and throughout this territory especially, remains, of course, in charge of the Louisiana, the Mississippi, and the North Mississippi Conferences. The dates are as follows: North Mississippi, at Pontotoc, Oct. 31; Mississippi, at Philadelphia, Nov. 7; Louisiana, at Lake Charles, Nov. 21.

The Second Methodist Church was organized at Gulfport, Miss., on Thursday night of last week, with about fifty members. Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder of the Seashore District, effected the organization, baptizing three infants at the same time. A building committee was appointed, and a church will soon be built. Rev. George H. Jones pastor at Long Beach, and Rev. M. L. Burton will give pastoral oversight to the church for the present.

Rev. J. W. Thompson, pastor of the Broad Street Methodist Church, Hattlesburg, Miss., writes: "We closed a meeting at Broad Street last Sunday night with great results. Brother Luther A. Horn, Conference evangelist of the Alabama Conference, who lives at Mobile, did the preaching. He is one of the best preachers, singers, and workers that I know of. We received thirty-one into the church. Our new church is moving along nicely and we hope to be in it in early summer. It will be one of the best churches in the Mississippi Conference.

The editor of the Advocate had the privilege of preaching the commencement sermon for the high school at Franklinton, La., last Sunday. There was an unusually fine graduating class of thirty-nine—twenty boys and nineteen girls. The service was held in the Centenary Methodist Church, of which Rev. C. C. Miller is pastor. A great congregation gave helpful attention to the message. The editor is indebted to Prof. T. H. McAfee, principal of the high school, and to Brother Miller for many gracious courtesies. With Brother Miller, he also enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Simmons at dinner. Franklinton is a fine town, and the churches and schools are among the best in the State.

THE MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Meridian District Conference met in the Methodist church at DeKalb, Thursday morning, April 19, and adjourned at noon the next day.

All the pastors of the district, several local preachers, and a goodly number of lay members of the conference were present.

Under the guiding hand of Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder, every detail of the conference work was carefully looked after.

Special emphasis was given the two campaigns now on, viz., the Millsaps building program and the Superannuate Endowment. Representatives of these interests were present and spoke in their behalf.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: D. W. Heidelberg, S. J. Creekmore, Miss Lillybeck Phillips, S. M. Graham, L. P. Brown, C. W. Cochran, T. H. Naylor, W. D. Hawkins, Miss Madge Stuart, C. L. Daniel, C. G. Stokes, Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, and Mrs. Roulston Huggins.

The preaching of the occasion was well done by Brothers J. A. Moore, W. W. Moore, and J. L. Smith.

The generous hospitality of the people of DeKalb was highly appreciated by all, as was the thoughtful attention of Brother H. E. Raley, the pastor, who proved himself an excellent host.

Lauderdale was chosen as place of next meeting.

W. A. HAYS, Secretary.

IMPORTANT NOTICE CONCERNING PASTORS' SCHOOL, SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.

The Seashore Divinity School is scheduled to open its twentieth session at the Seashore Camp Ground, Biloxi, Miss., on June 18, 1928. The Board of Directors of the school, at an official meeting held in June, 1927, agreed to add to its program of work for 1928 a Pastors' School, to be conducted for the benefit of all the pastors of the patronizing Conferences who have finished the courses of study provided by the church for undergraduates, and for laymen who may desire to take such work.

The program for the Pastors' School as worked out by the committee appointed by the Board of Directors, in co-operation with Dr. Stonewall Anderson, representing the General Board of Education, is printed in this week's issue of the Advocate. Please look over this program and decide which course you desire to take, and then write me as early as possible at Vicksburg, Miss., so that an order may be placed for the books in advance of the opening of the school.

MRS. MARY GLENN was born Oct. 12, 1864, and died April 25, 1928. Sister Glenn gave her heart to God and joined the Methodist church. She was married to John E. Glenn, Feb. 19, 1885. To this union God gave eleven children; three of them preceded her to the beyond. She leaves these and one sister, together with a host of friends, to mourn her going; but yet they mourn not as those that have no hope—children, husband and sister expect to meet her on the other side. We laid her to rest in the midst of a host of friends and relatives to await the resurrection morning.

Her pastor,

ALGIE S. OLIVER.

MRS. BERTHA (BERT) EBLING, of Courtland, Miss., died on April 3, 1928, which was her birthday. She was born in Winston County, near Louisville, on April 3, 1885. She was laid to rest in the Louisville, Miss., cemetery on Thursday of the same week, funeral service being conducted by her pastor, G. W. Robertson, assisted by Brother H. M. Eilis, Brother J. N. McMellian, of the Baptist church, and Rev. J. C. Watson, of the Presbyterian church, the last three mentioned pastors of local churches of Louisville. Mrs. Ebling leaves behind her, husband, Mr. Bert Ebling, of Courtland, Illinois Central agent of Courtland, and three brothers, W. J., C. E., and G. W. Atkinson, of Louisville, Miss.; also a sister, Mrs. J. R. Homer, of Louisville, to mourn her going. Mrs. Ebling was a member of the Methodist church in Courtland, and had been a member of the Methodist church since she was seven years of age. She was also a loyal member of the Eastern Star. She was a consecrated Christian woman of the highest type. She took an interest in everything pertaining to the moral and spiritual welfare of the church and community in which she lived. Her worth to her home and church cannot be estimated. We all shall miss her. To know her best was to love her most. She has gone to her reward, to awaken in the resurrection morning with the coming of the Christ whom she honored and loved. Mrs. Ebling suffered much. She was in failing health for several years, and for the last three and a half years was confined to her bed; but in it all she displayed a great deal of patience, and bore her suffering without complaining. Her place at home is vacant now; yet in it all we have faith to believe that all of God's people who knew her and loved her will meet her again. May God's blessings rest upon her husband, brothers, and sister, who are left behind.

Her pastor,

G. W. ROBERTSON.

The subject of this sketch, BROTHER JOSEPH R. CAMP, was born in Marion County, Ala., Aug. 19, 1866, and died at his home in Amory, Miss., March 17, 1928. Brother Camp moved to Amory in 1896, and at once identified himself with the best interests of the community. He was a contractor and builder by trade, and made good in his chosen field of labor. Many beautiful homes and other buildings, including the spacious and commodious Sunday school annex of the First Methodist Church of Amory, stand as a testimonial of his ability as a builder. Brother Camp became a Christian early in life and united with the Methodist church. He loved his church because he loved his Lord. His love for his Lord enabled him more perfectly to love his fellow-man. He was agreeably and kindly disposed toward all with whom he came in contact. In his later years he was made a steward of the church he had loved and served, and remained a steward until his death. He bore his burden and pain of a long illness with a patience and submission that gave testimony of a strong heart and a great faith. Frequently he would say to his friends: "It is all in the hands of the Lord." Just a few months before he died he dreamed, and on waking he told his wife about it, and said: "I dreamed last night that I was talking to Jesus, and it seemed that he was going to take me home with him; but he said if he did, he would send some one to take care of you and the children." He held no horrors of the impending issue, and his going away was as a child falls asleep. A devoted wife and six children, four boys and two girls, and three brothers and two sisters are left to mourn his going away. Funeral services were conducted in the First Methodist Church at Amory by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. R. Lott, a former pastor, and Rev. C. F. Hinds, of the Baptist church, and Rev. L. N. Edmunds, of the Presbyterian church. His remains were laid to rest in the Masonic cemetery beneath an embankment of beautiful flowers, to await the final resurrection.

His pastor,

C. A. PARKS.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom, to call home from our midst the wife of our pastor, MRS. D. E. VICKERS, whose perfect faith and consecrated life has wielded a great influence for good, and has been a great inspiration to our Missionary Society and community.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That our church and Missionary Society have lost a most valued and consecrated member.

2. While we mourn in sorrow her absence, we bow in submission to him who doeth all things well.

3. That her life will be a living memorial to her loved ones, her church and her friends.

4. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her devoted husband and children, in this their deepest hour of sorrow.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be entered on the minutes of our Missionry Society, a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and one sent to the bereaved family.

Signed by: Mrs. L. D. McLaurin, Mrs. W. J. Ward, Mrs. J. N. Gammage, Committee.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE CATALOG OF 1860.

An interesting document has just been hung in the parlor of Cooper Hall of Whitworth College. This is a framed copy of one of the first catalogs or bulletins ever issued by Whitworth College. At the annual meeting of the Whitworth Alumnae Association in 1927 Miss Josephine Lewis, who was at that time the president of the Association, made the presentation of this bulletin to the college.

It consists of a single sheet about seven inches wide and eleven inches long. The document is not dated, but it makes announcements of the exercises of the college that are to begin Jan. 4, 1860, and end June 20, 1860. We quote as follows from this document: "Whitworth College for young ladies, Brookhaven, Lawrence County, Miss. Faculty: Rev. J. P. Lee, President, assisted by competent and successful teachers. Mrs. Nancy A. Hoskins, Matron. Rev. Milton J. Whitworth, Proprietor."

The rates of board, tuition, etc., are given with special mention of extra charges for the twenty weeks, such as: French and Latin, each $12; lessons on piano or guitar, $25; use of instrument, $5; painting in oils, $25; lessons in embroidery, $12; drawing, $10; painting and water colors, $15. The motto given is: "Pray, Work." "Labor on Earth, rest in Heaven." It states that a report concerning attendance, recitation, conduct will be sent to parents or guardians each four weeks. "Buildings new and commodious, having more than 600 feet of gallery. Playground ample and retired. Rooms capacious and well furnished."

The board of visitors are listed as follows: "Dr. Robert Montgomrey, J. Warren, Sen., J. S. Carson, Esq., Rev. W. B. Johnson, John Storm, Esq., J. E. McNair, Rev. B. B. Whittington, Rev. J. H. Lany, Rev. P. E. Green, E. L. Bowen, Hon. J. H. Thompson, G. I. Mortimer, James M. Turner." The following names are mentioned as references: "Rev. J. G. Thornton, D.D., Rev. J. G. Jones, Hon. A. G. Brown, Rev. G. M. Talley, Hon. W. P. Harris, Hon. Judge Watts, Hon. P. S. Catchings, Rev. A. B. Nickelson, Rev. C. K. Marshall, Hon. J. J. McRea, Rev. G. D. Wade."

Included is a list of six things required and six things forbiddden in the conduct of the institution. Most of these requirements have been in force during all the history of Whitworth up to the present time.

PREACHING VALUES

In New Translations of the New Testament

By HALFORD E. LUCCOCK

Here are the "high spots" in the three leading translations of the New Testament, those by Moffatt, Weymouth, and Goodspeed. Original, fertile in invention, stimulating to the imagination, these paragraphs of brief, pointed and incisive comment provide starting points for fresh thinking.

"Dr. Luccock has picked out from the general mass of new renderings those which struck him most forcibly. The result is a volume refreshing to the jaded preacher's mind. He is always alert, picturesque, facile and interesting. Any preacher is bound to get sermons out of it. I found that in spite of myself the first sermon I preached after reading Dr. Luccock's book was full of Dr. Luccock's illustrations."—Harry Emerson Fosdick, D.D., in The Christian Century.

"I consider it the most valuable book for the inspiration of sermon builders that has appeared in a long time. It ought to have—and I presume it will have—a very wide distribution. The comments on the texts are just right; just long enough; just detailed enough to set the preacher going—with ample room for him to use his own ingenuity."—Lloyd C. Douglas, Pastor, First Congregational Church, Los Angeles, Calif.

THE RELIGION OF THE SPIRIT

Studies in Faith and Life

By ERNEST FREMONT TITTLE

"After reading The Religion of the Spirit it is easy to understand Dr. Tittle's ever increasing power and popularity, not only among students, but in the lives of thoughtful business and professional men who throng his church. For richness of message, beauty of presentation, skill in application and illustration, some of these sermons are models."—Yale Divinity News.

"Forward-looking, taking into account the best of modern thought, Dr. Tittle has a mighty grip upon spiritual realities. Unafraid, he faces modern problems and exalts the things of the spirit. Here is one of the best antidotes for materialism and utilitarianism which are so rampant these days. With this spiritual power there is also an intellectual cogency of the highest order. He makes you think through and through."—Boston Evening Transcript.

MESSAGE FROM OUR NEW MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUPERINTENDENT OF YOUNG PEOPLE.

Dear Fellow-Workers: Council, with ... usual inspiration in this Jubilee ..., has stirred within our hearts a ... to press forward in the days to ... This same vision has been ... in the great spiritual session ... our Annual Conference just closed. ... one of our Jubilee objectives we ... asked to deepen the spiritual lives ... our young people by means of or... them into systematic service. ... young people of to-day are our greatest assets and the adults of tomorrow. Would that you each had been privileged to hear our Council Superintendent of Young People, Miss Julia Lake Stevens. Will our young people have a great vision of Christian service? Will they he trained to carry on? This is for you to answer. The responsibility of our young life is upon our hands. Using the phrase of our beloved Miss Belle Bennett, "What will you do about it?" Have you already organized your young people? If not, please may I beg of you to do so. Why?

Our church needs a great vision if we have world redemption. This vision can best be grasped by our Young People. These young people need a sense of world comradeship. Only through united study can the common interests and desires of the young life of the world be realized, thereby deepening the sense of brotherhood. The responsibility for financing certain fields is put upon the Young People of the church, and it is only through an organized effort that this obligation can be met. The ranks of the missionary forces at the home base must soon be filled by young people, and they should he trained for service. The command, "Go ye into all the world," is to the young people of our day especially.

Is it worth while? I believe it is. Are you willing to help? Will you organize your work? Select a superintendent for your young people if you do not have one. Encourage her and help her to perfect her organization at once. Please send me her name and address. If you want information for organizing order "Young People's Organization" from Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, 706 Church Street, Nashville, Tenn. Get in touch with your district secretary if you need her, she will he glad to help you.

Mrs. Saunders has been compelled to give up the office as Conference Superintendent of Young People, because of sickness in her home. We regret that she had to take this step. After careful and prayerful consideration, I have agreed to take this office. I realize my limitations, my inexperience, hut my heart is in the work, and in his strength will do my best. I covet our young people for Christ. I cannot do anything without your prayerful cooperation and help. I helieve you, too, are interested in this great work. It is your privilege to know, to understand, to plan in leading the young people in your community and church to Christ. I know of no hetter way to begin than through organizing them. Oh! women, pray for this work. Can I depend on you? If at any time I can be of service or give you information, call on me; I will do my hest to serve you. Pray for me.

May God bless you in his work.

Sincerely,

MRS. C. W. COCHRAN.

GREENWOOD DISTRICT MEETING.

Methodists to Hold Next Meet at Indianola.

Fifty-seven delegates from the northern part of the Grenwood District of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met with the Missionary Society of the Ruleville church Friday for their annual district meeting.

The district secretary, Mrs. W. V. Bailey, of Tchula, presided, and Mrs. J. M. Wells, of Lambert, was elected secretary. Mrs. Marcie Stancill, of Drew, conducted an impressive devotional service. Mrs. Juanita Brown, of Sallis, Conference Superintendent of Young People's Work, and Mrs. R. P. Neblett, of Tupelo, Conference Superintendent of Children's Work, each brought inspiring messages on the work in their respective departments.

Reports given by representatives of young people and the children indicated progress in both these departments. In the afternoon Mrs. J. E. Coleman hrought the conference an inspirational message on "The Transforming Power of Jesus." Among the other interesting speakers were Mrs. Townsend, of Webh; Mrs. Bailey, who spoke of the recent meeting in Nashville, Tenn. After reading resolutions thanking the Methodists of Ruleville for the splendid hospitality, the conference adjourned to meet in 1929 with the church at Indianola.

THE WOMAN'S BUILDING ON MOUNT SEQUOYAH, ARKANSAS.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Control of the proposed Woman's Building on Mount Sequoyah, plans and means were carefully discussed. The need for the huilding seemed paramount.

Announcement was made of the gift from the late Colonel H. L. Remmel of $5,000 in memory of his wife, the late Elizabeth C. Remmel, and of the fact that this money would be availiable at intervals during the next six months.

The treasurer reported on hand $9,675, with the steel framing and one car load of cut stone paid for. Several of the Conferences reported money coming in and the prospect of substantial payments heing made to the building fund this quarter.

A new contract for the erection of the bufiding at a flat rate, in piace of the old cost plus plan, has heen worked out by the Executive Committee, and when all facts were in hand the Board voted to proceed at once with the building and complete the exterior hefore next summer's assemhly, and if possible with the money in hand, arrange to have the hulidlng usahle for temporary quarters for the next assemhly.

The outlook is good. The need is great and the call is ringing to every Conference in the Southwest to do its best to collect and send promptly to the treasurer, Mrs. E. F. Ellis, 104 College Avenue, Fayetteville, Ark., all money possible.

Let every woman interested in leadership training on Mount Sequoyah do her best to collect unpaid quotas from the auxiliaries or special gifts or memorial funds, and send forward the same promptly that the bnilding may he ready for this summer. To complete this worthy enterprise during the Jubilee year will register loyalty to the cause of missions and increase the usefulness of our leaders. Shall we not put forth our best efforts?

Pres. Board of Control.

How Much Water Should Baby Get?

A Famous Authority's Rule

By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in gold.

Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The following have reported on the observance of Sunday School Day: Grenada, $50; Sardis, $10.60; Amory, $15.60; Coldwater, $14.75; Drew, $16; Black Hawk, $5.26; Birdie, $0.85; Coahoma, $15; Kosclusko, $12; Red Banks, $4.45; Sidon, $4.74. One hundred and fifty-two schools have ordered programs. Let us have an additional hundred and we will be happy. Sardis District is still in the lead in ordering programs. It will pay to advertise the Day on the bulletin board and in the town paper. Do this for the sake of the children over the Conference. Put on your bulletin board the announcement of the Conference Training School.

One result of the three Institutes held in the Greenville District, fourteen promised to teach training classes in the local churches. It is out of the question for the church to employ and pay a sufficient number of instructors to teach the thousands of parents and teachers who need to know more about dealing with childhood and youth. If we only taught those who attend training schools, the expense would be too great; but if a large number who attend training schools will teach classes in the local churches, then we are justified in holding these schools. Teach a Bible course or have one of the Bible courses taught in the school for credit or teach the course, "What Every Methodist Should Know." There is a joy in teaching that thrills, like that of preaching, provided one is prepared to teach. If you think the world is going to the bow-wows, head it off by teaching teachers how to teach and thereby multiply yourself by the number you teach. One aim in "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (the aim of religious education), is to prevent children from going into sin. Is it better to cure the sick than to prevent sickness? It is merciful to heal, but it is more merciful to keep in health. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Let us put the adage into practice.

The most important course to be offered in the Teacher Training School to be held in Grenada, June 4-9, is, "The Home in Society." The source of our trouble is not on the streets or in the divorce courts, but it is in the place called home. If we fail to Christianize the home, every angel in heaven might come to earth as evangelists and they could not change the currents to any appreciable extent. The atoning sacrifice of Christ is magnified in the prevention of sin as much so as in the cure of sin.

Miss Helen Swisher, Professor of Religious Education in Grenada College, has given 25 young women definite instruction in conducting the Daily Vacation Church School. Miss Miss Rhinehart, music teacher, gave these young women an appreciation of the Methodist Hymnal and gave them an appropriate selection of hymns that should be taught to children. Personally, I have a high regard for what these teachers have done for our girls at Grenada College. Both these teachers are scholarly and brilliant. No other institution in the State equals Grenada College in giving our young women the instruction needed in home making and of becoming the teachers in our schools. If our people could know the full value of the work done at Grenada, they would not have waited so long to endow it and thus fit it for larger usefulness and make it permanent. The young women mentioned above are eager to render service in the home church, and in other churches that may need them. If you are interested in a D. V. C. S., write me.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

We have received contributions from sixteen Sunday schools for Sunday School Day up to May 5. Fourteen of these schools are on the Honor Roll. The amount of money sent in by districts is as follows:

Vicksburg District, $76.81; Seashore District, $58.42; Jackson District, $55.77; Brookhaven District, $28.12; Meridian District, $20.40; Hattiesburg District, $8. Total, $247.52.

This is a good start, and if this lead is maintained we will have the largest amount of Sunday School Day offering ever in the history of the Conference. Let us hope thta it will be so. The joy to me is that so many are reporting real fine programs, and several have said that the pageant is the very best they have ever seen. This is what will get the entire message of religious education over to the hearts of the people.

The Standard Training School at Biloxi was as fine a small school as we have had. The spirit of the school is all that we could desire. They are now planning for the school for another year and all seemed to be very happy over this outcome of this school. While there were several things that interfered and hampered, there was all through a definite spirit of helpfulness and hopefulness. This was greatly appreciated by all. We had 41 enrolled and 35 credits. This was a good per cent of the enrollment. If we had heen anxious for just a larger enrollment, we might have been able to make it, but we were anxious for serious good work.

The program of the Conference Board is moving forward on schedule. We have been able to meet each appointment so far and we are about even with the schedule for the Conference year. This is very gratifying indeed. We trust that it will continue. This little note does not mean that there have not been broken dates, but it does mean that the entire program has moved forward on schedule time. Mr. Hull, the Dual-Extension Secretary, has had a wonderful month of usefulness and helpfulness. Remember him and his difficult tasks in your prayers. He needs your aid in this way that he may be used of God and be a larger blessing to the folks than he would be otherwise.

Let us all be closer to God than ever. Pray for the work and workers.

April set a new high mark in Willys-Overland history for production and sales. It was more than 14.4% ahead of March—which showed a gain of 17% over the previous highest month for all time.

The first 4 months of 1928 were 36.7% greater than the corresponding months in 1927. And they were the greatest 4 months since the company has been in business.

Sales of the Whippet were 91% higher in February than in January. They were 44% greater in March than in February, and April was 17% ahead of March, and plant facilities are still being expanded to meet the increasing demand for this most popular car.

The Whippet price reductions, the recently announced low price of the Willys-Knight Standard Six, and the introduction of the new Whippet Six—the world's lowest priced six-cylinder automobile—have resulted in the greatest buying demand in the company's 20-year history.

LETTER FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: With our anniversary gifts still coming in, I am glad to report that the following amounts have been received up to April 30:

Bastrop, $8.89; Campti, $2; De Ridder, $6.30; Franklinton, $7.75; Hammond, $13; Homer, $11; Lake Charles, $8.45; Mangum Memorial, Shreveport, $11.01; Selma, $5; Winnsboro, $10.

With a number of League chapters still to report, I am sure that we will have a gift that our Leaguers might well be proud of. Please send in your gift at once, as we are anxious to know our final total.

Since writing you, I have had the pleasure of making a trip to Lake Arthur in the interest of the Girls' Camp to be held there this summer. I have attended the Monroe and Ruston District Conferences at Bastrop. At these conferences I met with the District Secretaries to assist them in their plans for promoting the Assembly in their districts. With such a fine spirit among the secretaries I feel sure that we may look forward to a great assembly for 1928.

On last Sunday, April 22, the Leaguers of the lower part of Minden District met at Rochelle to organize a union for that part of the district. I am sorry that I was unable to meet with them, as I am told that the rally was most successful. Rev. and Mrs. James T. Harris were most cordial in offering their church and loyal support for the day. Our State president, Charles White, and district secretary, Mary Searles, were among those present.

During the month of May there will be district meetings and union meetings all over the Conference in the interest of the oratorical contest district elimination. The winners will be sent by the district to Mansfield assembly.

We are very sorry to state that we have lost the splendid services of Mr. W. R. Younger, Alexandria District Secretary. His work in Alexandria District has been most successful, and we appreciate his untiring efforts. Miss Blanche Steadman, of Alexandria, will act as secretary for the remainder of the year.

As there are only two months left in our League year, let's be very much in earnest in all that we do.

Very sincerely,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Field Secretary.

MINDEN DISTRICT NEWS.

The Epworth Junior Society of Rochelle, La., was organized on Jan. 30, 1928, with eighteen members. It has grown to fifty-one members, in three divisions, all of whom are very interested and anxious to work. The Juniors pay 5 cents a member per month, and the Baby and Primary Divisions pay 25 cents a year each.

Miss Marjorie Gilmer is the fine superintendent of this group of Juniors, with Mrs. F. P. Hilburn as associate superintendent. Minden District is proud of the growth of this Epworth Junior Society, and the work it is doing.

Ever-Ready Union Meeting.

On Sunday, April 15, the Ever-Ready Union met in monthly session at Haughton, La., with five chapters represented, as follows: Haughton, Benton, Bethel, Springhill, Minden, each with a good number of Leaguers present. An interesting devotional program was given, with Miss Carolyn Worley leading, consisting of special music by Haughton and Springhill; a chorus by the Haughton Juniors; and a mock and model Epworth League devotional program prepared by the Minden League.

After the devotional, the meeting was turned over to President Paul Casseis. It was planned to have a union contest at Doyline, Sunday, May 13. Other business was taken up, after which light refreshments were served and a short period of fellowship was enjoyed. The meeting adjourned with the League benediction.

We were especially proud of this meeting because of the fact that we had four of our pastors with us, whose encouragement and support are a great help to us in this work: Rev. L. I. McCain, of Minden; Rev. J. E. Selfe, of Springhill; Rev. H. E. Pfost, of Plain Dealing, and Rev. E. W. Day, of Haughton. We sincerely hope that they will be with us at our future meetings, as well as other of our pastors.

We are indeed proud of our three sub-district unions in Minden District. Next week I hope to give some news from the union at Campti and that section of the district.

MARY SEARLES,
District Secretary.

FROM THE SULPHUR CHARGE.

The new parsonage at Sulphur, La., is about completed, and the pastor plans to move into same this week. The building is a six-room modern bungalow building, equipped with electric lights and water works. The old parsonage will be used for the present for Sunday school purposes.

The contract was let for a new parsonage at Vinton a few days ago, and the contractors are erecting the building. The building without the site will cost about $3,500.

Vinton is looking forward to a resident pastor. The town is growing, and needs a preacher on the ground. Plans are also made for making some repairs and additions to the church building.

On April 1 a men's Bible class was organized at Vinton. Their meetings are held in the Masonic hall. Prof. H. A. Norton is the teacher of the class, and J. N. Wethereil the president.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., will assist in revival services at Sulphur, June 7-17.

Rev. R. S. Walton will preach the baccalaureate sermon for the Sulphur High School, May 20.

R. S. WALTON.

"ALL THE DAYS."

Who does not know how day differs from day, even in a life of fairly even tenor? Who does not feel the differences of the day's surfaces, and the varieties of these colors? From the golden sunlight of a day of joy to the blackness of a day of woe, through all gradations, the scale runs as we journey on. From the grass of the meadow to the miry clay of the marsh, to the hot dust of the level road, to the flints of the steep ascent, to the waters of the cold river, varies the surface. And the great Companion knows it all. And he breaks up the great promise of the Presence to suit just it to every detail of our need: "I with you am, all the days, and all the long, even unto the end."—H. C. Moule.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

(Secretry's Report.)

According to several of the veneable brethren present, the 1928 session of the Jackson District Conference was the best that Mississippi Methodism has seen in many years. The opening sermon was delivered on Wednesday evening, April 18, by Brother Thomas O. Prewitt. The other sermons of the session were delivered by Rev. L. L. Roberts and Dr. Roife Hunt. °All three of these brethren, fired with a zealous evangelical passion, brought messages that were inspiring and edifying to all present.

Thursday morning, after devotions conducted by our presiding elder, Rev. J. L. Decell, the conference was formally called to order, with Brother Decell in the chair. The orgauization was perfected by the election of the writer as secretary, and Rev. Del Longgrear as assistant secretry, the call of the roll, and the confirmation of the committees nominated by the chair.

It was a delightful priviiege to have had with us three of our honored superannuates, Revs. H. Walter Featherston, J. H. Foreman, and C. H. Eilis, who conducted our devotions from time to time.

Thursday afternoon Dr. J. Reese Lit, professor of history in Millsaps College, delivered an eloquent address on "Our Lord and His Miracles." He gave the modern, scientific explanation of miracles in a manner that could be understood by the average layman. The Thursday evening service was devoted to the Clean-up Campaign of the Superannuate Endowment Fund. Rev. J. M. Morse presided, and addresses were made by Brothers R. A. Talbert and James Simrall.

The spiritual interest of the conference came to its climax in the "Layman's Hour" Friday morning. Brother W. C. Wood, District Lay Leader, presided. Two stirring addresses were delivered by Judge J. M. Foreman and Mr. J. M. Sullivan. At this point in the proceedings, Rev. T. M. Browniee was appointed by the acting chairman, and made a most pleasing and effective manner he presented our beloved presiding elder and his family a handsome silver water set in token of the love, esteem, and appreciation of the pastors and laymen of the district toward them.

The conference licensed one young man, Brother G. K. Adair, student in Millsaps College, to preach, and Brother C. E. Downer, the pastor-host of the conference, was recommended for readmission into the Annual Conference.

All of the pastors of the district were present and made reports that indicate a steady progress in all branches of the work. There seems to be a great revival of religious interest and activity springing up in our midst.

The beautiful new Glendale church of Jackson was the seat of the conference. Lunch was served in the basement by the ladies at the noon hour each day. The good people of this church gave us a most hearty welcome, and entertainment was provided for all who would remain at night. Florence was selected as the 1929 meeting place.

The conference adjourned sine die Friday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock.

LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

(Secretary's Report.)

The Lake Charles District Conference convened at the Methodist church at Lake Arthur on Wednesday, April 18, with the presiding elder, Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., in the chair. The devotional exercises were conducted by Brother Doss, after which the conference got down to the regular order of business. After the election of a secretary and the calling of the roll, the committes that were to function during the conference were announced by the presiding elder.

The reports from the different pastoral charges showed that up to the present there was a net gain of 119 members in the district. All the pastors gave evidence of a revival spirit, and spoke of meetings held, or prospective evangelistic efforts. Brothers Vaughan, Atkinson, McLellan, Joyner and Snelling were on hand in the interest of their work. The opening sermon was preached by R. F. Harrell, of Many, at 7:30 p. m., Wednesday. The devitional service of the second session was conducted by Rev. J. M. Spires, who has recently come from Mississippi to take charge of the Cameron work. At the 11 o'clock hour on the second day Dr. Wells, of First Church, Baton Rouge, brought a very inspiring message in connection with the Superannuate cause.

The second day was the banner day of the conference, as far as interest and attendance go. A large number of lay delegates were noted, and only two of the preachers from the district were absent, and this was caused by sickness.

The devotional exercises of the third session were conducted by Rev. C. B. Powell, of Florine.

Mrs. R. S. Walton, the newly appointed District Secretry of the Woman's Missionary Society, addressed the conference at the evening session; also Dr. Wynn, who brought a strong message on pastoral evangelism.

The presence of Brother A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, was a pleasure to his friends. Brothers Hanes and Scott, evangelists, who were engaged in a meeting with Brother Jordan at Crowley, were introduced to the conference. Brother Scott sang a very impressive solo.

After a resolution of thanks for the hospitality of the pastor and people of Lake Arthur, the conference adjourned with prayer by Brother Roy.

Brother Doss showed his ability as an executive in the expeditious handling of the business of the conference. All the interests of the church were looked after and fully discussed. At night Brother Doss preached a very helpful and inspiring sermon.

MODERN TENDENCY IN AUTOMOBILE CONSTRUCTION.

By J. F. Jacobs.

There is hardly an industry in which such rapid progress has been made in the matter of quality of material, quantity production, excellency of workmanship, and abundance of comfort at such a comparatively low cost.

Automobile manufacturers generally have made remarkable progress along this line. Particularly is this true of the Willys-Overland, Inc., Toledo, Ohio, whose remarkable light car, the Whippet, is being advertised steadily through the columns of this publication. Astounding reductions have been made in price on the Whippet, and at the same time the quality has not only been kept up, but has been steadily improved. The Whippet of to-day at a price of less than $600 offers comfort, elegance, stability, strength and speed that would not have been available in a $3,000 car of ten years ago, and yet they say the buying power of the American dollar is waning.

If other manufacturers of America were to progress as Willys-Overland, Inc., have done, and could produce a product of such improved quality at such exceptionally great reductions in cost and price, many of the economic problems of America will have been solved.

We take pleasure in extending our congratulations to the manufacturer of this exceptional car, the Whippet. We predict for them a rapidly growing popularity for their car, and bespeak for them the support of all of the readers of this publication, who are attracted by quality at a low price.

Congregations who have in mind the purchase of an automobile as a present for their pastor, could find no better value, or no more serviceable and appreciated gift than the Whippet car.

On March 4, a new Methodist hall was opened in Canha in the Sao Paulo district, Brazil. At the opening exercises there was not a vacant seat, and many people stood all during the services, even more people standing outside to listen than were able to get inside the building.

THE MEETING OF THE BISHOPS.

By Bishop John M. Moore, Secretary.

The annual meeting of the College of Bishops met in Nashville, Tenn., May 4-8, 1928. All the Bishops were present. The official announcement of the death of Bishop James E. Dickey, on April 17, 1928, brought renewed sadness. Bishop Candler was appointed to prepare the memoir of Bishop Dickey. It was agreed to hold the memorial service for Bishop Dickey and Bishop Hendrix at the fall meeting, which will be held in Dallas, Tex., beginning Dec. 13, at 3 p. m.

At the opening session, Bishop DuBose exhibited the table and gavel used by Bishop Ashury at the Annual Conference at Green Hill, N. C., in 1808. The gavel has become the personal property of Bishop DuBose. He presented it to the College of Bishops. Bishop Moore contributed the amount necessary to purchase the table from its owner, and presented it also to the College of Bishops. Thus the bishops became the owners of these highly prized Asburyan articles.

Bishop Beauchamp made report of the organization of the Central Conference among the Conferences and Missions among Mexican peoples. He made clear the desire of the Mexicans for larger liberty in handling their own church affairs. Bishop Ainsworth made report of his official visit to the Orient, and Bishop Candler of his visit to Cuba.

Only one question of law was reported. Bishop Cannon was asked at the session of the Congo Mission, "Who compose a Mission?" and he answered, "The regularly appointed missionaries and the regularly appointed native preachers." The action upon the decision was postponed to the fall meeting.

Bishop McMurry announced that Mr. Paul Brown, of St. Louis, who died during the winter, left in his will $100,000 to Central College at Fayette, Mo., $100,000 for the endowment of Barnes Hospital in St. Louis, and $100,000 to the Board of Finance for the Superannuate Fund. He announced that Mr. Frank C. Rand and Mr. Jackson Johnson, of St. Louis, had given to Barnes Hospital $350,000 for new buildings, and that the Rockefeller Foundation has given $450,000 to Barnes Hospital for endowment.

Mr. R. E. Nollner, the Superintendent of the Southern Assembly at Lake Junaluska, spoke to the bishops on the financial conditions of the Assembly. The plans of the management to sell lots to individuals and churches to liquidate the indebtedness on the property were approved by the bishops.

The following paper was adopted: "The bishops of the church have heard with great gratification of the approaching completion of the new plant for the Wesleyan College at Macon, Ga., at a cost of $2,000,000 or more. The whole church, and particularly Georgia Methodists, is to be congratulated on the enlarged usefulness that this will bring to our oldest college for women. May we express the hope that all our people in that territory will see to it that this really notable enterprise is fully accomplished without delay."

Mr. B. A. Whitmore, the treasurer, reported that $1,710.90 had been paid in on the Wesley Memorial Fund which is to be used in paneling the room in Lincoln College, Oxford, England, which John Wesley occupied as a Fellow.

Bishop U. V. W. Darlington was chosen as Fraternal Messenger to the Wesleyan Methodist Church of England.

Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe, the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, was chosen as the Fraternal Messenger to the General Conferences of the Methodist Protestant Church, which meeets May 16, 1928, in Baltimore.

Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, pastor of St. John's Church in St. Louis, was chosen Fraternal Messenger to the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, which is in session in St. Louis.

Dr. J. W. Johnson, pastor of Fourth Avenue Church in Louisville, was chosen Fraternal Messenger to the African Methodist Episcopal Church, which is now in session in Chicago.

The Commission on Constitution which was provided for by the last General Conference was elected as follows: Bishop W. A. Candler, Bishop H. M. DuBose, Bishop U. V. W. Darlington; Rev. A. F. Watkins, D.D., Meridian, Miss.; Rev. T. D. Ellis, D.D., Louisville, Ky.; Rev. J. S. French, D.D., Bristol, Tenn.; Rev. D. M. McLeod, D.D., Charleston, S. C.; Rev. A. Frank Smith, D.D., Houston, Tex.; Rev. A. J. Lamar, D.D., Nashville, Tenn.; Hon. Daniel C. Roper, Washington, D. C.; Judge C. S. Nunn, Madisonville, Ky.; Judge M. E. Lawson, Liberty, Mo.; Judge H. E. Jackson, San Angelo, Tex.; Judge J. T. Ellison, Evergreen, Ala.; Judge George F. Maynard, Clarksdale, Miss.

Alternates: Bishop Sam R. Hay; Rev. F. N. Parker, D.D., Emory University, Georgia; Rev. C. W. Tadlock, D.D., St. Louis, Mo.; Judge Ed. S. Vaught, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Judge Frank Christian, Lynchburg, Va.

Upon the recommendation of Bishop Cannon the book, "Crescimento Mental" (Mental Growth) was substituted for Janet's Psychology in the Portugusee Course of Study.

Provision was made for voting at the Annual Conferences this church year on the Constitutional question coming down from the General Conference, which, if adopted, would require that the clerical representatives elected to the General Conference be members of the Annual Conference which elects when elected and at the time of the General Conference and that the lay representatives must be members of churches within the boundaries of the Annual Conferences which elect them, when elected and at the time of the General Conference.

The Board of Education at its session on May 2, 1928, had granted the petition of the Conferences in Oklahoma for concurrence in the proposed joint ownership and control of the Oklahoma City University with the Oklahoma Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church upon the basis which the Conferences in Oklahoma have approved, but asked the College of Bishops to give "their decision at an early date on the legal questions involved." The Bishops decided that they could not give the questions involved consideration because of their lack of jurisdiction under the law of the church.

Bishop Mouzon became the President of the College of Bishops under the rules at the close of the meeting, and will serve until the close of the fall meeting.

JOINT REPORT OF THE COMMITTEES ON SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES AND ON PROMOTION AND FINANCE.

(Adopted at the meeting of the General Board of Education, May 1-2.)

The report of the General Secretary of the Board of Education was before the committee. Your committee was impressed with the careful and exhaustive study submitted by the General Secretary in which he discusses the present financial status of our schools, colleges and universities, and presents in forcible language the needs of these institutions.

The total value of the property of the seventy-four institutions belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is $68,532,264. The indebtedness of these institutions is approximately $4,400,000. At present, our three universities, twelve senior colleges and three junior colleges are members of the regional standardizing agencies in their section; seven academies are on the accredited list. Thus it will be seen that fourteen of our senior colleges and twelve of our junior colleges are without membership in the Asssociation and fifteen of our academies are not accredited. To secure membership in the Association of the fourteen colleges $5,299,970 will be required. For the nineteen junior colleges to secure membership, $3,209,632 of endowment and $500,000 additional for equipment are required. Thus it will he seen that the colleges of our church need $8,009,602 to enable them to secure membership in the standardizing agencies. When this goal has been reached the needs will have enlarged and the institutions will be under the necessity of still further increasing the endowment and improving the equipment.

Should we evaluate our colleges and junior colleges by the recent standards arrived at by the Association of American Colleges, we would need the sum of $29,320,980 for our 26 senior colleges, or a total of $32,030,368. To this sum must be added a sufficient amount to meet the needs of the three universities and the twenty-two academies. It is evident, therefore, that Methodism is confronted with a stupendous task.

At the very heart of our entire organization stands Christian Education. It is our duty and our privilege to unite solid piety and high scholarship in the educational standards of our church. The call rings loud and clear for the people who belong to our denomination to strengthen the foundations of these institutions and thus train and equip the coming generations to take the places of leadership in church and State. Our people are becoming more and more wealthy, the resources of the South are being developed, and for the first time we are financially able to take care of our own. The needs of these institutions are urgent almost beyond expression. There is no time for delay.

The question continually arises in connection with our educational institutions as to whether or not all of them should be continued. On all hands the thoughtful minds agree that it is better that we have a few strong institutions than many weak, anaemic ones. We, therefore, recommend that each Annual Conference, or group of Conferences, within a State, appoint a committee whose duty it shall be to investigate the present status of our institutions of learning in their area, and that this committee report to the Annual Conferences its

TEN RIGHTEOUS MEN.

By Rev. Frank B. Hill.

Ibsen has said that "minorities govern the world." If I had a Men's Brotherhoood in my church, I would like for that to be debated.

The Old Testament story tells us that when the cities of the plain were hovering upon the brink of their doom, there was a promise from the side of God that had there been even as many as ten good men left in their midst, those cities would have been spared. It was the way of those Old Testament writers saying to the men of their own time that although dark clouds were gathering over their heads, and the worst seemed imminent, God's ancient promise stands, and that ten good men may save the State.

We are always tempted to suppose that face to face with forces which seem inevitable and implacable, what we can do is so small that it is good for nothing. And so we are tempted, and the more finely organized we are the more are we tempted face to face with such a time to become mere spectators of events. We say the floods have broken loose—things must now go their own way—the ingredients have been mixed, and now there is nothing left for us but to seek a place of shelter, and put our fingers into our ears, and await the explosion.

We have a kind of hope that things may turn out to be less grave than we fear, or that after the deluge, some things may survive which will make it still worth while to live.

Well, it is in order to confront that mood in which we really give up the good fight of faith, that the story stands. This is what we are to believe, that the worst is not inevitable, given the University, at the Moody Bible Institute. There is the point. The mere existence of a few good men in the midst of a corrupt mass might not save the mass, but, so the story alleges, the presence of a few good men in a corrupt mass will save that mass. If a few good men will throw their goodness into the scale, will speak, or will be silent, will acquit themselves before God in private—as good men—rallying their own souls by a daily baptism of themselves into seriousness and faith, in that case, says this old story, they will save the situation.

When any situation or prospect seems dark or heavy, we are to ask ourselves if we belong to the saving society of the ten.

Now, suppose there had been ten good men in Sodom; suppose, instead of going his way, Abraham had taken God at his word, and to prove God's promise (that if there were ten good men in the city, the city would have been spared) had replied: "I thank thee, O Lord, for I can lay my hands on ten good men in Sodom"—well, they would have been in a very responsible position. How, in all likelihood, would they have proceeded? One thing I am sure they would do. It is the first thing they would do until the danger was past, and would keep doing, with a different note indeed, but with the same intensity long after the danger was past. These ten good men would often meet together, and they would feel stronger in the others' presence than separate and alone. We are so made that we catch the fire from contact with one another—kneel together face to face when danger threatens.

In meeting together they would speak of the difficulties, and confess their own poor strength. When one man was weak, another would be strong; when one saw difficulty, another would have a solving word; when one lost hope, another would have an inspiration; and if the darkness became very dark, and all seemed to be a little lower than their wont, the ten men would soh out their secret in the ears of God, and I am sure they would be refreshed and see clearly. Out from their meeting place they would go to confront the sin and folly of their time and be brave.

One thinks of the words in which Marshal Foch made his report before he won the first battle of the Marne: "My center is giving; my left wing is retreating; the situation is excellent. I am attacking." Colonel Buchan, an English writer and an authority on the great war, says, "This is not bravado, but genius."

According to the Bible, a situation is deperate, not when things are apparently hopelessly bad, but when there is not a saving minority. Things, according to the Bible, are bad—it may even be they are hopeless—if we cannot muster ten good men, or if the ten do not play a unanimous part. There are fine and sensitive minds who are depressed to-day because it seems to them to be so; just there we have failed.

It may be that the ten religious men are abundantly in our midst, but not coming together in the presence of God, binding themselves more deeply, making their faith a more invincible thing, bathing their faces from time to time in the morning dew of God's presence.

It may be there that we are failing.

Great disasters are averted; great ideals achieved, not by men, but by God; great things happen, not so much by us as through us. There is the danger that each of the ten may be eating his heart out in secret, overborne and depressed, because of not coming together.

I have recalled this old story in which we have an ancient promise of God—that things are not yet beyond recall so long as there is a faithful minority who will appeal by their own goodness to those who are round about them, and make a steadfast intercession to the slumbering resources of God.

We are left to assume from the story that on the day when Sodom hung on the edge of an engulfing sea, there were not so many as ten good men left in their midst. We are apt to assume that had there been ten good men left in Sodom, the city would have been spared. If there had been ten who understood how much depended upon them, they would have drawn very close to one another, and close to God. And if a day had come when these ten men felt they themselves had become careless towards God, suddenly they would have wrestled with their mood until the breaking of the day.

There are good and tender hearts everywhere, but they may be failing to do their part, it may be in matters of outward and public behaviour; or they may be failing to do their part towards that deeper and only solution of all problems, the outpouring of the will of God upon mankind through their interceding hearts.

We are to ask ourselves again if we belong to the saving society of the ten.

(Dr. Hutton, editor of the British Weekly, has helped me in putting these thoughts together.)

EQUIPPING MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

By President D. M. Key.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College on Oct. 14, 1927, it was determined by the Board to undertake the raising of $650,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the physical plant of the college, this money to be raised and expended over a three-year period and the appeal to be made in a State-wide campaign in Jackson and in the two Conferences during the month of May, 1928. It is expected that $150,000 to $200,000 will be raised in the city of Jackson, and each of the Conferences is asked to accept a quota of $250,000.

If you will consider the matter briefly with me, I believe you will realize that Millsaps College's needs have not been overestimated by its Board of Trustees. Although Millsaps has had a position of leadership in endowment, and has now, I believe, an endowment as great as any other Methodist college, there are only four of our twenty classified institutions that have so meager an equipment of physical plant—Lagrange, Morris Harvey, Emory and Henry, and Hendrix. If the value of our hundred acre campus is taken out of the consideration, not a single college in our church does not have a greater investment in building and equipment than has Millsaps.

In 1917, largely from subscriptions in the city of Jackson, a dormitory housing eighty-seven students was erected. With that exception, not an increase in the physical plant has been made in twenty years.

Millsaps College was first to set up a requirement of extra quality work for graduation and promotion. It was one of the first to set up a minimum of achievement in order to stay in school. It is the only college in the State that maintains supervised evening study for deficient students. Its entrance reuqirements are the highest in the State.

Both a result and an evidence of the reality of this tradition and ideal of thoroughness of scholarship have been the achievements of our graduates in graduate and professional schools. In the past few years Millsaps graduates have led their classes at the University of Virginia Law Schools, the University of Florida Law School, at Stanford University at the Moody Bible Institute. There is to-day or has recently been a young Millsaps graduate on the faculty of nearly every one of our Methodist A grade colleges: F. K. Mitchell, on the Duke University; C. C. Norton, on the Wofford faculty; M. B. Swearington, on the Emory faculty; D. S. Dearmon, on the Kentucky Wesleyan faculty; M. M. Black and M. C. Huntley, on the Birmingham-Southern faculty; Beverly Hebert, on the Centenary faculty.

Because of the generosity of its founder, Major Millsaps, and because of the confidence that other moneyed men have had in the advantageous location of the college and in the effectiveness of its academic ideals and organization, the college has been able to build up a large endowment with a minimum of general appeals to the church. We have to-day nearly a million dollars of permanent endowment, a solid financial structure that makes the institution as firm as the rock of Gibraltar, serving Mississippi Methodism from its income as long as law and society shall stand. Because of this endowment Millsaps is able to double the value of every dollar that Methodism spends there for Christian education.

To these conditions as concerns Millsaps College, which I have set before you—that it occupies to-day as geographically strategic a position for wide service as it had when established by its far-seeing founders; that it has built up a solid and adequate foundation of academic traditions of scholarship and efficiency; and that it has built up a solid foundation of endowment, I will add one more. Mississippi is facing a great growth of population and commercial industrial development. Flood control in the Mississippi Valley, the dairying industry, the coming of super-power and manufacturing industries, the development of the cut-lands—these things will soon change our very social fabric. Our State school system must grow enormously. That State school system will ever be secular. It will be more and more vocational and practical, as you know is the tendency to-day. It will discount the things of the mind and the things of the spirit in favor of that which will promote the material well being of the State. That is the record of the development of public education in the wealthy States of the midwest from which are coming the population and the financial influence that are changing Mississippi to-day. To preserve the culture and the character, the spiritual and intellectual interest of the Mississippi that we and our ancestors knew, there must be great privately endowed colleges, which will influence and supplement the State institutions. This is a service that we of our day can render to our day and generation and the generations to come.

Millsaps College was conceived, organized and developed by men whose character, genius aud vision we can scarcely hope to emulate. It was placed on its commanding eminence overlooking the city and seen from far by travelers on the great trunk line railroad. It was given its character for faithful scholarship and consecrated service to church and State. And it was set upon the road to financial prominence and dignity. Will we carry out the dreams and intentions so nobly conceived and wrought by Galloway, Murrah, and Millsaps? Will we serve our day as they did theirs? Shall we not upon this eminence create a body for the institution worthy of the intellectual spirit and financial life blood that have spring from their labors? Shall we not provide a physical home for the college as fine as the spirit life that has grown there that the vision that they had may be fulfilled? What, do we conceive, would have been the attitude of our predecessors in the positions of responsibility to the church that we hold? What would those who conceived and founded Millsaps College do to-day if they faced our educational situation with its five cardinal facts?

1. That the college occupies a central position in a great and prosperous territory;

2. That it has by faithful performance of its task achieved a notable favor among the people;

3. That it has by the favor of Providence achieved a financial basis without great demands upon the church;

4. That upon it, because of its leadership, falls the responsibility to place the emphasis in Mississippi education on cultural, moral and spiritual values, and that by so doing it can largely influence Mississippi life;

5. That its physical equipment is so meager and antiquated as to endanger its efficiency.

In my opinion they would now as then gird their loins for a great and worthy task.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SUPERANNUATE ENDOWMENT FOR THE NEWTON DISTRICT CONFERENCE, HELD AT LAUREL, MISS., APRIL 23-25, 1928.

Dear Brethren: Your Committee on Superannuate Endowment submits the following report:

We call the attention of the ministers and laymen to the small amount that has been paid on our quota for the Superannuate Endowment from the Newton District. The amount assumed by the charges of this district for the five-year period was $33,702. The amount paid is $7,760, leaving a deficit of $25,949. While we deplore the small showing made, yet we rejoice in the renewed interest that is being manifested in this worthy cause, and believe that this year we will make a larger showing. We urge the ministers and laymen to put increased emphasis on this work for the next few months, realizing that if this special effort for the Superannuate Endowment is to succeed, we must have the co-operation of the membership of the churches as well as the ministers.

We greatly appreciate the inspiration that was brought by Rev. J. Loyd Decell, presiding elder of the Jackson District, in his great address on this cause last evening, April 24. We believe that the inspiration and results that will come from his message will greatly aid the people of the Newton District in finishing their quota. The committee feels that it is greatly in debt to him and wishes to express its gratitude.

We also wish to express our appreciation for the presence of the Commimssioner of the Board of Finance, Rev. J. M. Morse. We feel that to him, more than to any other one person, is due the credit for the great work being done by the Mississippi Conference for our superannuate preachers. We urge our people to give him their co-operation in making the clean-up effort for this cause a success.

Fall meeting of Bishops, Dec. 13, 3 p. m., Dallas, Tex.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Rickey and Tallulah.

Over at Tallulah Brother Rickey is taking enough time away from his interesting study of the "paleozoic ant" to do splendid work at the task of building up things Methodistic among his people. He is preaching to good congregations, looking after every interest of his church, reorganizing his board of stewards into a body of men who look after the finances of the church in a business-like manner, and moving forward generally in the great work of the kingdom of our Lord.

Tallulah was hard hit by the floods of last spring and summer. Little crops were made, and all business was disorganized. In spite of that fact, the Mission Special Fund has been paid in full and the salaries are kept up with most splendidly.

Best of all, Brother Rickey is moving slowly but surely toward the consummation of the dreams of some years at Tallulah. That is, toward the building of a new and modern church. It is his way to build churches; he takes his time, but he does the work. Before the meeting of the next Annual Conference he hopes and expects to be well on in the actual construction of a beautiful building. The people of Tallulah are behind him wholeheartedly in this great work, and when finally it is finished Methodism will come into its own in that great section. So mote it be!

ELMER C. GUNN, Presiding Elder.

BEQUEST INSURANCE FOR MISSIONS.

One of the outstanding problems in the administration of benevolent enterprises is that of a stable and assured financial income. It is apparent that the work of any such enterprise is imperiled when it depends entirely upon annual gifts, since its program is constantly affected by economic and social conditions. Colleges and universities have endeavored to solve the problem by building up large endowment funds, and it is well known that institutions of learning without such funds are threatened with extinction.

Our Board of Missions has never attempted to develop such endowments, preferring to depend upon the missionary spirit and the spontaneous offerings of Christian people. Other Boards have, however, raised endowments in large sums and have found their work greatly stabilized thereby. Recently, our own Board has adopted a plan which it is hoped will eventually give us an assured income covering at least a part of our expenses.

The Board of Missions has no thought of trying thus to cover its entire annual budget. It prefers the love, loyalty and sacrifice of the people above any endowment that could possibly be raised. It does feel, however, that if it could secure sufficient permanent funds to cover all of its administrative expenses, so that every dollar given annually by the people could be applied directly to the work of world redemption, a great gain would be made.

No "campaign" has been launched or contemplated to secure such a fund, and none will be made. A plan has been devised, however, in cooperation with the Equitable Life Assurance Society, by which any person who desires to make a permanent gift and perpetuate his missionary giving may do so.

The plan is known as Bequest Insurance. It simply means that interested persons may, if they desire, take out insurance policies in any sum, naming the Board of Missions as beneficiary. At the death of the insured, the amount of the policy is paid to the Board and becomes a permanent fund which forever brings an income for missionary work.

All possible contingencies are provided for in this plan. The policies have the regular surrender value and if, on account of old age or misfortune, the insured is unable to meet further premiums, the value of the policy immediately reverts to the Board of Missions.

As above stated, the Board of Missions contemplates no general campaign throughout the church for this cause. It is felt, however, that large numbers of Methodists would welcome such an opportunity as is here provided to perpetuate their giving to the cause of missions. Any person desiring further information should write to Mr. J. F. Rawls, treasurer of the Board of Missions, Box 510, Nashville, Tenn.

During a recent revival held in Seoul, Korea, the members of the church met together at 4:30 each morning to pray for the salvation of their fellow-Koreans. Another prayer service was held at 1.30, after which these earnest Christians made a round of visits from house to house in the neghborhood, seeking to interest others in the religion which had done so much for them.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Brookhaven District Conference was held in the Centenary Church, McComb, Miss., April 17-18. Rev. W. H. Lewis, presiding elder of the district, presided.

The weather was ideal and the attendance was unusual. Every pastor was present and seventy delegates; all the local preachers sent in a written report; a large number of visitors were present; every interest of the church was well represented by some of our connectional men, and everything was carried out in a way that was interesting and enjoyed by all.

The reports of the pastors show that there were some advancements made in the district. Three new churches are being built, one parsonage and other contemplated. Quite a number have been added to the church. Epworth Leagues, Sunday schools, Woman's Missionary Societies, and laymen activities are making progress, and all the pastors are optimistic and in good humor. The laymen seemed to be extravagant in their praise of the pastors, and the presiding elder was at his best. The people of Centenary Church entertained royally, and the pastor-host looked after the details in a princely way.

Rev. C. W. Crisler announced that the presiding elder was serving his last year on the district, and the brethren paid him off with a personal check for $35. Those desiring the presiding eldership of this district for another year better apply early.

Fourteen lay delegates were elected to the Annual Conference, and seven alternate delegates:

Principal Delegates—Curtess Youngblood, M. L. Everett, J. S. Decell, H. H. Goza, R. J. Fairchilds, Mrs. W. H. Towns, Dr. H. Flowers, W. W. Godboid, W. D. Davis, S. E. Denman, P. J. Abright, Mrs. L. W. Alford, Mrs. W. H. Lewis, D. N. Terrell.

Alternate Delegates—M. G. Felder, Mrs. J. F. Campbell, W. T. Denman, Mrs. L. M. Sharp, Mrs. V. R. Landrum, Mrs. J. B. Catching, R. E. Bennett.

The conference adjourned to meet next year in the beautiful new church that is just being completed in Summit.

J. F. CAMPBELL, Secretary.

THE NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The New Orleans District Conference convened in our church at Covington, La., April 26, 1928, at 9 o'clock. Rev. R. H. Harper, D.D., presiding elder, called the conference to order, and announced that all the sessions of the conference would be appropriately opened with religious services.

The following brethren conducted the devotional services and brought the messages at the opening of the three sessions held the first day: P. M. Caraway, W. H. Giles, B. H. Andrews. Brother R. L. Armstrong, substituting for Brother J. A. McCormick, who was unable to attend the conference, preached at 11 o'clock. The session Friday morning was opened by Dr. Harper administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

The reports of the pastors, for the most part, were interesting, and indicated progress and development. In this day of increasing supervision of the work of the churches, most of the reports showed that the pastors are following the program of the church. About two hundred souls have been added to the "congregations of the saints" since Annual Conference. One new church was organized and other preaching places opened. A Woman's Missionary Society was reported in every charge in the district except one.

Quite a few lay delegates were in attendance upon the sessions of the conference. These elected the following delegates to the Annual Conference: J. H. Carter, Miss B. Ellison, E. H. Prescott, A. D. Carpenter, Rev. R. L. Clayton, C. O. Chalmers, Mrs. W. H. Favourite, Miss E. Hooper. The following alternates were elected: C. H. Snelling, Mrs. Martin Hebert, Dr. F. M. Wilson, A. E. Smith.

Dr. R. S. Crichlow, New Orleans, La., was elected District Lay Leader, and Dr. F. R. Singleton, Slideli, La., and W. F. Collier, Morgan City, La., were elected associate lay leaders.

The lay members presented a program, setting forth the place of the laymen in the church. Both Dr. R. S. Crichlow and Mr. C. O. Chalmers gave forceful and pointed addresses.

Rev. John L. Williams was recommended by the conference for re-admission into the Annual Conference.

A resolution was passed opposing the nomination of any man for President of the United States who is not in favor of prohibiting the liquor traffic in our country.

The conference memorialized the Committee on Location of the General Conference to select New Orleans as the next meeting place for the next General Conference.

Dr. J. B. Mitchell was asked by resolution to prepare a paper setting forth the strategic place which New Orleans occupies in the South, especially with reference to religion, and to place the same in the hands of all the bishops of our church and such other officers as may be thought needful.

A very interesting program on the work of the Sunday school was conducted by Mr. J. H. Carter, in which several phases of the work were ably presented.

Covington was most cordial and bountiful in the entertainment of the conference, their first opportunity to "show off" in their hundred years of Methodist history.

Algiers was selected for the meeting place of the next conference.

A fine spirit prevailed throughout the conference, and Dr. Harper was given a standing vote of appreciation for the affable way in which he conducted the conference.

Brothers C. D. Atkinson, N. E. Joyner, D.D., and R. W. Vaughan were visitors at the conference, and each spoke to the conference urging the causes which they represent.

The conference adjourned at 1 o'clock Friday, and after sumptuously partaking of fried chicken, lemon pie, etc., departed for home.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Baton Rouge District Conference convened at Clinton, La., on May 3, 1928, at 10 a. m., with Rev. L. W. Cain presiding. Following the opening devotion by the presiding elder, Judge Charles Kilbourne made an address of welcome, to which Dr. F. L. Wells responded in behalf of the visiting members of the conference.

The conference opened for business by electing Rev. J. Henry Bowdon secretary. After the roll was called and the alternate delegates were seated, the Rev. O. L. Tucker, pastor of our church at Amite, preached a most helpful sermon. At the close of the sermon the presiding elder administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, assisted by Revs. C. C. Miller, H. W. May, and F. N. Sweeney. The conference adjourned for dinner.

The afternoon session of the first day was given over mostly to reports from the pastors. In the main, the reports were optimistic. The pastors were all planning for revivals in their churches. The Baton Rouge District will turn in a splendid report to the Annual Conference this fall.

The conference appreciated very much the message of Rev. W. O. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Ruston Dist. on the Superannuate Endowment Clean-up Campaign. The message reminded us of our solemn obligation to these old men who have served our church so well.

The conference was particularly blessed by the presence of so many of our connectional leaders, who brought us fine messages in behalf of their respective works. Rev. R. W. Vaughan stirred the conference with his fine plea for his children and our children at Ruston. Dr. H. T. Carley, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, addressed the conference in behalf of Christian literature. Dr. N. E. Joyner, Conference Secretary of Education, brought to the conference a message on the crisis we are facing in our educational work in the work in the Louisiana Conference. I cannot think of anything more important than the cause Dr. Joyner represented. Our honor, our name, our future are at stake. The Methodists of Louisiana cannot and must not fail to respond to the need of the hour. Rev. C. C. Miller preached a splendid sermon at the evening hour.

The second day of the conference was just as full and just as fine as the first, but space forbids that I should go into details. Numbers of people said to the writer: "I never attended a more delightful conference where there was finer preaching, a better spirit, a more helpful program, and less friction, than at this session of the Baton Rouge District Conference." The presiding elder is to be commended for his fine spirit, wise counsel and efficient handling of the conference.

Rev. B. D. Watson, the pastor-host of the conference, and the good people of Clinton cared for every need of the delegates, and made the conference all the more pleasant.

The following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, our country has been flooded by prohibition propaganda from the Great Lakes on the north to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and our shores are constantly bombarded by foreign illicit liquor, and the commercialized liquor interest within the United States, in defiance of the Eighteenth Amendment which was duly enacted by the sovereign States of our Republic; and,

"Whereas, it is the intention of the liquor interests, either by nullification of the Eighteenth Amendment or modification of the Volstead act so as to make it ineffective and render it negligible, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the Baton Rouge District Conference, in session at Clinton, La., this 4th day of May, 1928, hereby place ourselves on record as unalterably opposed to the election of any man to the Presidency of the United States who will league with or favors the liquor interests. And we express ourselves as entirely in line with the twenty-third article of Religion.

"Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate, with request for publication."

The following were elected as lay delegates to the Annual Conference: Mrs. L. W. Cain, Mrs. J. Bean, W. S. Holmes, Colonel I. D. Wall, Mrs. S. Stewart, J. R. Abels, Walter Green, J. Rhodes, L. H. Mayer, W. L. Hovey, and L. Upton.

SOUTHERN GROUP MEETING—JACKSON DISTRICT.

The Southern Group of Jackson District and official laymen met in the auditorium of Methodist Orphanage on Friday, May 11. The occasion was another of those inspiring spiritual feasts for which the Jackson District is famous. The theme of discussion was, "The Millsaps College Enlargement Campaign and Christian Education."

The morning devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. G. G. Yerger, after which the chair spoke briefly on "The Meaning of Christian Education." Rev. T. M. Brownlee, who was present, enforced what had been said with a few strong statements relative to the cause and purpose of Christian education.

Dr. Roife Hunt brought a stirring address on "The Need and Value of Christian Education." Dr. Hunt's great gospel preaching makes him popular as a preacher on all such occasions. Since he is a new pastor in the district, we have learned to love and appreciate him very much indeed.

As usual, we enjoyed a splendid dinner by Brother Lewis and his children. We are all proud of our great Orphanage and the unusually good manner in which it is being kept. The children all seem happy, healthy, and well kept.

We were delighted to have our presiding elder, Brother J. L. Decell, with us, and to have him

A FINAL APPEAL

For thirteen weeks this page has pleaded for co-operation in the Clean-up Campaign for Superannuate Endowment quota balances. If what has been published has not aroused you to support this movement to the utmost of your ability, probably nothing else that might be published would avail. These facts stand out in emphasis:

1. The Church has 2600 needy claimants whom she solemnly promised a reasonable support in old age retirement for active service rendered. No individual or other organization will provide this support. If the Church does not do it, her claimants will have to drag on in deprivations to the end.

2. The minimum amount that any Charge is requested to pay for this purpose is small enough for any Charge to pay with comparative ease if the people really have a heart for doing it. And the paying of this sum for such a purpose will react forever in benedictions upon the Charge that does it.

The issue is now squarely before you. There will be no further page advertisements in the Conference Organs for the present. Of course the campaign will go on just as far as you carry on. It is earnestly hoped that your Charge will continue until you can pause in good conscience—and that should be when a glorious success crowns your efforts.

Anything that should be done can be done in some way; provided, however, there is somebody who cares enough about it to plan the "some way" for doing it.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, President, North Mississippi Conference Board of Education.

Next to converting a soul to faith in Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour and Redeemer, Christian Education is perhaps the most important work of the church. Of course the business of evangelizing the world is the paramount business of the church; but almost with the same breath that Jesus gave the paramount command to preach the gospel to all the world, he said, "Teaching them," etc.

All education has a basic foundation upon which to rest. That foundation is either rooted and grounded in God as revealed to us in the Bible, or it practically excludes God from its thought. No college or university other than one established and maintained by some Christian church, will bother to give a distinctly Christian basis upon which to build its foundation of education.

It does not take a Solomon to discern between the result in moral character that is revealed in the lives of men taught in secular educational institutions over against those taught in Christian colleges and universities. Only those who are either purposely opposed to admitting the truth, or are ignorant of the facts, will deny the worth to the moral standing of our State of our Christian colleges. Without meaning in any wise to reflect upon the grade of work done by the other Christian colleges of our State, I do not hesitate to say that the people of Mississippi have much for which to feel justly proud both in Millsaps College and in Grenada College.

Judged from the viewpoint of the educational efficiency of the students, or rather graduates, going out from Millsaps College and Grenada College, there are none from any colleges in the land who stand higher than do these graduates. In addition to the educational efficiency of these graduates, they are worth far more to the moral and spiritual uplift and influence of our great Methodist church than are those who are graduated from other colleges.

The presidents and faculties of both Millsaps and Grenada Colleges are men and women of the highest type of Christian character. The students who are graduated from either of these great institutions carry with them through life something of the stamina and worth of the Christian characters of the men and women who compose the faculties of Millsaps and Grenada Colleges. Personally, I count it an honor to number among my friends and acquaintances most of the faculties of both these great educational institutions. I honor them not only for the character of work they are doing in the intellectual field, but also for their worth as Christian men and women.

Right now both these great institutions are before the Methodists of Mississippi with a request that we Methodists help them as they seek to become more efficient in the important work they are doing. No appeal has ever come before the Methodists of Mississippi that is freighted with larger results of good to our church and State than are the appeals that are being made in behalf of Millsaps and Grenada Colleges.

As Dr. Countiss has gone before the district conferences of the North Mississippi Conference with the appeal to our brethren for the $300,000 bond issue, and for the assessment of $30,000 to pay the interest on the bonds, our laymen and preachers have listened to them with absorption of the facts presented to them by Dr. Countiss, and have unanimously voted to issue the bonds that Grenada College may be maintained as an "A" grade college. The four district conferences to which this matter has been presented did not raise a single voice in opposition. The Columbus, the Aberdeen, the Sardis, and the Grenada Districts have each put their loyal support behind the great proposition of an "A" grade college for women in Mississippi. Every heart interested in the great work of Christian education is heartened and enthusiastically encouraged by this fact. This scribe feels like singing, "Praise God, from Whom all Blessings Flow" as the result of the vote in these four district conferences. (Only four district conferences had been held when this was written.—Editor.)

Those who know what the additional equipment for Millasps College will mean in adding to the efficieucy of that iustitution are hoping and praying that the Methodists in Mississippi, who are able, will see the vision of a larger Millsaps and will contribute liberally to this urgent appeal for funds with which to erect needed buildings. This scribe can but believe that the appeal to the loyal Methodists of Mississippi in behalf of Millsaps College will meet with the same generous response that the appeal for a greater Grenada College is meeting with in North Mississippi.

Surrounded with humanly speaking insurmountable conditions and obstacles, God said to Moses, "Say to the children of Israel, go forward." With faith in God they went forward as God opened the way for them. By God's grace and with faith in him we will do the same for Millsaps and Grenada Colleges, and thus do our part as Methodists of Mississippi in the great program of Christian Education.

PROHIBITION AND THE PRESIDENCY.

By Carlton M. Sherwood, Executive Secretary, Citizens' Committee of One Thousand.

Representatives of thirty-one national organizations meeting recently (Feb. 28) at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., have brought law enforcement, and in particular the enforcement of prohibition, into the national campaign of 1928. The following requests, by vote of this conference, will be directed in an appropriate manner to the national conventions of the political parties of the United States:

First, to include in the platform adopted by the political party conventions a positive, clear-cut declaration pledging the support of the party and nominees to a program of vigorous and efficient enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and necessary supporting legislation.

Second, to nominate candidates who are positively and openly committed to this policy of effective prohibition law enforcement by their utterances, acts and records. The strongest prohibition law enforcement plank would be neutralized and would be practically worthless if its adoption by any convention should be followed by the nomination by that same convention of candidates whose utterances, acts and records have branded them as personally hostile to prohibition, or as unwilling to co-operate actively to secure effective enforcement, or as unappreciative of the great comparative importance of this effort to "promote the general welfare."

We believe that the nomination or election of any such candidates would be a practical repudiation of any platform declaration to secure prohibition law enforcment, no matter how strong. We believe that the election of such candidates with such record would be followed inevitably by persistent efforts to increase the alcoholic content of intoxicating liquor and to weaken the enforcement provisions of the probibition law; by the appointment of susympathetic, if not hostile, officials; and by great actual laxity in enforcement. We therefore record our fixed determination to oppose actively the nomination or the election of any such candidate, no matter on what party platform they may stand.

The dry forces of the United States are militantly united in this policy.

FOR MOTHER.

He was only a mite of a boy, dirty and ragged, and he had stopped for a while in one of the city's free play grounds to watch a game of ball between boys of his own and a rival neighborhood. Tatters and grime were plainly in evidence on every side; but the little fellow attracted the attention of a group of visitors, and one of them, reaching over the child's shoulder as he sat on the ground, gave him a luscious golden pear. The boy's eyes sparkled, but the glowing eyes were his only thanks as he looked back to see from whence the gift had come, and then he turned his face away, too shy or too much astonished to speak.

But from that time his attention was divided between the game and his new treasure. He patted the pear; he looked at it and at last as if to assure himself that it was as delicious as it appeared, he lifted it to his lips and cautiously bit out a tiny piece near the stem. Then, with a long sigh of satisfaction and assurance, he tucked the prize safely inside his dirty blouse.

"Why don't you eat it, Tony?" demanded a watchful acquaintance.

"Eat it? All meself? Ain't I savin' it for mother?"

The tone, with its mingling of resentment and loyalty, made further speech unnecessary. Whatever Tony lacked—and it seemed to be nearly everything—he had learned a beautiful lesson. He had another dearer than self, and knew the joy of sacrifice.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

A great step forward in Epworth League work in Brazil was taken by the Central Conference in Brazil, organized in 1927, when it provided for a National Epworth League Board to direct League work and to put on a unified program in all Brazil. A general secretary and an editor will take charge of the work, assisted by a Conference secretary in each of the three Conferences in Brazil.

The Home Circle.

WITHOUT MOTHER!

"It's awful lonesome at our house
'Thout mother;
"It's awful hard to get along
'Thout mother;
It seems that everything goes wrong
'Thout mother;
'Course father does the best he can;
But then, you know, he's just a man,
An' don't know how to fix and plan
Like mother.

"Seems like I don't enjoy my play
'Thout mother;
Things just get worse every day
'Thout mother;
There's no one now to mend my doll,
Nobody's sorry when I fall—
O, home just ain't no place at all
'Thout mother;

"But father says we must be brave;
'Thout mother;
'Cause him an' me, we only have
One 'nother.
An' if we're brave an' strong an' true,
An' good just like she told us to,
We'll go up home when life is through,
To mother!"

—Marie Galbraith, in Exchange.

BE PROUD OF YOUR MOTHER.

"Look! That's Grace Hunter's mother!" Phoebe looked, and her face changed strangely. Mrs. Hunter stood on the sidewalk, giving some directions to a servant, while at the curb the chauffeur waited. She was a handsome woman, dressed richly and in good taste. She was nearing forty, but she looked ten years younger.

"Isn't she the prettiest thing you ever saw in your life?" murmured Mamie Waring, in Phoebe's ear. "I guess Grace must be awfully proud of her."

Phoebe made a brief assent. She was trying to fancy what it would be like to have a mother one could be proud of, a mother of such graceful erectness, with hair elaborately dressed and rose-pink cheeks. Phoebe had always thought of mothers as a little round-shouldered, with tired wrinkles about their eyes, and faded complexions. In Phoebe's world the mothers did not have much time to spend on their hair. At 6 o'clock in the morning it was screwed into a tight "pug" that was expected to keep in order till bedtime.

The two girls came abreast of the automobile as Mrs. Hunter took her seat and her careless glance met their eager eyes indifferently. Mrs. Hunter was used to being stared at. Unconsciously, she settled herself as if she were posing for a picture, gave the word of command, and the car whirled away. "That's a stylish hat she has on," Mamie said. "Wouldn't you be proud, though, if you had a mother who looked like that?"

The question haunted Phoebe. Somehow, she could not get away from the thought that she had been almost defrauded. How would it seem to have a mother like Mrs. Hunter, a beautiful mother, on whom one's eyes could rest with the same pleasure one felt in looking at a picture or a rose-bud in bloom? Phoebe loved beautiful things with a passion which was all the more intense because it never was put in words. The mere sight of Grace Hunter's beautiful mother had made her heart beat hard and fast. Oh, if only she, too, had a mother of whom she could be proud!

The house was very still when Phoebe entered. In a minute she remembered the reason. There was sickness in a neighbor's family. Her mother had spent most of the night there, coming home in the early morning to get breakfast for the family, and hurrying through her housework for the day. It was a plain, poor little home, but scrupulously neat, very different in its look of daintiness and order from most of the houses in the row.

The deaconess walked in as Phoebe was hanging up her coat, and Phoebe welcomed her with effusion, for the deaconess, in spite of her plain uniform, was a beautiful woman, though her beauty was not in the least like that of Grace Hunter's mother. She was fond of fun, too, this deaconess, and when she smiled a dear little dimple was in evidence now as she greeted Phoebe.

"Good afternoon, my dear! Is your mother home?"

"She's at Mrs. Gray's, I guess. They're all sick again. Mother stayed there last night and Sunday night."

The deaconess drew a long breath. "Phoebe," she exclaimed, "you must be very proud of your mother!"

The remark chimed in so strangely with Phoebe's thoughts, and yet contradicted them so absolutely, that Phoebe had no answer but a stare. But the deaconess was not waiting for an answer.

"I wonder if you realize, Phoebe, what your mother's life means to her neighbors here? No, you cannot realize it; none of us can. If ever I feel discouraged, I think of her, of her beautiful, helpful life, of the sacrifices she is all the time making, as a matter of course, and then I'm ashamed of being disheartened. You are a fortunate girl, my dear, to have such a mother. I only hope you are as proud of her as she deserves."

The deaconess did not stay long. "I'll go over to Mrs. Gray's and send your mother home for a rest," she said in her decided way, and as the trim figure went out of the door Phoebe was thinking hard. It was all true, what the deaconess had said. When any of the neighbors were sick or in trouble they turned to Phoebe's mother. It was due to her that Jim Leary had signed the pledge. It was she who had interceded with the judge when Johnny Stone was arrested for stealing. From this little, plain, shabby house a constant stream of helpfulness flowed out into the needy neighborhoood.

The door opened and a woman entered. She was not young, and she looked many years older than her actual age. She moved a little stiffly. Her lined face was very weary. But the eyes had a shining brightness that was like clear sunshine.

"Little Willie is better," said Phoebe's mother. "I thought last night we were going to lose him, but now it looks to me as if he would pull through." She went to the stove to see if it needed more coal, but on the way she was intercepted by a girl whose face was glowing.

"Mother! O Mother!" Phoebe cried, slipping her arm about the dear bowed shoulders, "why didn't I ever know before how beautiful you are!"

BLIND TOM, THE MUSICAL WONDER OF THE WORLD.

By Rev. C. M. Verdel.

Years have elapsed since I heard Blind Tom play, but the recollection of that wonderful being will never fade from my memory. All during my childhood I had heard of him and of his marvelous musical gifts. I had heard, too, that this man, whose fame had spread over the whole civilized world, was an idiot and blind and was born a slave. It was passing strange, and I could hardly believe it, though I knew now that it was all true.

Tom was born of Negro slave parents near Columbus, Ga., May 25, 1849. He himself was a slave until he was sixteen, when the Emancipation Proclamation at the close of the Civil War gave him his freedom.

He was born blind, and the only sign of intelligence he gave during infancy was an interest in music.

When he was four years old he found his way to the piano one night while the family were at supper, played the pieces that the young ladies in his master's family had been playing during the day, and reproduced them with such skill as to astonish all who heard him.

Tom never "took lessons." He did not have intelligence enough to be taught anything. He played just as the mocking bird sings, because it is its nature to do so.

There is no other instance in the history of music where any one as young as Blind Tom has shown such wonderful power of musical reproduction.

Tom made his first appearance in New York, Jan. 15, 1861, and afterward traveled extensively in the United States and Europe, performing astonishing feats on the piano.

I had heard much about him and was very desirous to see and hear him. The opportunity came at last. Tom gave a concert at Montgomery, Ala., while I was there. The opera house, where the entertainment was given, was filled to overflowing with the most cultured people of the city. I had a seat in the lower gallery, just above the stage, where I could see and hear to the best advantage.

At length Tom appeared, led by General Bethune, his manager and former owner. Tom was a typical "cornfield Negro," with black skin, thick lips, flat nose and short, kinky hair. He wore a neat, black broadcloth suit; but no dress could make Tom anything but an idiot. As I looked at the vacant, idiotic face and the slouching figure, rolling its head from side to side, and humming snatches of songs, I found it hard to believe that I was looking at perhaps the finest pianist in the world, who had played before most of the crowned heads of Europe and whose fame had filled the whole civilized world.

General Bethune brought Tom forward to the rostrum and had him play a piece that Tom had never heard, saying that no matter how long or how difficult it might be, Tom would play it exactly as he heard it.

A gentleman, evidently a finished musician, came and played a long difficult piece in a masterly manner. Tom was then led to the piano and played the piece from beginning to end exactly as the other had done, only with more sweetness and expression.

The gentleman, at General Bethune's request, then struck several complicated chords on the piano with both hands. Tom immediately called the name of every key that had been struck. He then played two pieces at the same time, one with high right hand, the other with his left. Turning his back to the piano, he played with his hands behind him. He also played several pieces composed by himself, but they had little or no merit. Tom was not a composer.

When the concert was over, I went to the stage and looked at Tom at close range. He had relapsed into his idiotic state and was swaying about, rolling his head from side to side, humming snatches of tunes and had to be held by the sleeve to keep him from straying off.

He was evidently born with the usual amount of intelligence, but it all went to music, leaving his other mental faculties blank and furnishing the most remarkable instance on record of the one-sided mental developments.

Viewed from one standpoint, he was a complete idiot. Viewed from the other, he was a genius of the highest order and had no superior.

Liszt and Ruhenstein were composers and poured out their soul in compositions that have made their names immortal. This work, of course, was impossible for Blind Tom. His work was to interpret and play the compositions of others, and in that field he stands without a rival. He was probably the greatest pianist the world has ever known.

I do not know the date of Tom's death, nor do I know where he is buried. A suitable monument should be erected in memory of this man who, while he lived, was the musical wonder of the world.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

All we do which is good or permanent is done in us or through us, consciously or unconsciously, by a divine Spirit, with whom if we work cheerfully and obediently the work thrives; if proudly and resistantly it is marred.—F. D. Maurice.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Winona Lake Bible Conference will he held this year from Aug. 17 to Aug. 26.

"Everything is moving along well with the various departments of the church work," writes Rev. W. H. Lane, of Sumrall, Miss.

Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Pickett, Jr., announce the birth of a son, Robert T., Third, at Jackson, Miss., on April 23. Blessings upon the young man!

Rev. H. Mellard, our faithful pastor at Centreville, Miss., has our thanks for two renewal subscriptions recently sent in.

Rev. D. C. Barr, veteran member of the Louisiana Conference, now a superannuate, will preach the commencement sermon for the high school at Rayville, La., next Sunday.

Mrs. M. A. Harris, a native Mississippian, but now living in San Antonio, Tex., enjoys reading the Advocate in her seventy-ninth year, keeping in touch with the church in Mississippi.

Rev. A. L. Davenport, of Arkabutla, Miss., in sending a subscription to the Advocate, for which we thank him, says that the work goes well on his charge and that he serves as fine a people as can be found anywhere.

A sudden and virulent attack of the "flu" early last week put the editor wholly out of commission, interfering with his work and preventing his attendance upon the Corinth District Conference, greatly to his disappointment.

The report of the pastor, Rev. Leon I. McCain, of the First Methodist Church of Minden, La., to the recent district conference, a copy of which has come into our hands, is a remarkable record of achievement and progress.

The entire estate of the late Mr. R. Harper Kirby remaining at the death of Mrs. Kirby will go to Southern Methodist University, according to the terms of Mr. Kirby's will, written in 1923. The estate at present is valued at $200,000.

Rev. J. S. Maxey, in sending the renewal subscription of Mrs. G. W. Sledge, of Duck Hill, Miss., states that she has been a subscriber to the Advocate for sixty-one years. Blessings upon her!

Our church at West Point, Miss., Rev. W. R. Lott, pastor, suffered a great loss recently in the death of Mrs. T. S. Greene, who was fatally stricken by paralysis on May 9. She was a faithful Christian woman.

Rev. E. M. Shaw, of the Nettleton circuit, North Mississippi Conference, in sending a greatly appreciated club of subscriptions to the Advocate, says: "This is a fine country circuit, and we are expecting a great year."

The death of Mr. E. L. Joyner, of Pelican, La., on April 25, removed a loyal and faithful member of the Methodist church. He had been a reader of the Advocate for many years. We extend sincere sympathy to his sorrowing family and friends.

In sending in a club of fifty-four subscriptions to the Advocate, Rev. T. B. Winstead writes: "We are in our fourth year on the Harperville and Lena charge, and we think it is the best of the four. Every interest of the chuch is moving nicely."

Bishop W. B. Beauchamp will preach the commencement sermon for Emory University on Sunday, June 3, and Hon. Thomas G. McLeod, former Governor of South Carolina, will deliver the baccalaureate address on the following Tuesday. The graduating class numbers 216.

In sending in his announcements for the third round of quarterly conferences, Rev. H. A. Gatlin, presiding elder of the Newton District, says: "Things are moving along fine on the district. The preachers are busy trying to look after every interest of the church. We are planning and praying for gracious revivals throughout the district."

The vested choir of the First Methodist Church, this city, gave a sacred concert at the Second Methodist Church on Wednesday evening of this week. An address was delivered, also, by Rev. Charles L. Monroe, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The choir of the First Methodist Church is one of the best in the city.

Rev. G. A. Morgan, our pastor at Arcadia, La., requests the Advocate to state that he will be available for one or two meetings during the summer. Brother Morgan is one of our efficient and successful pastors. The work at Arcadia moves forward under his leadership. The debt on the church has been considerably reduced, and all departments of the work are in fine shape.

Rev. J. A. Alford, our pastor at Rayville, La., has been voted a two weeks' vacation by his appreciative people, who graciously made provision for the expenses. Brother Alford will preach the commencement sermon for the high school at Epps, La., next Sunday.

In spite of being hard hit by the overflow last spring, Columbia, La., under the pastorate of Rev. S. D. Howard, is making a fine record this year. The mission special of $200 was paid in full; congregations are large, and the prayer meeting attendance has increased fourfold, and the Woman's Missionary Society is very active.

We learned the other day that Rev. J. W. Sells, our pastor at Pascagoula, Miss., will he able to help a few brethren in meetings this year. Without his even remotely suggesting that we do so, we are glad to commend him to the brethren. He is diligent, original in his methods, forceful in his thinking, and resourceful. He has done a fine work at Pascagouia.

The sympathy of many friends will go out to Dr. R. E. Smith, of Centenary College, in the death of his daughter, which occurred in a sanitarium in New Orleans last week. She was injured in a fall from the porch of her home in Shreveport several months ago, and never recovered. She was a beautiful and brilliant girl.

Mrs. R. S. Walton, of Sulphur, La., district secretary, requests us to announce that the two district conferences for the Woman's Missionary Society will be held at De Ridder on May 18, and at Crowley on June 5. Each auxiliary is expected to send delegates to whichever is the more convenient.

We greatly regretted being out of the office on Wednesday of last week, when Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of San Bernardino, Calif., called. Brother Townsley was passing through New Orleans en route home, after having assisted Rev. J. A. Alford in a fine meeting at Rayville, La. He preached at the Second Methodist Church, this city, where he was formerly pastor, on Wednesday night, following which he was tendered a reception by his former parishioners.

We call the special attention of the preachers who expect to attend the Pastors' School at the Seashore Camp Ground this year to the request in last week's Advocate by Rev. J. T. Leggett, President, that they notify him as soon as possible as to what courses they desire to take, in order that the books may be on hand at the opening of the school. This is important. Brother Leggett's address is Vickshurg, Miss.

Our church at Gloster, Miss., has raised in cash and remitted the balance due on the five-year quota for the Superannuate Endowment Fund. Mr. M. A. Randall was the director of the campaign and is due much of the credit of its successful termination. Mrs. Wallace Conerly was the treasurer. Rev. B. M. Hunt is the pastor. This is indeed fine for Gloster.

Our Sunday school editors and publishing agents are to he congratulated upon the Home Quarterly for July, August and September. The cover picture is a reproduction of the last sheet of the original Constitution of the United States, with signatures of the delegates. The contents are rich in fireside articles by Bishop Candler, Bishop DuBose, Dr. L. T. Guild, J. A. B. Fry, C. J. Harrell, C. L. Brooks, A. W. Cline, J. R. Pepper, and others. Send for a sample copy.

Rev. W. R. Liming, of Mashulaville, Miss., in a business communication to the Advocate, adds: "The work on this charge is moving along nicely and the preacher and his family are happy, and we believe the people are rejoicing along the way. We have as fine people to serve as can be found on earth. Two months ago a storm visited us and left two babies—a boy and a girl—and the people were so good to us that we can never thank and serve them enough."

Mr. L. F. Sensabaugh, Superintendent of the Department of School Administration, of the General Sunday School Board, will attend the New Orleans District Sunday school meeting next Sunday, to be held at Rayne Memorial at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Sensabaugh will speak at Rayne Memorial at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, and at Carrollton Avenue at 7:30 in the evening. Mr. J. H. Carter is the efficient district Sunday school secretary.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, presiding elder of the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference, sends out a printed postal card announcement of his quarterly conferences to all the members of the conference far enough in advance to give them ample notice of the meeting. The card contains some special message, suggestion, or exhortation. These cards have proved to be very helpful in the work of the district. The recent district conference showed its appreciation of its efficient elder by presenting him with a fine gold watch.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, reports that he will start his third round of quarterly conferences as follows: Leesville, May 20, a.m.; Lafayette, May 27, a.m.; New Iberia, May 27, p.m. The full list of appointments will appear in next week's issue of the Advocate. Brother Doss indicates that the work is going along very well on the Lake Charles District. Finances are doing very well. The mission special did not come up well and the brethren do not seem to be putting forth much effort in behalf of the superannuate endowment."

Rev. J. O. Hanes, general evangelist, began a meeting for the Tatum Lumber Company at its timber camp at Denco, Miss., on May 7, and at the close of the meeting there on May 15, he will begin an eight day meeting at Tatum's Mill, Hattiesburg. This is the eighth consecutive year that Brother Hanes has held these meetings upon invitation of Brother W. S. F. Tatum, who defrays all the expenses of the campaign. Brother Hanes will begin a meeting at Rayne, La., with Rev. A. A. Bernard, on May 27.

The editor of the Advocate had the privilege of preaching the commencement sermon for the high school at Kentwood, La., last Sunday morning. A fine congregation filled the auditorium of the splendid brick school building, and the attentive hearing was very helpful to the preacher. Prof. H. O. Schwartz is the principal of the school. He had this year a fine class of twenty-one—six boys and fifteen girls. The school had an enrollment this year of more than five hundred. The visit was doubly delightful because of the fellowship and gracious courtesies of Rev. William Schuhle, pastor of the Methodist church, who was in charge of the service.

The church at Macon, Miss., will at once build a Sunday school annex and remodel the present church, both inside and out, so that it will be uniform and have the appearance of an entirely new building. This enlarged plan, estimated to cost $30,000, was made possible by the princely gift of $10,000 graciously tendered by Judge C. B. Ames, of Oklahoma City. Judge Ames attended the Sunday school as a boy and young man living in Macon. Providentially he spent a few days with his brother, Mr. Fisher Ames, in Macon as he was en route to address the Mississippi State Bar Association at Gulfport, and, after inspection of the present plant and the proposed plans, announced his contribution as above stated. The new Sunday school annex will be called the Sarah Ames Memorial, in honor of Judge Ames' mother of sainted memory.

findings, recommending what institutions shall be continued, what consolidated, or what discontinued. Other churches are grappling with the same problem. We cannot too strongly urge that all of our institutions should fully meet the requirements of the regional standardizing agencies of their particular section.

In order that this Board may assist Conference Boards of Education, or Conference committees or boards of trustees in the study of Conference educational problems referred to above, the General Secretary of this Board is hereby directed to notify all heads of schools, Conference educational authorities, presiding elders, and bishops, that this Board stands ready, upon invitation of Boards of Trustees, Conference Boards of Education, or Conference Commissions, to conduct, at the expense of this Board, comprehensive surveys of our institutions in their territory, their effectiveness, service and needs, using non-local, impartial, competent person or persons, and to place their survey at the disposal of said trustees, Conference Boards of Education and Conference Educational Commissions. In addition, the General Secretary is directed to place at the disposal of said local educational authorities the advice and help of the executive officers of this Board.

We further recommend that the Christian Education Movement be transformed into a Department of Promotion and Finance, that the head of the department strive to channel effective messages concerning Christian Education down to the local churches through Sunday school, Epworth League and pulpit, to educate the adult members through wise publicity methods and to aid our institutions in raising funds where possible. We recommend that H. H. Sherman be elected secretary of this department.

Protection Against Old Age

Your committee deems it of importance that a constructive program be carefully worked out and presented to our next General Conference. This program should be the result of a careful survey of our present educational situation, and with this in view we recommend that a committee consisting of the chairman and the General Secretary of this Board and others to be appointed by them, and that they submit their findings and recommendations to the next meeting of this Board.

This Board is impressed that this cause is so vital in furnishing trained leaders for all activities of the church that bishops, pastors, and presiding elders, should join whole-heartedly in getting the message of our church colleges before our people.

Moreover, we feel that as a part of whatever methods may be used to provide funds for our schools, an efficient financial secretary for each college is essential.

We strongly commend the work of our Teachers' and Christian Workers' Bureau, and recommend that this work be continued along the lines now being followed by the Board of Education.

We have heard with pleasure a statement by Dr. Crawford, of the Laymen's Movement, in regard to the proposed plan to make 1929 "Stewardship Year." We recommend that special consideration be given to the subject of Christian Stewardship by the Departments of Religous Education in our institutions of learning, and that opportunity be offered all students, particularly those who are candidates for the ministry and other Christian workers, to study this important subject.

This committee has heard with great appreciation of the effort that is being made at the present time to give every child an equality of educational opportunity irrespective of geographic, ecomonic or social conditions. We urge upon our people that all possible effort be made to stamp out adult illiteracy, and to provide adequate opportunities for the education of our boys and girls. Particularly do we urge that the rural schools be strengthened and that better educational facilities be provided for the youth of our section.

us in our afternoon devotions. He paid a loving tribute to his fallen comrade, Brother Robert Selby, the late presiding elder of the Meridian District. Brothers T. M. Brownlee, G. C. Yeager, and J. O. Ware were appointed to draft suitable resolutions expressing our sympathy to Mrs. Selby and the bereaved family.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan addressed the group in his characteristic manner on "Millsaps and Mississippi." He brought out many facts of interest, and urged the co-operation of the brethren in the present campaign for the enlargement of our great college.

Our next meeting will be held at Harrisville on Thursday, Sept. 13.

MARLIN H. McCORMACK, JR., Secretary.

On a recent trip into the country districts of Cuba made in his "Epworth Ford," so called because it was the gift of Epworth Leaguers of the Florida Conference, the Rev. Garfield Evans passed scores of villages and hundreds of homes where no missionary worker has ever been. The roads in the rural districts are so bad that for the most part there is no travel except on horseback. This trip of 250 miles in a car was considered nothing short of marvelous. Mr. Evans hopes that the success of his trip will lead others to attempt similar trips into the country sections of Cuba, and thus lead to a demand for good roads by which improvement will come to these isolated sections of the island.

Methodists in Belgium, having been recently asked to contribute 25,000 francs to equip a home for young men in Brussels, responded by giving 47,000 francs, approximately $1,500. This is the first time since the establishment of the Methodist Mission in Belgium that the people of that country have been asked to contribute to the support of any of its institutions, and the response to the appeal is considered remarkable, especially in view of the hard economic conditions in Belgium. This home for young men will take care for a few years of those boys who must leave the Methodist orphanage when they reach 16, but who have not yet finished their preparation for their life work.

RESOLUTIONS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Vimville, Miss., passed the following resolutions of sorrow and respect over the death of MRS. J. T. COKER:

God, in his infinite wisdom, has called our beloved and consecrated member, Mrs. J. T. Coker. She defied the terrors of death with a sure trust in Christ and a bright and full anticipation of heaven.

One of our most loyal and devoted members has been called to the eternal home of peace and rest. She was faithful to her duty in her home, church, and community. Her many friends loved her for her gentle, gracious ways, and felt the influence of her calm and unswerving Christian faith.

Not only the Woman's Missionary Society, but Cokers' Chapel Methodist church has lost a true and consistent member.

Therefore, be it resolved, That the members of this Society bow in submission to him who does all things well.

That we tender our deepest sympathy to the bereaved sister, brother children, and grandchildren, commending them to the loving care of the Heavenly Father.

That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the minutes of the Society, a copy be embodied in the president's report, a copy be sent to the Christian Advocate, and a copy be sent to each of the children of the deceased.

Respectfully submitted: Mrs. Fred Brewster, Mrs. Harry Shuff, Mrs. Harmon Coker, resolutions committee.

On April 24, DR. J. R. VINSON was taken suddenly sick, was carried to the hospital in Sumrall, operated on at once, and suffered intensely for two weeks. Not being able to overcome the disease, he died on Sunday evening, May 6, at 6:30 o'clock. At this time our town was shrouded in gloom; hearts were filled with sadness, because of having to give up such a noble neighbor, friend and brother. While his departure is a great loss to us, we feel that it is heaven's gain, as his final assurance to his pastor was that he was perfectly willing to leave it in God's hands, and he felt that everything was well with him. Dr. Vinson was born in Rankin County, near Brandon, Miss. There he spent his boyhood days, attending school, and preparing himself for the work of dentistry; and after this preparation, he practiced his profession in Hattiesburg, Laurel and Sumrall. While engaged in this work, he made a host of friends. Dr. Vinson joined the church in early life. He married Miss Ida Alice Hull on the 21st of October, 1888. To this union was born nine boys and three girls. Besides his immediate family, he leaves a mother, five sisters and three brothers to mourn his loss. For the last few years, Dr. Vinson has practiced his profession in Sumrall, and made a host of friends, not only in the town, but throughout the surrounding community. The town, the church, and the school feel a great loss in his departure, losing a wise counselor, a faithful friend, and brother, and the bereaved family, a kind, affectionate husband and father. Dr. Vinson was a member of Bowie Lodge No. 439, F. and A. M., joining by demit from Emulation Lodge No. 503, of Laurel, Miss., in 1926. After the funeral services conducted at the church by Rev. W. H. Lane, being assisted by Rev. N. J. Lee, of the Baptist church, and Rev. Mr. Youngblood, of Hattiesburg, Miss., in the presence of a host of friends, the body was carried to the cemetery and buried with Masonic honors. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the town, the church, the school, and the entire community.

FROM SOUTH SIDE, CORINTH, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I just want to let the readers of the Advocate know what we are doing here at South Side. We are serving some fine people here. They have made the parsonage new inside and out, top and bottom; built a nice bathroom with fixtures; bought new furniture; then have given us two poundings, the first on the night after we arrived here in November, and another one at the beginning of our meeting.

And, by the way, let me tell you about our revival. The meeting began the fourth Sunday in March and closed Easter Sunday. The preaching was done by the pastor. Brother Sharp, our District Sunday School Secretary, led the singing, and we had a real revival, with eighty some-odd conversions; and seventy-five joined the Methodist church. I tell you, it was good to see that class lined up and being received into the church. That was a great day at South Side. That isn't all, people are still being converted—one fine little girl joined the church last Sunday on profession of faith. We organized twenty-five family prayers, more than two hundred reconsecrated themselves to God, over $400 was raised for all purposes during the two weeks of the meeting. The Sunday school enrollment has been doubled, two new classes organized. We are having a full house to preach to. The people and pastor are happy together.

We are busy getting ready for district conference, and we are expecting a great time. Hoping to see you then and giving you a hearty welcome to the parsonage.

Yours in the work,
B. F. BULLARD.

THE PERFECT LIFE.

Holiness appeared to me to be of a sweet, pleasant, charming, serene, calm nature. It seemed to me it brought an inexpressible purity, brightness, peacefulness, and ravishment to the soul; and that it made the soul like a field or garden of God, with all manner of pleasant flowers that is all pleasant, delightful, and undisturbed; enjoying a sweet calm, and the gently vivifying beams of the sun. The soul of a true Christian appeared like such a little white flower, as we see in the spring of the year, low and humble on the ground, opening its bosom to receive the pleasant beams of the sun's glory; rejoicing, as it were, in a calm rapture; diffusing around a sweet fragrancy; standing peacefully and lovingly in the midst of other flowers round about, all in like manner opening their bosoms to drink in the light of the sun.—Jonathan Edwards.

AT HOME WITH HIM.

While I am here, I will be a child at home with my God. The whole world shall be his house to me; and, when I ascend into the upper chamber, I shall not change my company, nor even change the house. I shall only be in the upper story forever.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Communications for this department should be addressed to Mrs. J. E. Brown, Gloster, Miss.

O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me thy secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care.

In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace that only thou canst give,
With thee, O Master, let me live.

—Washington Gladden.

HISTORY OF THE GREENVILLE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

When the Woman's Board of Missions was created in May, 1878, the women of the Greenville church were ripe for the work and eager to organize at once. They only waited for direction from headquarters as to details of organization. News traveled slowly then—even telegrams being sent by boat from Vicksburg to Memphis. So while these consecrated, eager women were waiting there was time for the great terror that often failed our southern summer to come upon us.

In August every heart trembled when it was known that yellow fever was in our midst. Many left the town—some by boat and some to take refuge back in the country, off the highways. Of less than a thousand left in the town three hundred and thirty-eight were buried before the winter's cold stamped out the disease. Of this number heavy toll had been taken from our membership; the beloved pastor, Rev. Tiliman Page, and many of those women who had so happily dreamed of the new work—among these last was Miss Helen Maria Finlay. Now this name might not be especially noted, although she was a devout worker and a wonderful teacher, but for one fact: after her death it was found that she had left $100 to the new organization, and this was the very first legacy ever bequeathed to the Woman's Missionary Society of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church. This fact is recognized and has been officially mentioned many times.

When the scattered people came together the little town was a place of mourning, for there was no home in which the death angel had not tarried. So nothing was done immediately, but on Feb. 29, 1879, the following met in the Methodist church and formally organized the work: Mrs. H. B. Theobold, Mrs. J. L. Futrell, Mrs. S. Myra Smith, Mrs. W. R. Trigg, Mrs. B. M. Dunn, Mrs. George Manifold, Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. Julius Lengsfield, Mrs. Bettie Sheiby, Miss Bettie Finlay, and Miss Catherine McCauley. At this meeting the names of Mrs. A. B. Finlay and Mrs. W. P. Kretschmar were given for membership, although they could not be present that day.

An election of officers resulted as follows: Mrs. H. B. Theobold, president; Mrs. J. L. Futress, vice president; Mrs. S. Myra Smith, corresponding secretary; Mrs. B. M. Dunn, treasurer; Mrs. W. R. Trigg, recording secretary.

Of those whose names were that day enrolled, Miss Priscilla Finlay (Mrs. John Archer) is the only one now living. After two years time Mrs. Dunn resigned, and Miss Catherine McCauley was elected treasurer, and she faithfully served for twenty-four years; through summer sun and winter cold she went into every Methodist home spreading zeal for missions and "collecting dues." At her death she left $200 to the Society, this being our second legacy. Mrs. Theobold resigned about the same time, and Mrs. A. B. Finlay was made president. She served as long as her strength allowed—and longer—a beloved woman and a blessing to the work. Mrs. Myra Smith, a woman of great piety and strength of intellect, filled her office most acceptably until her death in 1887. She was the first delegate ever sent from our church to a conference. She went by boat to Memphis, and thence by rail to Corinth, whence she returned, on fire with renewed enthusiasm and news fresh from the "field." Mrs. W. R. Trigg was recording secretary for a long period of years, and resigned, only to return to this office a year or two later. She held it then until her health broke down, but she always retained her membership and interest in the Society.

Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Trigg organized the children, and never has there been a Juvenile Society where more interest was shown or one that was more ably directed—our chosen name was selected by Mrs. Smith, "Swamp Lilies." A few years later Mrs. D. C. Montgomery organized a Young People's Society, called "Lilies of the Delta." She was a charming leader, and had a wonderful group of wide-awake workers for some years. One time she gave a brilliant missionary pageant, at which $150 was collected in the baskets passed for a free-will offering.

Our congregation was small then and never wealthy, but our people were liberal, and we held the conference banner for several years. We had good times in our meetings in all three societies, and everywhere there was interest and knowledge of the work. There is not space to mention all the women who have done valiant service for our Master, but one name stands out brightly whenever our workers are thought of, Mrs. John N. Dunn has for more than a quarter of a century had charge of the work for our orphan children. She is one of God's saints, and we love to do her honor. Her service has been one of deeds and actual hard work, but never a complaint, never a suggestion that some one else should relieve her—and so quietly for years she has done work that few women have the consecration, energy, and courage to continue in.

A Man of Rare Professional Attainment

The originator of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery was the late Ray V. Pierce, M.D. At first he practised medicine in Western Pennsylvania and his unusual ability and success were soon recognized there, then he moved to Buffalo, N. Y., and established the World's Dispensary where his famous home remedies have ever since been made.

Each succeeding year the sale of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been greatly increased. Evidently people appreciate the fact that it increases the appetite, stimulates the digestion, helps to enrich the blood, clears the skin of eruptions and blemishes, and makes both men and women feel as they did when they were young. It contains no harmful ingredient.

Ask your nearest druggist for Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, in tablet or liquid form, or send 10 cents for a trial package of tablets to Dr. Pierce's Clinic, in Buffalo, N. Y.

FIFTY DELGATES OF THE GREENVILLE DISTRICT ASSEMBLED AT FIRST METHODIST CHURCH.

The first zone meeting of the year, Greenville District, was held in the First Methodist Church, Greenville, on Friday afternoon, with zone leader, Mrs. W. L. Stewart, presiding. There were fifty delegates present, including the Greenville ladies. Brother Galceran, from Leland, conducted the devotional, reading Romans 15:1-7. Mrs. W. P. Kretschmar, president of the local auxiliary, welcomed the visiting societies, and Mrs. Ernest Moore, of Clarksdale, our Conference vice president; also Mrs. Brown, of Hollandale, the recently elected district secretary. The response was given by Mrs. Iliff, of Leland We were happy to have Mrs. Moore talk to us. She stressed the main points of the work before us for this the Jubilee year of the Woman's Missionary Society. Mrs. Ernest Keilner, Jr., and Mrs. W. L. Boone very sweetly sang "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere."

The Leland auxiliaries gave the program. Mrs. Gray read a paper on "Stewardship," calling our attention to new ideas on this important subject. A solo was beautifully given by Mrs. J. G. Chastain. Mrs. Tate discussed the Jubilee, telling us what it is and why we celebrate it.

Reports from the various societies were given as follows: Mrs. Brown, representing Hollandale; Mrs. Shelton, representing Leland; Mrs. T. B. Lewis, representing Greenville. A round table discussion followed. Mrs. Born expressed her appreciation of the honor accorded her by being elected to office of district secretary, and asked the co-operation of the district. The next meeting will be held in Leland. Brother Cunningham dismissed the meeting. Later a very pleasant get-together was enjoyed, while dainty refreshments were served by the Greenville ladies.

ZONE MEETING, BATON ROUGE DISTRICT.

The Denham Springs zone of the Baton Rouge District held its third meeting at the Denham Springs church on April 13. Although it is a young organization, it is striving to make the Jubilee year a profitable one.

The visitors were most heartily welcomed by Mrs. Scivique, to which Mrs. Kinchen responded. The devotional period was led by Rev. G. H. Corry. The general theme of European Missions was ably discussed as follows: "Mission Work in Europe," Mrs. Scivique; "Polish Customs," Mrs. Jackson; "Untouched Centers," Mrs. Hunstock; "The Beginning of the Missionary Movement," Mrs. Ranney.

Miss Ora Hooper gave an interesting report on the Conference recently held in New Orleans. The president of each Society gave a report of the work for the past three months. A suggestion was made that each Society take a forward step, either by increasing membership or by taking up some mission study.

Eight members were present from Denham Springs, four from Live Oak, and two from Palmetto. The next meeting will be held at Gonzales, date to be announced later. A delightful social hour proved a happy ending to a splendid program.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Mr. Chesley Price, superintendent of the Logansport Sunday school, says: "We would be mighty glad to have arrangements made for Brother Kim to visit us on Saturday evening, June 16, as he will be in this vicinity at that time and this is an open date with him."

Mr. T. W. Holloman, Alexandria, says: "His tour of the Conference ought to do a lot to help the missionary work in the Sunday school. We will be glad to have him."

Mr. W. A. McKennon, First Church, Shreveport, is planning a union service for Brother Kim for Sunday night, June 17,

Mr. J. W. Wynn, superintendent at Crowley, says relative to Brother Kim's visit: "The date mentioned will be fine. We have a sub-district meeting prior to that date and it will give us splendid opportunity to get it before the other schools."

We are delighted to know of the great interest in Brother Kim's visit in our Conference during June.

We were at the opening of the Baton Rouge Standard Training School on Monday night of this week. The school promises to be the largest we have held this year. The morale of the school was the best yet. Prof. C. A. Bowen, of Nashville, is representing the General Board; the other members of the faculty are: Dr. Frank L. Wells, pastor; Rev. H. L. Johns, and Rev. J. H. Bowdon.

While in Baton Rouge we had an interesting conference about Sunday school work in the Baton Rouge District with Rev. L. W. Cain, the presiding elder. He has called a meeting of the Sunday school leaders in and around Hammond for Sunday afternoon, May 13, at 3 o'clock.

Rev. Ellis Smith, pastor at Bastrop, expressed a desire for a Standard Training School for his church this fall. We hope this historic center, which entertained Annual Conferences in the early days of Methodism, will set a new record for interest in Standard Training work in Louisiana when they hold their school this fall. Their new building will be an ideal home for a Standard Training School.

Rev. W. S. Henry, pastor at Winnsboro, and Educational Director of the Standard Training School, dated June 3-8, is ordering his text books, and hopes to have a great school. The last one held at Winnsboro had an enrollment of sixty-three, and issued fifty-seven credits.

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The next thing after observing Sunday School Day is to send the offering. Remember that we have three men depending upon the Sunday School Board for means to carry on the work. Do not forget that we have projected six Standard Training Schools to be held from May 27 to July 5. The Board pays a part of the expenses of these schools. We are depending upon the offering made on Sunday School Day to meet these calls.

Mr. E. M. Sharp has the promise of not less than 80 per cent of the schools of the Corinth District to observe the day. The Sunday School Board is depending upon this great section of our Conference to show its appreciation of his work by keeping him in the field.

The Corinth District Conference was a notable success in many respects. The layman, Mr. J. G. Houston, Judge Pegram, Mayor Lowe, Mr. Worsham, Mr. Finger, and others made unusually strong addresses on different phases of the work of the church. The people of the Corinth District sincerely wish that they might have the services of Rev. E. H. Cunningham for another four years. He has proven a leader who leads in all the enterprises of the church. There is no sign of decay in the Methodism of the Corinth District. The plan for the endowment of Grenada College was carried almost unanimously.

The sixth session of the Sardis District Standard Training School begins at Sardis, May 27, Sunday, at 2:30 p. m. The following courses are offered: "The Sunday School," R. H. B. Gladney; "The Christian Religion," Rev. J. E. Stephens; "Bible" (Old Testament), Miss Helen Swisher; "A Study of Middle Childhood," Miss Lynda Ramey; "Adolescent Worship," Miss Jane McDonald. Rev. T. M. Bradley, Educational Director.

Requests are coming in for reservations in our Conference Standard Training School to be held at Grenada, June 4-9. Be on time Monday, at 3 p. m., for the first lessons and arrange to remain until Saturday at noon. There is no place in the church that is better adapted to study, sane recreation, and the best fellowship. It is as near ideal as any place on earth for our workers in North Mississippi.

A Sunday School Institute has been announced by Rev. E. H. Cunningham, presiding elder, to be held at Gaines' Chapel, Thursday, May 24. Rev. A. T. McIlwain, of Corinth, is District Superintendent, and Mr. E. M. Sharp, of Booneville, is assistant extension secretary. It will be a great day at Gaines' Chapel.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Laurel Standard Training School is over. It was a good school. Fifty-three were enrolled and we had 47 credits. It looked as if we would have 50 credits at one time, but this is a remarkable showing for the first school. Laurel First Church did a very fine piece of work in promoting this school and putting it over. They had over 30 credits from First Church, which is a very unusual in the first effort. The earnestness of these workers was very fine indeed. We trust that their next school will be at least double this one and so the work will grow.

When this s read, we will be in the midst of the Yazoo City School. It is our hope and prayer that this school will measure up in every way to our expectations and that we will have more students than any of us expect or plan for. It is a fine territory for a school and one is surely needed there. The workers can come from several charges and make this the rallying point for that entire section of country. If the surrounding circuits will aid in furnishing money, I am sure that the work will go over in great shape.

Sunday School Day money is coming in slowly. We trust that we will have a larger observance and that the message of the day given by the programs will go over in great shape.

If the average Sunday school can get a hearing for this message, it will lift the work of the Sunday school very materially. This end is more desirable than that our financial goal shall be reached; but we are anxious about that also.

The enrollment of the Sunday school pupils of the Southern Methodist Church is 2,023,162, but we had only 11,000 gain for this year, which is disappointing. Our own Conference, in proportion to other conferences came out with flying colors; but we ought to reach more of our people and our enrollment in Sunday school ought to be larger than our church enrollment. I wish to urge again the Sunday school workers to make a definite effort to reach the last person for whom they are responsible.

Do you want a Vacation Church School?

Do you want a Cokesbury School?

Please drop everything else and let us know about this right away as we would like to help you if you wish us to.

Pray for the work and the workers.

A GOOD REVIVAL AT COLUMBIA, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Our revival meeting at Columbia opened on the fifth Sunday in April, at 11 a. m., with a sermon on "Prevailing Prayer," by the pastor.

The meeting continued until the next Sunday, with sermons each day, except Saturday, when we had only one.

Our beloved and efficient presiding elder, Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, did the preaching, and did it well. The congregations were large and appreciative. Everybody was delighted with Brother Gunn's earnest gospel sermons, and the church was revived, and much good was accomplished. We had two to join on profession of faith.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE AT COTTON VALLEY, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: I would like to say through the Advocate that on the last 4th Sunday we held a Sunday School Institute for the charge, and all three Sunday schools were represented. The Institute was held at Pleasant Valley church, where dinner was served. Rev. A. K. McLellan was with us and rendered efficient service. He addressed the Sunday school at Cotton Valley; then on to Pleasant Valley, and preached at 11 o'clock; held the institute in the afternoon. Upon the whole, we feel like the day was well spent, and hope to get some better results from the Sunday schools.

We are endeavoring to help our people get better organized for the work of the ongoing of our Lord's kingdom, and we are making progress. If all of our people will fall in line with the program of the church, each doing his part, we will get real results.

Yours in his service,

E. L. CARGILL.

Tender, Aching, Swollen Feet

In Just Five Minutes Those Sore, Tender, Aching Feet Get Amazing Relief.

You will probably feel like a lot of other people that about all you can do is dust some powder in your shoes or give your feet a special foot bath and let it go at that, but don't be foolish. Make up your mind to-day that you are going to give your feet a real chance to get well.

Go to any good druggist to-day and get an original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil.

The very first application will give you relief and a few short treatments will thoroughly convince you that by sticking faithfully to it for a short while your foot troubles will be a thing of the past.

Don't expect a single bottle to do it all at once, but one bottle we know will show you beyond all question that you have at least discovered the way to solid foot comfort.

Remember that Moone's Emerald Oil is a clean, powerful, penetrating Antiseptic Oil that does not stain or leave a greasy residue and that it must give complete satisfaction or your money cheerfully refunded.

A LETTER FROM "MISTER" SHIPMAN.

My Dear Doctor: Will you please let "Mister" Shipman say a little piece? Thank you.

We have just closed a fine meeting here at Tutwiler. Brother J. W. Ward, our pastor at Cleveland, did the preaching and did it well, too. We all like Brother Ward's way of telling the old, old story.

Some of my people said they were going to help make the town better; I hope they will stick to that saying.

Brother A. Roy Beasley, our pastor at Lake Cormorant, led the song. And do you know, Doctor, old Beasley sings like he knew his job, and I think he does. I also think he has some "open dates."

My presiding elder seems to be much in demand for protracted meetings; wish you would help me to head him off—he does not have to be an evangellst, he is a sure enough preacher.

Amen, looks mighty good for Grenada College! He is walking high up in "A" on long tomwalkers. Rah for Dr. Countiss, too. That young man has often had to make brick without straw, but the brick was forthcoming. Great opportunity and need for at least one well endowed college for young women in this part of the country, and it now looks like Grenada is to be that institution.

Doctor, I was glad to get a squint at you the other day as you passed through my town; if you had stayed long enough, you might have collected my dues for the Advocate. I have been reading that paper quite a while—no use saying how long. But I used to get it on rainy days and climb up in the gin loft, and read the death notices and just cry. Well, there is more than that in it now. That last of Bishop Candler's, "A Beast on a Clod of Mud," is worth one year's price of the paper. Man, I would hate for that gentleman to get after me with his pen, and he may this fall.

Say, Doctor, can't you wake up Dr. Steel? Is he pouting about something? Try to get him to write a piece for your paper. I like his hash—is about my size.

Well, it looks mighty like "Al," but if he gets there it will be without Mister Shipman's vote. I am not going to vote for any wet man. I am not going to do it, I just won't. Now, if his eye falls on this line, well, I hardly think he will call off. But I won't vote for him, I won't do it, I just won't.

Now, Doctor, keep in mind that the Greenwood District Conference meets in Belzoni 16th and 17th of this month. Hope that you can be with us, for we like you—at least I know Mister Shipman does—and that will help some whether he pays for his Advocate or not.

May the good Lord continue to be good to you.

MISTER SHIPMAN.

Seashore District.

April 7 to 13: With Rev. R. Saucier, Biloxi, Miss. We had a good meeting in North Biloxi church. During the meeting seven people joined the church by baptism and profession of faith; two infants were baptized, and several people at the altar for prayer and reconsecration, and Missionary Society also organized for the church.

April 14: While waiting for the train, I talked with the flagman. He gave me his and his wife's membership for Capitol Street Church; also his two children to be baptized and received into the church. I gave their membership to Rev. T. M. Brownlee.

Seashore District.

April 15: With Rev. W. C. M. Baggett. We had a good service in Hub, Miss., at 3 p. m. Several people at the altar for prayer, and four joined the church. At the 7:30 p. m. service with Rev. C. M. Crossley. We had a good service; several people at the altar for prayer. After the service, four people joined the church on profession of faith.

April 18 and 19: I spoke to the two district conferences, Brookhaven and Jackson, about our work for our Lord.

April 20 to 29: With Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder. The Lord was with us in the tent. We had a good revival. A church is to be organized in North Gulfport. Forty-six people joined the new church by letter and profession of faith and baptism.

Services, 34; joined a church, 69; infants baptized, 5; Missionary Society organized, 1.

I will ask your prayers for me and my family and my work. If I be a help to you in your work, I like for you to call me and I will come to you and do the work with you for our Lord and our church, call me. I will be away in the months of September and October. Let us do the work for you, brethren. Pray for me. May the Lord bless you in his work.

In order to enlarge their little church so that at least 100 people might have an opportunity to hear the gospel story at every service, the little congregation of a new church in Seoul, Korea, set themselves the task of raising 100 yen ($50). This would have been a small undertaking to a congregation in America, but it was a gigantic task for that handful of members in Korea, where the economic conditions are very hard. Many of these faithful Koreans gave their all to the cause, one woman giving her gold watch and another her wedding ring. Now the little church seats 100 comfortably, and the congregation has increased from thirty-five to sixty.

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby

~Babies Have Nerves~

By RUTH BRITTAIN

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

WOMEN'S PAINS

They Were Relieved by Cardui Which This Georgia Lady Took on Her Mother's Advice.

Columbus, Ga.—"I don't see why women will drag around, in a half-hearted way, never feeling well, barely able to drag, when Cardui might help put them on their feet, as it did me," says Mrs. Geo. S. Hunter, of this city.

"I suffered with dreadful pains in my sides. I had to go to bed and stay sometimes two weeks at a time.

"I could not work, and just dragged around the house.

"I got very thin. I went from a hundred and twenty-six pounds down to less than a hundred.

"My mother had long been a user of Cardui, and she knew what a good medicine it was for this trouble. So she told me to get some and take it.

"I sent to the store for Cardui, and before I had taken the first bottle I began to improve. My side hurt less, and I began to mend in health. I took the second bottle, and felt much better. I followed this by two more bottles.

"Cardui acted as a fine tonic. I do not feel like the same person. I am well now, and still gaining. My sides do not trouble me at all."

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

A FINE REPORT FROM UNION, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Just a word from the Union charge. We are in our fourth year on this charge, and the work moves as well as any. At the last session of the Annual Conference, Connehatta church was put with Lake charge, leaving Union full time, and one afternoon appointment which we go to twice per month. Union church assumed all the assessments of Connehatta and is moving steadily along with it.

The Union church has spent $8,500 on the building; paid a small debt on the parsonage (and both are free from debt to-day); paid its benevolences each year of the past three; paid salaries in full each year, and increased its assessment for salaries for pastor and presiding elder from $1,350 the year before we came to the work to $2,000 this year. The little church, Mount Zion, served in the afternoon, has increased its support to the ministry and paid its benevolences each year also. The mission special has been cared for each year.

We have added to the roll of the church in this time ninety-three on profession of faith, and elghty-one by certificate. A very large number of our people will lead in prayer, lead prayer meeting, and give bright testimonies.

We have sixty people at the two churches taking our New Orleans Christian Advocate.

We are planning to look after the Superannuate Endowment fund and Millsaps Campaign. Our people have been nice to us, and surely our lines have fallen in pleasant places. We are hoping for and expecting a good report this year at Conference.

CHANGES IN AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY PERSONNEL.

The American Bible Society announces important changes in its secretarial leadership. Rev. William I. Haven, D.D., LL.D., who has been one of its General Secretaries for more than twenty-nine years, will become, on May 1, General Secretary in charge of Versions, enabling the Society to place increased emphasis on this important and scholarly part of its work. Translations of the Scriptures into many of the Indian languages of the Americas are yet to be made, and fresh translations and revisions are always in process in languages of many other countries which the Society serves. Dr. Haven will continue supervision of some of the foreign agencies of the Society.

Rev. Eric M. North, Ph.D., Associate Secretary, will, by recent action of the Board of Managers, become a General Secretary on May 1. He will be concerned largely with the Society's work in the distribution of the Scriptures at home and abroad.

The Society also announces the election of the Rev. George William Brown, pastor for several years of the Presbyterian Church of Ben Avon, Pa., as a General Secretary. Mr. Brown succeeds the late Dr. Arthur C. Ryan. He will be related, as is Doctor North, to all the general work of the Society, but will care in particular for the relations of the Society to the many denominations which recognize the Society as their official agency in translating and distributing the Scriptures and for matters affecting the support of the Society's work.

Mr. Brown is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College and of McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago. For three years he served pastorates in Illinois and Iowa. During the war he was a chaplain in the American Expeditionary Forces. On returning from France he became minister of the Presbyterian church in Carnegie, Pa. For the last five years he has been minister of the Presbyterian church in Ben Avon, Pa. He has contributed often to the church press. Mrs. Brown is a daughter of Professor Cleland B. McAfee, of McCormick Theological Seminary. They have three children.—Bulletin.

The best time of the day in the Methodist kindergarten at Molenbeck, which is connected with the work of the Institutional Church in this suburb of Brussels, Belgium, is when the little ones gather around the big illustrated Bible to listen to the Bible stories told by their teachers. "Never would I have thought," says this teacher, "that the Bible would be so attractive to such little ones. Their ears and hearts are wide open to the Bible stories."

BELZONI AND GREENVILLE.

Last week we had the privilege and pleasure of attending two district conferences—the Greenwood, at Belzoni, and the Greenville, at Greenville. Apart form the personal discomfort caused by the remnants of an attack of "flu" the week before, the visits were in every way delightful.

The company of Rev. B. F. Lewis and Rev. A. Y. Brown made the trip to Belzoni very pleasant. Belzoni is a fine little town, with paved streets and a type of business and residential buildings that gives it quite the appearance of a city. The new Methodist church is especially notable, being such a building as would do credit to a town with a much larger population.

The pastor at Belzoni, Rev. J. V. Bennett, with his fine committees, had made ample preparations for the entertainment of the conference. While we could not remain over night, we had been assigned to a lovely home; and we partook heartily of the sumptuous repast at the noon hour that was modestly called "lunch." We went to the table hungry, and we left it satisfied—and that is the supreme test of a good meal. The lunch was served in the spacious basement of the church.

Our train did not arrive at Belzoni in time for us to be at the beginning of the opening exercise, but we got there in time for the communion service, which was administered by the presiding elder, Rev. L. P. Wasson, assisted by Rev. W. S. Shipman and Rev. W. W. Mitchell. The organization was effected by the election of Rev. J. D. Wroten as secretary, and the appointment of the necessary committees by the presiding elder. The attendance for the opening was fine, and we understand it grew better until the close.

Brother Wasson is a good presiding elder and a good presiding officer. We know he is a good presiding elder by the way the work of the district, as indicated by the reports, is progressing, and we know he is a good presiding officer because the work moved smoothly and expeditiously. There was no rush—but there was no lost motion.

The morning session was brought to a close with the sermon at 11 o'clock, preached by Rev. J. H. Felts, pastor at Greenwood. It was a good sermon—the result of some sound thinking and calculated to produce the same kind of activity in the minds of the hearers. It had both the devotional and the inspirational qualities that ought to characterize all sermons.

The afternoon session was opened by a brief but helpful devotional service, conducted by Rev. J. O. Dowdle, and the rest of the afternoon was devoted largely to reports from pastors, though the Conference Sunday School Superintendent, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, and the editor of the Advocate were given opportunity to say their pieces. We were especially gratified to note that most of the preachers of the district are diligently trying to put before their people all the causes of the church that are calling for attention—and collections—at this time. Not one of these causes but that is worthy, and not a dollar asked for that is not urgently needed; but we are very definitely of the opinion that one of the greatest needs of the church at the present time is a readjustment of its financial system that will relieve a state of mind that has developed among both preachers and people that makes it exceedingly difficult to put on successfully the various campaigns as fast as they are called for. We think we know the remedy—which we shall propose one of these days.

A specially interesting feature of the morning session was the address of welcome delivered by Mr. V. B. Montgomery, and the presentation by him of a gavel to the presiding officer. The gavel was made from the wood of a tree that grew at the home of the late J. W. Duggan, a pioneer Methodist of the Belzoni section. The welcome was appropriately responded to and the gavel graciously accepted by the presiding elder.

We were dreading a hard trip by train the next day to Greenville, the seat of the Greenville District Conference. We were made happy, therefore, by the cordial invitation of Rev. J. H. Felts to accompany him and Mrs. Felts and Mrs. S. I. Osborne in his car to Greenwood and spend the night with him, affording thus the opportunity of taking a train from Greenwood to Greenville at a convenient hour Thursday morning. We shall not soon forget that drive from Belzoni to Greenwood. The road is fine, running through that rich delta section that is always a delight to the eye. A good deal of backwater is scattered over that portion of the earth's surface at the present time, but it is not doing any special damage—and the fishing will be mighty good later on! We spotted a lot of good fishing holes along the way, and we are living in the hope of trying them out some of these days. Brother Felts is a good driver, the company was delightful, and the whole trip was a joy. We almost forgot: About half a mile from Greenwood, we picked up a nail in the left hind tire, and had to take it off and put on the spare; then after we got into the city, we picked up another nail in the left front tire. The spares had given out; so Mrs. Felts and the editor were picked up by a good neighbor and taken on to the parsonage, while Brother Felts called the "trouble man" and stayed by the stuff till he came. When it comes to changing tires, though, Brother Felts and the editor make a good team.

Those who have enjoyed the hospitality of the Felts parsonage know how perfectly we were taken care of. Upon invitation of the pastor, we made a little talk at prayer meeting, and after prayer meeting—punctures, etc., having made us a little too late for supper—we had a good meal together downtown. Then home, pleasant converse for awhile, and to bed.

A train from Greenwood put us in Greenville Thursday morning about 10 o'clock. As pleasant fellow-travelers we had Mrs. S. F. Riley, of the Orphanage; Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of the Sunday school work, and Rev. T. B. Thrower, pastor of the Evansville and Dubbs charge. It was a goodly company.

We got to the church in time to hear the closing part of the devotional address of the presiding elder, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, which gave the district conference a good start. It was a good conference all that day, and the next, too, we are sure, for with a presiding elder like L. M. Lipscomb and a pastor like J. E. Cunningham to look after the business and the entertainment, nothing could be lacking. Anyhow, that is the way we found it. Greenville likes its presiding elder and its preacher.

It was reported to the conference that Rev. W. C. Galceran, Jr., lay desperately ill in a local hospital, and a tender prayer was offered in his behalf.

Rev. R. G. Lord, experienced and efficient, was elected secretary of the conference, the presiding elder announced the committees, and the conference got down to work. At 11 o'clock, Rev. L. A. McKeown, pastor at Hollandale, preached. We had never heard Brother McKeown before—we wish we could hear him often. He has pulpit gifts of a very high order. While we are speaking of preaching, we will also mention the sermon preached Thursday night by Rev. J. W. Ward, pastor at Cleveland. We had never heard him, either, and we wish we could hear him often. Judging by the samples we heard at this district conference, the Greenville District is well manned.

Taking into consideration the fact that this is the overflowed section, the reports of the pastors at the afternoon session showed great diligence and a marvelous "come-back." Greenville itself is as spick and span as if it had never been under water, and the people are optimistic. It is a great section and a great people.

Visitors were given right of way at the afternoon session, and the following, in addition to the editor of the Advocate, spoke: Gladney, McIlwain, Weaver, Mrs. Riley, President Key, and Rev. T. H. Mills, representing the Memorial Home. The presiding elder was very gracious in giving time to the visitors, and the hearers were patient; so the day passed pleasantly.

Dr. J. R. Countiss presented the Grenada College endowment plan at the morning session, stayed long enough to see it unanimously adopted, and then hastened away to present the plan to the Greenwood District Conference at Belzoni. According to the report we heard, the plan had been approved by six district conferences with but one dissenting vote. We have not heard the result of the vote at Belzoni, —but we can guess what it was. Grenada College is to become a great institution.

We had lunch at the Big Brothers' Hall and supper at the parsonage, with Rev. and Mrs. J. J. Garner as fellow-guests at the parsonage. Being a good judge of good eating, we award a blue ribbon to both meals. Brother Cunningham and Mrs. Cunningham are real hosts.

We left Greenville at 9:50 p. m. and got to New Orleans in time for breakfast the next morning—"tired, but happy," as the schoolday compositions have it when telling about the picnic. Thus endeth the chapter.

THE TRANSFORMING POWER OF THE GOSPEL.

By Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook.

"I am uot ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also the Greek" (Romans 1:16). These words were spoken by one who felt their reality to their fullest extent. For we hear him saying in I Timothy 1:15, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief." The annals of history do not record a greater manifestation of divine power than the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. That man whose zeal was at its zenith in persecuting the "churches of God;" who walked in arrogance of the authority which he possessed; whose soul despised the religion of Jesus Christ, was changed from a vile sinner to a humble child of God. I thank God for that day's journey to Damascus; but for that day's journey we would not have had the great Apostle to the Gentile world. That day was the beginning of a new epoch in the life of the man Saul. He was brought in close contact with God's Son who died to bring this universal salvation to all lost souls. The next thing we hear him saying is, "O Lord God, what wilt thou have me to do?" And we hear him saying in II Cor. 5:17: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." The gospel is the power of God unto salvation unto all who believe.

The experience of Paul is surely a proof positive fact of the wonderful transformation that takes place in the soul of one who is genuinely couverted. But when we consider the source whence this power springs, we are made to realize the reasonableness of its supernatural results. It is the same power that trausformed this earth from a state of chaos to the beautiful world we have today. Mankind by this power also was made from dust into a fleshly being, and God "breathed into nis nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7). By this power the Red Sea was divided, and the Jordan also, allowing the hosts of Israel to march through on dry land. Also the wall of Jericho fell down after it was compassed about seven days. These and many other remarkable instances of God's divine power go to prove his ability to redeem the guilty soul from the power of sin aud hell.

Paul expresses the conversiou of a soul as being "a new creature" in Christ Jesus. This is a grand expression of the new experience that takes place iu the soul when one is truly saved. "The man is not mended, but he is newly made; he is a new creature, a new creation, a little world in himself: formerly all was in chaos; now, there is a new creation which God himself owns as his workmanship." Praise God for the wouderful reality of salvation which is full and free. Whosoever will, may come to this fountaiu and drink. No matter how deep the soul may be degraded in sin, the power of the gospel will elevate it, and bring it back to its Adamic privileges again. In Isa. 1:18, the prophet says: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be as red like crimson, they shall be as wool." All together, let us praise God for the precious rich red blood of Christ Jesus that penetrates every nook and corner of the soul of man, and cleanses it "Whiter than any fuller can whiten it." Bless his precious name forever!

If you are a sinner lost, let me entreat you to come this "fountain of David" and receive a cleansing from all sin. Jesus gave up glory for Galilee to redeem a soul crippled by sin. Though you may have gone in the depth of sin, yet God is looking for you and interceding for your sins. The blood of our Christ has been applied to murderers, thieves, adulterers, and to the most degraded of sinuers, and it has lifted them from the mire and clay of sin and planted their feet upon the eternal Rock of Ages, in the "highway of holiness."

It is said that an artist was asked by a king to make him a man. A human figure was carved in marble, but was denounced as cold; painted on canvas, but condemned as lifeless; molded of wax, but derided as motionless. "Make me a man," cried the capricious monarch. Then the artist found a beggar, cleansed him, clothed him, and brought him to the king, saying: "O king, I could not make a man myself, but here is one whom God made, and I found." Man as an ambassador for Jesus cannot change life itself, or make the siuner whole, but he can go out after the sinner lost and induce him to come to Jesus for soul cleansing. "There is a fountain opened to the house of David for sin and for uncleanness" (Zech. 13:1).

When we come to think of it, God works in material more enduring than marble, more delicate than gold, more beautiful than ivory, more plastic than clay. He works in that which is more precious than all—"character," and makes of it a product bearing the divine image and superscription. Paul the apostle says: "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." God purposes to work a heavenly change in the life of all who will submit to his shaping. He is waiting graciously to pour out his majestic Spirit upon all who will accede to his princely ruling. Whatever the Bible teaches is to be accepted. To follow any other plan is to flirt with your soul's ruin.

All those who believe in the gospel may be saved from sin in this life, and when their work is finished here, they can join the redeemed host of God who have come up out of the great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. And as they are privileged to meet each other again under the trees on the banks of the River of Life, may be able to recount with rejoicing the days that are past.

The following lines by the poet are fitting here:

"Lord Jesus, make thyself to me
A living, bright reallty,
More present to faith's vision keen
Than any outward object seen,
More dear, more intimately nigh,
Than e'en the sweetest earthly tie.

"Nearer and nearer still to me
Thou living, loving Saviour be.
Brighter the vlsion of thy face,
More glorious still thy words of grace;
Till life shall be transformed to love,
A heaven below, a heaven above."

Let us as sojourners here make these words the standard of our living and the standard of our serving! And Christ will be pleased, and angels will rejoice around the shining throne of God.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION, MAY 1 AND 2, 1928.

The thirty-fourth annual meeting of the Board of Education was held in Nashville, Tenn., May 1 and 2. All the members were present except a layman from Texas and Bishop Cannon, who was absent on account of Mrs. Cannon's illness. The personnel of this Board is composed of bishops, educators, preachers and pastors, of wisdom and experience in the affairs of the church.

Dr. Stonewall Anderson, the General Secretary, in his report, pointed out that during the last ten years the number of our institutions had decreased from eighty-four to seventy-four, and that the present indebtedness of these seventy-four, in round numbers, is $4,400,000; that $8,000,000 is needed to enable them to measure up to the minimum requirements of the standardizing associations, while $32,000,000 will be needed to meet the standards suggested by the Association of American Colleges; that additional amounts would be needed by our universities and academies in order to enable them to do their work. These figures are large and rather startling, and the Annual Conferences and the General Conference must face them squarely.

The Board provided for thorough, impartial surveys of both the schools and the fields in the several Annual Conferences and States. These surveys will contitute the basis of a permanent educational policy which the church can support with confidence. The results will perhaps be the elimination of some institutions, the consolidation of others and the enlargement and strengthening of all.

The report dealt also with the very important question of ministerial education as it is carried on in our schools, colleges, correspondence schools and pastors' schools. The request for an increase in assessment of $35,000 per year for esch of the Schools of Religion at Emory Unlversity and Southern Methodist Unlversity was endorsed.

Last year fourteen standard pastors' schools were held throughout the church and also five institutes. In the standard schools, 1,269 were enrolled in the graduate departments and 2,279 credits were issued. The cost of tbese fourteen schools was $23,824.20, which was met by the local boards of managers and the connectional board co-operating. For next year five new schools have been organized, and it is expected that a much larger attendance will be reported.

In the uudergrdauate courses attention was called to the fact that the schools were allowing too many courses to be taken by the students, and the General Secretary recommended limiting the number of credits to two courses. This recommendation was adopted. Efficient work just cannot be done in these schools if more than two courses are taken during the ten-day period.

The Associate Secretary made a final report on the Christian Education Movement, which showed that about 50 per cent of the pledges had been paid, amounting to a total of $8,000,000, in round numbers. The tragedy of the unpaid 50 per cent not only involves seriously the work and equipment of the schools who expected to receive this money and will not, but more seriously still, it involves the moral integrity and consecration of those Methodists who made pledges, signed their own name and never redeemed them. The shadows, however, of this part of the picture, are relieved by the fact that since the Christian Education Movement has been operating, large contributions have come to our institutions as "new money," over and above the receipts from the movement, but largely due to it. The records show that the total assets of our schools at the beginning of the movement in 1921 were, in round numbers, $30,000,000, and that they are to-day $65,000,000, an increase of $5,000,000 per year. This increase is not due to increased valuation of property, nor does it include the James B. Duke gift of $19,000,000 for building fund at Duke University, the $6,000,000 for the medical school, nor the university's share in the $40,000,000 Duke Foundation.

In accordance with previous recommendations and resolutions, the Board established a new Department of Promotion and Finance. As the name implies, there are two elements with which this department will deal—the cultural and the financial. The church must be made more educationally minded, and this will mean a larger support for our institutions.

The report of Dr. J. M. Culbreth, Secretary of Religious Education, dealt mainly with the work that is being done at the State schools in behalf of our Methodist students. Student pastors and Bible teachers are employed and a varied program of social and recreational work is being conducted. There are thirty of these workers under the care of the Board at this time, and from all sources more than $60,000 per year is being invested in maintenance of the work. Provision was made for more college visitation than the Secretary of this department and a representative of the Board of Missions have been able to do.

The report of W. E. Hogan, treasurer, showed that the finances of the Board were in excellent condition. In fact, the Board of Education always lives within its budget and does not go in debt. The sum of $18,885 was loaned to 160 different students in thirty-nine different institutions during the year. Probably no work in the church is more helpful and far-reaching than these loans, which are made to students who show great promise of usefulness to the church and are in every way worthy of assistance. The sum of $8,200 was collected on loans previously made and which had fallen due. The General Conference was requested to make an assessment of $50,000 a year for this work.

The Board heartily approves the plans of the Board of Lay Activities to make 1929 Stewardship Year and pledged its co-operation and assistance. The Correspondence Schools at Emory and Southern Methodist Universities are doing their usual excellent work, though the enrollment in the latter has fallen off considerably within the last few years. The General Conference would do well to require all of the undergraduates to take their work in the correspondence schools.

The Board expressed its cordial approval of every effort that is being made to stamp out illiteracy and provide adequate educational opportunities for our youth, irrespective of geographic, economic and social conditions. It particularly urged that the rural schools be strengthened and that better educational facilities be provided for those who are at present without educational opportunities.

H. H. SHERMAN, Secretary.

FROM THE DEN IN THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel.

Just back from the Confederate Reunion at Little Rock, and you should have seen me wearing enough decorations to please the Kaiser—a Reunion badge, a "Distinguished Guest" badge, a Forrest's Cavalry Corps badge, a Reunion floral badge, and several little flags! All except one were pinned on by beautiful women and I shall preserve them as souvenirs of a most delightful occasion. What was I decorated for? Gallantry in non-action, I suppose. And yet, come to think of it, didn't I "annoy the enemy," making him run his horses nearly to death trying to catch me, which he never did! Didn't I shake a stick at one of his gun-boats on the Mississippi river, and thinking I was the advance guard of an army, he kept the boat shelling the woods all the afternoon and up to midnight, when I was the only hostile creature within a hundred miles of him! Didn't I run a hundred Yankees with a switch—never mind who was in the lead or on what the switch was used! Didn't I smuggle medicines through the Yankee lines at Memphis for Forrest's men, running the risk of going to prison "up North" for the war, and bring out of Memphis news of the "enemy's" movements, and contribute my "bit" to the heroic effort to drive the "enemy" out of the country! All of these patriotic activities entitle me to recognition, and though long delayed it has come at last; and when General W. A. Collier, commander of "Forrest's Cavalry Corps," put me on his staff as "Assistant Chaplain," as "Flapper Fanny" would say, I was "tickled to death."

There were about 4,000 old vets on hand, many of them physically infirm and feeble, but game as ever. Every mother's son of them is glad the Union did not go to pieces when the cyclone of revolution struck it, yet they have nothing to apologize for, nothing to take back, and everything to be proud of. They fought men as brave as they were, one to five, never struck below the belt, and held the world at bay for four long years, leaving a record which the South will never blush to tell. Confederate flags flew side by side with the National colors everywhere, the one representing a glorious past, the other a glorious present and future; and these grizzled old veterans who fought against the one and for the other are now quick to resent any disrespect to either; loyal to both and patriots all. The Confederate Reunion is an annual Southern interstate picnic, jubilee, and celebration all in one. It is absolutely detached from politics and is purely social. There was enough noise to celebrate the arrival of the millennium—band after band, bugles, horns, fiddles, all going full tilt, and all drowned by the rebel "yell" when they heard Dixie!

Four thousand old soldiers and 25,000 visitors, and the chief of police told me the order was "splendid" and only two drunks had been reported to him! So much for prohibition. And yet they propose to run for President a man who seeks to have prohibition nullified and repealed; and I am told that Arkansas will vote for Al Smith at Houston. So much for the political machine in the hands of shrewd manipulators.

The Confederate Reunion is a unique event. There is nothing in history to parallel it. When we study it seriously, it affords ground for great confidence in the future of our country. Such an event, perhaps, could not happen in any other country in the world, or with any other people than the people of the South. The hospitality of Little Rock was unbounded, and I overheard many say it was the best Reunion ever held. They go to Charlotte, N. C., next year, those that are left; but many will not be there. The line does not waver, but silently melts away, as one by one these venerable heroes "cross over the river to rest under the shade of the trees."

Mansfield, La.

HE DIED AT HIS POST.

By Rev. J. A. Moore.

(On May 6th, 1928, Rev. Robert Selby, Presiding Elder of the Meridian District of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, passed to his eternal reward between the hours of eleven and twelve o'clock a.m., in front of Salem Church, some four miles west of DeSoto, Miss.)

A spring-time Sabbath called to praise:
  The servant of God was ready;
He turned his feet that day of days,
  With vigorous tread and steady,
To a grove in the midst of rural beauty—
  For him that day the place of duty.

What time he gave himself to seek
  What word his Lord would have him speak,
His Master's voice he heard to say:
  "My friend, the word I need to-day
Is one to make my people see
  How mine their lives can give for Me!

"The measure of thy cup brims large;
  Thy labor on this earth's complete;
Lay down, well-kept, unstained, thy charge
  And come to heavenly service sweet!
'Well done,' thy meed of praise is given,
  For thou hast won thy praise in heaven!"

* * * * * *

The sermon preached by him that hour
  Was eloquent and fraught with power;
And many were they whose hearts were stirred—
  Who paused to ponder what they had heard—
Who bowed their heads and turned away
  To find some secret place to pray!

Good friend, thou hast not died in vain;
  Earth's loss is heaven's eternal gain.
To live in those who're left behind
  And these with hands like steel to bind
To what is lovely, true and pure,
  Is life indeed that shall endure.

* * * * * *

Weep not, sad hearts, nor say farewell!
  But think of him as gone to dwell
Among the blood-washed, sainted throng
  Who sing redemption's triumph song.
Ere long, by grace, again we'll meet
  And greet him at the Savior's feet!

ANNOUNCING THE MOUNT SEQUOYAH LEADERSHIP SCHOOL.

Type of School.

The term "Leadership School," has been applied to the schools conducted annually for the past ten years by the General Sunday School Board at Mount Sequoyah, Fayetteville, Ark., and Lake Junaluska, N. C. These schools seek to render a service to the leaders in Sunday school work in Annual Conferences, presiding elders' districts, and local churches.

Date.

The date of the Leadership School to be conducted at Mount Sequoyah next summer is July 5-19. The Sunday School Board will co-operate in the Summer School of Missions to be conducted by the Board of Missions July 31-Aug. 14, offering a number of courses in this school.

Courses.

A total of twenty-two courses covering a broad range of subjects in Bible, Religious Education, and Missions will be offered in the school July 5-19. Courses will be offered for workers in every department of the Sunday school. Two courses in Missions and Social Service, two courses in the Methodist Young People's Training Course, and two Advanced courses will be offered. One of these will be a great seminar on "The Program of Work" for the Sunday school. This seminar will be divided into five sections and will make a fundamental re-study of the Programs of Work now in use. Conference employed workers, district workers, and leaders in local churches will engage in this study. The second advanced course is on "Christian Teachings" and will be led by Dr. H. B. Trimble, of McKendree Church, one of the outstanding philosophical preachers in Methodism.

Faculty.

We have secured a strong faculty for the school at Mount Sequoyah this year. In addition to the service of several members of the General Sunday School Board staff, others of outstanding ability have been engaged. Among those from outside our own church are: Mrs. Eva B. McCallum, Cradle Roll Specialist for the Disciples Church; Dr. Charles Darsie, Adult Specialist for the same church; Dr. Norman E. Richardson, Professor of Religious Education in Northwestern University; Dr. James V. Thompson, Director of Religious Education, First Methodist Church, Evanston, Ill. Other outstanding teachers in our own church will serve in the school.

Young People's Conference.

The Young People's Conference will be conducted simultaneously with the Leadership School. A special building is being reserved for the young people. Special courses and programs and recreational features are being arranged for them. Mr. Sherwood Gates, Doctors Richardson and Thompson, and Prof. W. M. Alexander, of Central College, Fayette, Md., will lead in the conference.

Speakers.

Members of the faculty will bring vital messages on the current problems in morals and religion. The Sunday preachers are Bishop John M. Moore and Dr. Stonewall Anderson.

THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Alexandria District Conference met in its fifty-eighth session, May 16 and 17, 1928, in Pleasant Hill, La., with Dr. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder, in the chair. The conference opened the morning of the 16th at 11 o'clock with a sermon by Rev. H. N. Brown, of Natchitoches, after which the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered.

Lunch was served on the church lawn each day by the ladies, which was enjoyed by all. The spirit of the conference was good throughout—everybody seemed to enjoy it and receive a blessing.

The presiding elder and pastor-host are to be congratulated upon laying emphasis on preaching, as the 11 o'clock hour and 8 o'clock hour were set aside for preaching. Revs. H. N. Brown, J. B. Peters, L. N. Hoffpauir, and D. B. Boddie did the preaching. Rev. J. W. Suddith was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. Rev. T. D. Lipscomb was recommended for readmission. Prof. Floyd Andrus, of Eunice, was licensed to preach.

Revival fires are burning over the district and souls are being saved and members are being received into the church.

The conference divided the district into four zones, to be known as follows: Alexandria zone, Opelousas zone, Oakdale zone, and Natchitoches zone. Each one of these zones is to have a leader for each department of the church.

W. D. Haas, Jr., of Bunkie, was re-elected District Lay Leader, and upon his nomination F. D. Richardson, of Alexandria, was elected his assistant. J. F. Schell, of Opelousas; R. W. Winstead, of Natchitoches; J. T. Calhoun, of Glenmora; W. G. Bowden, of Alexandria, were elected associate District Lay Leaders.

The following were elected lay delegates to Annual Conference: W. D. Haas, Jr., Bunkie; H. H. White, Alexandria; Mrs. A. S. Lutz, Alexandria; T. W. Holloman, Alexandria; T. W. Hardee, Pleasant Hill; Miss Ora Hooper, Rosedale; Mrs. O. E. Grant, Boyce; Mrs. H. N. Brown, Natchitoches.

Alternate Lay Delegates: Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, Alexandria; J. L. Ballard, Opelousas.

The laymen's work was represented by W. D. Haas, Jr., District Lay Leader, of Bunkie.

C. D. Atkinson represented the Sunday School Work.

Dr. A. W. Turner represented the National Prohibition cause.

Rev. J. B. Peters, First Church, New Orleans, represented the Superannuate Endowment cause.

Dr. N. E. Joyner represented the Conference Board of Education.

R. W. Vaughan, of Ruston, represented our Orphanage.

Pastors' reports showed that the outlook for the district is good.

The conference regretted very much to learn of the serious illness of two of our beloved pastors, H. W. Bowman and H. B. Thomason, and of the slight illness of C. K. Smith, each of these brethren being absent. The conference went to prayer for these brethren, and the secretary was instructed to send a word of regret to each of them and express the sympathy of the conference to them.

Everybody enjoyed the fine hospitality of the Pleasant Hill people, for there never was a conference more pleasantly entertained than this one. Rev. D. F. Anders deserves a great deal of praise for the way in which he handled affairs. We will all be glad when we have another opportunity to go back to Pleasant Hill.

The conference adopted unanimously a resolution opposing any candidate for President of the United States who favors the amendment of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution and who opposes enforcing the Eighteenth Amendment.

The conference goes to Boyce next year.

D. B. BODDIE, Secretary.

Resolution Adopted by Alexandria District Conference.

Whereas, there is a united effort on the part of organizations opposed to National Prohibition to elect as President of the United States a man who is opposed to the Eighteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution;

Be it resolved, We, the Alexandria District of the Louisiana Annual Conference, in session at Pleasant Hill, La., refuse to support or vote for any man for President of the United States who is opposed to the Eighteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

Be it further resolved, We will support and vote for a man who observes and pledges himself to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Law.

S. S. BOGAN,
Chairman, Committee on Resolutions.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Alexandria District Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session at Pleasant Hill, La., May 17, 1928.

D. B. BODDIE, Secretary.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

So many building propositions are before the people of the Grenada District that of late the elder has been put to it to keep from getting things mixed. Our interest in the endowment of Grenada College has grown more acute as the proposition has run the gauntlet of the district conferences; two of these conferences are now in session and they are the last to meet. By practically a unanimous vote the proposition has gone over, and we are very happy at the thought of a fully endowed A-grade college here in Genada for all the years ahead.

Millsaps College is looming large in the horizon of the future, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are being raised to enlarge its present plant.

But these items of material improvement are not the only matters of great interest before our people. Here at Grenada we "broke dirt" two days ago for a great $100,000 church. Work is being pushed every day now, and the Sunday school unit will soon be taking shape.

They are wrestling with a $40,000 proposition at Lexington, and have something over $26,000 in cash and subscriptions already, and the end is not yet.

Mellville Johnson is going forward with the construction of a $20,000 Sunday school annex at Winona, and the money has practically all been raised.

At Durant a competent committee is at work on plans for a brand-new parsonage. One other thing that the pastor has seen grow from day to day there at Durant is the prayer meeting. On a recent Wednesday night there were 103 people present at the prayer service.

The tide is running high at Coffeeville for a new church. More than a third of the money necessary to build this house has already been raised, and they are moving ahead. At a recent quarterly conference Coffeeville reported the salary paid in full for three quarters.

Rev. Shed Hill Caffey is toiling and sweating over a big new church proposition at Oxford. There are more Methodist young people in the University of Mississippi at this time than there are members of our church there at Oxford. They will have to have help from the outside. That help is so urgent that it would be nothing short of a tragedy to deny their call.

At Holly Springs nearly $30,000 has been raised for an educational building and to renovate the auditorium. They had already spent more than $1,000 on the parsonage since the beginning of this Conference year. Bradley is in high oats at Holly Springs.

Pine Flat is one of the progressive communities within the bounds of the Paris circuit, though at present served by Brother Caffey. They have just erected a beautiful little chapel there, which will be a credit and joy to that whole section. Brother Caffey reports a great congregation there last Sunday.

The First Church people, Water Valley, have remodeled and renovated the parsonage there, and this will give the pastor's family a delightful home.

Our people at Vaiden have greatly improved the parsonage there, and the pastor and family are enjoying the added comfort and improved appearance.

A number of Sunday school rooms will be provided right away for our growing school at West, and the church will be painted and otherwise improved.

Brother Murff has placed some very needed improvements on the parsonage at Kilmichael. He expects also to build a new church at Stewart at no distant day.

And thus the story runs. I do not believe any of our districts so largely rural as the Grenada District can equal the showing made by our people in the matter of new church enterprises. We are praying that God may give us a great revival of religion while this material program is being put over.

E. S. LEWIS.

"GET THEE BEHIND ME, SATAN." Matt. 16:23.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

"Get thee behind me, Satan."

Here one person calls another "Satan." How discourteous! How unfeeling! How unkind! What an uncivil fellow the speaker must be! Is that the way you feel about it?

But it was Jesus who so spake—he who knows, he who loves, he who is always considerate of the best interest and highest happiness of his fellows. And Jesus was always right. He is our pattern in all things.

Peter approached Jesus from Satan's position. He represented Satan, and spoke for him. His were the words of the tempter urging Jesus, because of the suffering to him if he did not, to turn from God's appointed way.

But self-will and self-care are so human and so quickly chosen that it is doubtful if Peter was conscious of the real source of his suggestion, or aware that he had aligned himself with the chief opposer of God and right. He must therefore be awakened to the true nature of his allies and the real direction of his effort. That awakening must be sharp and decisive. It must shut off debate. It must leave no room for doubt. And it was.

Peter did not tempt Jesus to crime or any overt act of wrong. Peter's thought seems to have been that Jesus was passively to allow his friends to save him from the agony and death he foresaw and had just foretold. But to do this Jesus would have to shirk sacrifice and suffering that was essential to his redemptive mission. But nothing of the tremendous cost of man's redemption would he dodge, nor would he daily with a foolish, tempting friend.

It was just like the cunning seducer to try to defeat the glorious purpose of God and business of Christ by short-cutting the process and economizing the sacrificial cost, thus making the payment inadequate to secure clear title and full possession. This, through Peter, he sought to have Jesus do, and this solicitation the blessed Son of God promptly and decisively spurned.

But how often has this same subtle strategy won for Satan victory over followers of the Christ he could not seduce! How often has he defeated good men and women of the finest and best by which God had appointed them, leaving in their hands only that which was not worth retaining! God is calling always, not to ease or comfort or pleasure, but to the noblest and most Christly devotement of life to the succoring and saving of the less fortunate ones of our day. His call is to blessed partnership in his sacrificial redemptive effort, which means also partnership in its glorious triumphs and joys.

And it is Satan, Satan always, who, in harmony with our weak and selfish human nature, suggests

(how often through the voice our dearest friend): "Sidestep the sacrifice, dodge the suffering, shun the agony of the cross!"

Alas, if we fail then to realize that, no matter through whose voice and influence this seductive proposal comes, it is Satan, the arch-deceiver and destroyer, who speaks thus to our souls!

And, alas, if we act falteringly and weakly with the subtle suggestion to cut God's price, or lower his standard; for, dealing in absolute and spiritual values, we only obtain title and come into possession when we have paid the full cost. For just in so far as one seeks to dodge the agony of the cross will he cheat himself out of the glory and joy of the crown.

The only safe way to meet such temptation is the way Jesus took—and therefore indicates for us, with promptness, decision and utmost finality—knowing and spurning the offer as from the arch-enemy of God and our souls.

THE BOARD OF MISSIONS IN EIGHTY-SECOND ANNUAL MEETING LAUNCHES FAR-REACHING MOVEMENTS.

Movements destined to have far-reaching effects upon the missionary policy of the Church were launched at the eighty-second annual session of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at Nashville, Tenn., May 8 and 9.

When the meeting was called to order on Tuesday morning, May 8, by Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, president of the Board, there were present bishops of the Church, outstanding men and women leaders in missionary work of the denomination, and missionaries representing practically every foreign field. Probably there has never been a finer and more enthusiastic gathering of missionary workers of the Church, and a spirit of harmony and encouragement prevailed and a determination to push the missionary battle to the very gates of the enemy.

The report of Dr. W. G. Cram, General Secretary, showing an increase in missionary offerings in 1927 of $254,230.97, said to be the largest increase in offerings for missionary work of any board in North America, and the report of Mr. J. F. Rawls, treasurer, showing all bank indebtedness of the board was paid in full by December 31, 1927, were hailed with enthusiasm. The Board increased its appropriations over the previous year $185,000. The total amount appropriated was $2,640,065, of which $1,570,436 was for the Department of General Work and $1,069,629 for woman's work.

New Missionaries.

A high point in the annual meeting was the acceptance and assignment of 39 new missionaries, 29 of whom were assigned in foreign fields and 10 in home fields. Of these, 20 are sent out by the Department of General Work and 19 under the Woman's Department. On Tuesday evening, May 8th, for the first time in history, the new missionaries appeared before the board in regular session and were consecrated by the Bishops in charge of the foreign fields in a great public service. Assembled before the altar were all new missionaries, home and foreign, all volunteers in training at Scarritt College, and approximately 150 deaconesses who were reappointed to their respective fields for the ensuing year—a noble army of workers for the Lord. Few more inspiring sights have ever been witnessed in the history of the Church. The appointment of these new workers is evidence that the period of crisis through which the Board of Missions has recently passed is now over and that a real advance has begun.

A Southern Biblical Institute.

The action of the Board looking toward the establishment of a great Southern Biblical Institute at Lake Junaluska, N. C., for the training of preachers and Christian workers who have not had the advantage of a finished scholastic training has been acclaimed by bishops, presiding elders, educators, and other leaders as one of the most important movements launched by the Board in many years. This school will offer training especially to pastors in rural and industrial work.

A School of Missionary Education.

Carrying out the plan for widespread missionary education among the people of the Church, the Board adopted a plan providing for a far-reaching School of Missionary Education, to function through mission study classes in local congregations, undergraduate schools of missions in cities and districts, graduate seminars, and a correspondence school. The school will have local, undergraduate and graduate departments and will confer credits, certificates, and diplomas. Other details of the plan will be announced in August.

Further Actions of the Board.

The Board increased its appropriation for Negro work from $60,000 to $100,000 with the understanding that the additional $40,000 should be set aside for the development of Paine College, Augusta, Ga., Southern Methodism's school for the training and uplifting of the Negro race. Paine College has had a large growth and demands additional equipment and endowment if it is to maintain the high standard set by the Church in its work for colored people. It is believed that if the Church manifests its determination to do its part toward making Paine College a really great college for colored people, the great foundations in the North will help in the work.

Other important actions of the Board included the adoption of resolutions opposing any candidate for high office not pledged to support national prohibition, and the calling of a great missionary convention, upon the suggestion of Dr. W. G. Cram, to meet late in 1928 for the purpose of considering missionary problems and quickening missionary interest throughout the Church.

INCREASING WORK OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCETY.

More than ten million copies of the entire Bible or parts of the Bible is the new record circulation figure for 1927 reported by the American Bible Society in the one hundred and twelfth annual report of the Board of Managers of the Society just made public. The total number of issues is 10,034,797 copies published in 166 different languages and dialects.

Nine of the Society's ten agencies in the United States report a distribution of Scriptures greater in number than the preceding year. In this distribution more than a hundred languages are represented, including several North American Indian and immigrant dialects. It includes tens of thousands of Gospels given to flood sufferers in the Mississippi Valley, hundreds of thousands of issues called for by the nation-wide Gospel reading program in January and February, thousands of Scriptures placed by sale or gift in homes reached by a house to house canvass made by colporteurs, missionaries and volunteer workers, gifts to Indian school children, to penitentiaries, to Federal and local hospitals, to struggling churches and Sunday schools, and to many other needy fields.

The statistics of the Society also state that in the West Indies, Mexico, Brazil, and Japan, an increased distribution in the number of copies of complete Bibles occurred. In Japan, this increase was more than ten per cent over the previous year, which had also shown a gratifying growth. In Egypt, the sales increased over fifty per cent.

In China, for the third year in succession, over three million copies of the Scriptures have been circulated by the American Bible Society. The Society is constructing a new Bible house on one of the leading streets of Peking. From the present outlook the building will be completed by Sept. 1, and a formal opening is planned for October. The Brazil agency, located in Rio de Janeiro, has completed fifty years of Bible work. The population during this time has increased two and one-half times, while the circulation of the Scriptures has increased twelve and one-half times. Nearly 50,000 more copies were circulated in 1927 than during the preceding year.

The first complete Bible in the Luba Lulua language, spoken by some 2,500,000 natives of the Bantu race in the Belgian Congo, was published last year by the Bible Society. It is the one hundred an sixty-ninth language in the world into which the whole Bible has been translated through the efforts of the Bible Societies. A second edition of 10,000 Bulu New Testaments was also printed for the West African Missions. Transiation work, in co-operation with certain American missions, was done in Central America, South, East, and Central Africa and in some of the American Indian dialects.

In the Philippine Islands, the task of replacing 14,000 lynotype pages of Scriptures in dialect, destroyed by the Japanese earthquake, and the equally important task of reducing these pages to permanent plates for storage were completed. In all there are seven dialect Bibles in plates. In addition to the moulds kept by the agency in Manila, a duplicate set is now in the New York vaults to guard against another disastrous earthquake.

The Society has never received so many appeals for grants of Scriptures to individuals, institutions, missions, and for campaigns as in the year just closed. The response is limited by lack of funds to cover this phase of the Society's work. The budget of the Society for 1928 amounts to $1,345,426, including estimated local receipts in foreign countries. Approximately one-half of the total of this appropriation must come from the contributions of churches and individuals.

TEN WEEKS OF TITHE EDUCATION.

Any church may now put on a ten weeks' course of tithing education, right in the midst of its other activities, and at a ridiculously small cost.

The Layman Company, which has distributed many millions of pamphlets on the tithe, now announces an attractive new series, at so low a price that distribution to an entire church through ten weeks costs only two cents and a half per family.

A complete set of samples and full particulars will be sent for thirty cents; this includes two playlets, a tithe account book, "Winning Financial Freedom," and "Adventures in Tithing."

Please give your denomination; also mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE LAYMAN COMPANY,
730 Rush Street,
Chicago, Ill.

The Methodist church at Pilsen, Czechoslovakia, Rev. J. Paul Bartak, pastor, has now 1,000 members on its roll. This church was dedicated in July, 1927, by Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, assisted by Dr. W. G. Cram, General Secretary of the Board of Missions.

Colorado: The Royal Gorge—the Sky Line Drive.

When we think of a western tour we think of the Rocky Mountains, and when the Rockies are spoken of one naturally thinks of Colorado, for in that State the mountain peaks and ranges are most numerous and most notable. Colorado has 300 mountain peaks more than 13,000 feet in altitude—more than all Europe possesses, and forty-five of these peaks are over 14,000 feet in height. Thus Colorado is the cool summer playground of America, and when hot weather comes the snowy peaks of the Colorado Rockies are a lure almost impossible to resist. During June, July and August her white-hooded ranges become the summer home of tens of thousands of vacationists who auto up and down the mountain highways, pitch their tents besides mountain streams, and breathe such pure air as rarely comes in the lowlands.

A traveler may have the choice of three ways of viewing the wonderful works of nature in this great State, for one road runs round the mountain, another over the mountain, while the Denver and Rio Grande Western, on which we travel, runs through the mountain. This road offers much in scenic splendor, for one may look up the dazzling snow peaks, or out on parched plains, or pass the Gold Camps and see new mining camps which give evidence to the fact that the mineral riches of the Rockies are far from being played out. He may see intensive agriculture profitably practiced in the agricultural communities of the Arkansas Valley or of the fruitful Grand Junction Region. Trout streams invite you on every hand, and deer look out of the Great National Forests—of which there are seventeen—and you begin to realize that you are in a land that is indeed a veritable paradise.

Of course, the Royal Gorge is the most outstanding and most popular known place in Colorado, and must always be counted one of nature's wondrous masterpieces. The scenery in the Grand Canyon of the Arkansas is of the weird, massive type, but beyond Canyon City the valley narrows until it seems as if the granite walls must stop further progress of the train. In fact, so narrow does the gorge become that only by a marvel of engineering enterprise did the railway company accomplish the seeminly impossible, for at one point the chasm closes until it is but thirty feet from wall to wall. There is not even room here for the railroad tracks along either wall, but the engineers built a hanging bridge, suspending it above the foaming Arkansas, not transversely but longitudinally. Thus almost touching the walls of the canyon, the trains pass, with the noise of their coming and going all but drowned in the roar of the torrent beneath the bridge. On either side at this point the cliffs tower 2,600 feet, and even at mid-day the stars may be seen shining down into the canyon.

It is easy to say that the Royal Gorge is a titanic cleft in the mountains made by the Arkansas River in gaining the plans; but what forces wrought it no one knows; what centuries it has stood in all its grim impenetrable silence no one knows; and while its length and its breadth and its height can be measured in feet and inches, yet these measurements leave a strange weird chain of thought in their wake. Words cannot describe it, and thousands of tourists each year make the trip and come back spellbound with wonder and appreciation.

Arriving at Canon City about 1:30 p. m., we will leave our train and by special autos take the famuos Sky Line Drive, over one of the most remarkable highways in the world. Back of Canon City runs a sharp rocky ridge of limestone. In former years it was so sharp a man could not walk on it. Convicts, working on honor, have widened this to a twenty-foot roadway. Both sides are almost perpendicular, and as you ride along, on one side you gaze down upon a beautiful orchard town, while on the other you look down into a deep red mountain valley and across the hills of Royal Gorge Park. This drive takes us through the fruit district of Canon City, to the top of the famous Royal Gorge. There we view one of the wonders of nature, looking down 3,000 feet into the gorge below to behold the wonders of nature. Then we are off over the Sky Line Drive and up to the famous Phantom Cauon, into aud through the famous Cripple Creek Gold Mining Camps, which have produced $500,000,000 in gold. We will return down the famous Ute Pass Canon, through Green Mountain Falls, Cascade, and Manitou, to Colorado Springs.

This auto ride will be one of our most delightful trips. Sometimes we will be far up the mountain side, sometimes by a little clear brook at its base, sometimes in the forest, and sometimes on the edge of a brink, but always seeing the mountains in their changing moods and wonderful play of colors; always hearing the music of the trees and streams; always feeling the great mysteries of nature that cast their spell upon you as you travel through the majestic Rockies.

Truly, the Colorado Mountains are one of the world's wonder trips, where scenic panorama after each panorama, each seemingly surpassing the last, unfurls itself. As we look upon the towering peaks, awe-inspiring and gorgeous, and occasionally catch a glimpse of the restful valleys, again and again from out of our hearts will come the words of the Psalmist: "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hast formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God."

In including Colorado in our sightseeing for the special train of delegates to the World Sunday School Convention, Los Angeles, July 11-18, we have sought to make our people of Louisiana and Mississippi acquainted with that wonderful region of America that is without a peer in this country or abroad.

(To Be Continued.)

THE CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The fifty-eighth session of the Corinth District Conference convened at South Side, Corinth, May 8. About 110 members were registered as attendants, sixty-five of whom were lay delegates.

The pastors of the city, Revs. B. F. Bullard and A. T. McIlwain, with their people and committees, provided delightful entertainment for all attendants on the conference. The good ladies of South Side served a bountiful dinner in picnic style each day the conference was in session, thus adding to the social fellowship of the occasiou and serving as a time-saver in expediting business.

Our presiding elder, E. H. Cunningham, piloted the business of the conference in such a way as to command the respect and esteem of all. He has so endeared himself to the pastors and membership of the district by his wise and considerate supervision that the enclosed resolutions, offered by Brother Hardy Rees, of Booneville, were unanimously passed. Then, to express their appreciation more fully, the members of the conference presented him with a handsome gold watch, the speech of presentation being made by that faithful and yet "young" old-timer, S. S. Finger, of Ripley.

Three gospel messages were brought to the attendants on the conference by Revs. J. T. Gullett, of Booneville; T. H. Dorsey, of New Albany, and H. P. Lewis, of Ripley.

Rev. A. T. McIlwain, assisted by Mayor J. A. Loew, presented well the Superannuate Endowment cause, and the sentiment of the conference is to pay in full the quota still due from the district.

Dr. J. R. Countiss laid before the conference the cause of the endowment of Grenada College, and the Annual Confrence plan for endowment was endorsed by a vote of 46 to 1. Some did not vote.

J. G. Houston presented well the needs of Millsaps College in its physical plant.

Every interest of the church was well looked after by various committees. The pastors' reports indicated progress, hopefulness, and harmony throughout the district.

Roy Arnold Grisham, a graduate of Millsaps College, was recommended for admission to the Annual Conference.

W. L. Swett was chosen District Lay Leader, with Judge T. E. Pegram and W. T. Rogers as associate lay leaders.

The delegates elected to Annual Conference are: S. S. Finger, D. H. Hall, W. L. Swett, S. H. Allen, J. C. Jourdan, J. B. Reynolds, J. G. Houston, T. E. Pegram, F. B. Smith, W. R. McCormack, F. B. Roper, J. B. Thompson, Rev. J. T. Gullett, Mmes. E. H. Cunningham, M. H. Weed, N. N. Maxey, and Miss Tryphena Rogers.

Alternates are: Walter Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Rankin, Mrs. H. P. Lewis, L. W. Worsham, R. F. Worsham, W. H. Fairless, and Mrs. A. T. McIlwain.

The 1929 session of the district conference will be held at New Albany.

We regretted very much to know through a telegram that the editor of the Advocate was not able to be with us.

The following resolution was finally passed, after much discussion, with a unanimous vote:

"Resolved, That this conference go on record as opposed to the nomination of any man for presidency of the United States by the Democratic Convention who is opposed to the strict enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and all prohibition laws made by Congress carrying out the provisions of the same."

The idea was expressed over and over by those attending the conference that this was one of the most delightful sessions in spirit and fellowship ever held.

H. P. LEWIS, Secretary.

Resolutions Passed by the Corinth District Conference in re E. H. Cunningham, Presiding Elder.

Whereas, this is the fourth year of service of Rev. E. H. Cunningham, our presiding elder, in this the Corinth District; and,

Whereas, his preaching and fellowship as well as his administration of the affairs of the district have been of the most gratifying character, and by these means he has endeared himself very closely to the membership of the entire district and caused the district to progress along all lines; be it resolved:

1. That we tender him our heartfelt thanks and appreciation for his self-sacrificing labors among us, and that we shall ever cherish the most pleasant memories of our Christian fellowship together.

2. That we pray the blessings of God to attend him wherever his lot may fall in the future, and that he may be long permitted to serve in the Master's employ.

3. That we include in these resolutions our high esteem of the good wife, who has been a most effectual helper to him in accomplishing what he has, and who has kept watch over the home in his absence, and we pray God's blessings on her.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this conference, and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Prepared and offered by H. W. Rees.

The Central Church of Sao Paulo, Brazil, the Rev. Michael Dickie, pastor, is supporting this year as part of its missionary effort two native Brazilian pastors for smaller churches. This Central church has 600 members and is the largest Methodist church in this big city of 900,000 people.

Althought work at Soochow Hospital, China, was not entirely normal during the year 1927, the records show 12,506 treatments given in the clinic, 628 patients admitted to the hospital, 188 operations performed, 76,914 meals served from the kitchen, and 114,317 pieces washed in the laundry.

THE SMILE BOX.

If I knew the box where the smiles are kept
No matter how large the key
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard—
'Twould open, I know, for me.
Then, over the land and the sea, broadcast
I'd scatter the smiles to play,
So that careworn people might hold them fast
For many and many a day.

If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet
I would like to gather them, every one,
From nursery, school and street;
Then, folding and holding, I'd pack them in,
And, turning the monster key,
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depths of the deep, deep sea.

AUNT JENNY'S TAFFY PULL.

"Aunt Jenny will have a taffy pull! A taffy pull! A taffy pull!" sang little Elizabeth Murray, dancing up and down until all her curls bobbed.

"Elizabeth! Elizabeth!" said her mother gently, "remember you are a little lady."

Elizabeth smoothed out her skirts and walked demurely out to her cousin's next door, to spread the glad tidings about Aunt Jennie's taffy pull.

"The barrel of molasses is empty at last," she told Cousin Joshua. "There are three buckets of molasses sugar in the bottom of Aunt Jennie's molasses barrel. She's going to have a taffy pull."

Joshua Miller, Elizabeth's cousin, was just her own age, but he was a boy and could shout when he was happy; so he shouted at the top of his lungs and tossed up his cap, and his little brother, James, who was five and still in pettlcoats, shouted, too. Then Elizabeth picked up her skirts, so her pantelettes showed where the ruffle was buttoned on, and she did a little dance of her invention.

"I've got a three-cent piece," said Joshua. "Let's go over to Mrs. Jones' store and buy a putty pan of taffy now!"

"No," said Elizabeth, "let's wait for Aunt Jennie's taffy."

Aunt Jennie lived in a neat frame house on Hamilton Street, and her house was full of attractions. There was a spinet to play on and Aunt Jennie was always quilting. Under the quilting frame the children liked to crawl and play house or Indian.

Of course, Indians were not as common as they had been when Aunt Jennie was a girl, but now and then a redskin appeared. The days of the Indian raids were not so far distant in the past that the children and older people stopped and listened at every strange sound after dark.

Still it was really quite safe, every one thought, for had there been any doubt, Aunt Jennie would not have gone to help Mrs. Tabitha Forey with her quilting on the very night of the taffy pull.

Elizabeth and Joshua had invited several neighbors' children, and they had all gathered in the old-fashioned kitchen. Aunt Jennie boiled down the molasses sugar for them and spread it on plates to cool. Then with many words of advice and requests not to muss up the place, she put on her shawl and went over to the Foreys'.

My! that taffy was a long time getting cool enough to pull! Lottie Almes, who was seven and taking lessons on the spinet, slipped away to the parlor and began to practice a little. She was just learning a new piece and she softly played what she remembered of it. The parlor was dark, but there was a patch of moonlight on the carpet. At first she wasn't a bit afraid, then she began to have creeps up and down her spine. She felt that somebody was behind her, looking at her.

You know what a scary feeling that is! She wanted to look around, and yet she didn't like to. She went on playing. Then suddenly she wheeled around and faced the window through which the moonlight was pouring.

Well, you should have seen her face then! For just as she wheeled about something ducked down from the window. It was something black and round. Lottie had only a glimpse of it, but you know how quick the eye is. In just that half of a second she saw that the thing had been somebody's head. Somebody had been looking at her!

She could not scream, she was too scared, but with quick, silent steps, she slid out of the room and rushed to the kitchen. The other children were all there, Elizabeth poking a pan of taffy with her finger to see if it were cool enough to pull.

"Sh-sh!" cautioned Lottie. "There's somebody outside! I saw him."

Her voice and expression, more than her words, frightened the others stiff. The little ones ran and got under the quilting frame by the window, the rest gathered in a knot about Lottie.

"What did he look like?" asked John, who was the oldest.

"A—a Indian!" whispered Lottie in a fearful tone.

John looked around at Joshua and Dan and James, the other boys. He asked if Aunt Jennie had a gun. Joshua pointed to an old-fashioned shotgun standing in the corner by the door. It wasn't loaded, though, and they didn't know where to look for the powder and shot. The boys began to look, and presently Joshua found a powder horn and a bag of lead shot. They then loaded the gun.

"But you musn't shoot until you are sure who it is," said Elizabeth. "S'pose it wasn't an Indian. S'pose it was somebody like Uncle Ben."

Uncle Ben was an old black slave belonging to the Foreys, and while he was getting old and queer in the head, he was kind to the children and told them stories.

John hesitated a moment. Then he said bravely: "Who will go out with me and scout?"

Joshua and Dan said they both would, but John only took Dan, because he was older than Joshua and was in the same class at school.

The boys crept cautiously into the darkened parlor, and keeping in the shadow, they went to the window. Nothing was in sight, so they slipped out of the window and stood a while outside in the dark shadow of the house listening.

Suddenly they saw a form cross the moonlight space around the side of the house. John pointed the gun in that direction and shouted, "Halt, or I'll fire!"

The figure seemed to melt away into the shadow. John whispered to Dan, "Jump back under the porch—when I fire." Because he knew that when he fired the lurking person would know where they were.

Then he raised the old gun and fired. He had meant to dodge back, too, but the gun attended to that for him. It kicked so hard that the boy was thrown down.

In an instant a voice called, "No shoot!" and out into the moonlight came a tall figure with hands raised.

John quickly scrambled to his feet. "Open the door!" he called, and Joshua, waiting tensely at the front door, threw it open. John then said: "March along in, you! and don't dare to put down your hands."

Luckily his prisoner did not know that there was only one gun and that one empty. He marched in and John marched him into the lighted kitchen. Then you should have seen the children stare! He was an Indian all right, with long black hair and buckskin clothes. He looked around at the children, and at John standing sternly with the gun. Then he began to sniff the air.

"Yum! Yum!" he grunted. He crossed over to the pans of taffy and sniffed. Elizabeth didn't think he looked dangerous.

"Let's let him stay and pull!" she cried.

The taffy was ready; the Indian smiled. They showed him how to pull the stuff, and soon they were all at it, except John, who sat in a corner loading the old gun.

It was thus Aunt Jennie and Mrs. Forey found them. The Indian proved to be friendly, just traveling through to visit relatives in a reservation twelve miles away. He ate the taffy with great relish and made friends with every one, in his odd way, all except John, who held his gun in readiness and scowled, and was heard to remark that the only good Indian was a dead Indian.—Selected.

"I THOUGHT I MIGHT BE AS LUCKY."

"You asked to speak with me," said Janet McKay, a Near East Relief worker, to a man who waited at the door of the orphanage in Russian-Armenia.

"Yes," replied the man, "won't you be good enough to help me?"

"What would you like to have me do?" inquired the relief worker.

"I want you to help me find a wife from the graduates of your orphanage," continued the man a little bashfully.

"Where are you from?" inquired Miss McKay.

The visitor gave the name of the district from which he came.

"Why, that is many days' journey from here?" remarked Miss McKay in surprise. "Why did you come so far? Are there no young women in your district?"

"Yes, there are young women there," replied the man, "but they are not like the girls you have trained. You see, a year and a half ago, a young man from my neighborhood came here to see a cousin who helps take care of the girls in the orphanage. He became acquainted with one of your girls and took her back as his wife. She is the best housekeeper in all the country roundabout. Her home is attractive, the food well cooked, and now there is a baby in the home and she knows all about how to take care of that baby and keep it well and happy. She is just a wonder, and I thought if I came and asked you to help me find a wife, I might be as lucky."—Near East Relief Bulletin.

A FELLOW'S MOTHER.

"A fellow's mother," said Fred the wise,
With his rosy cheeks and merry eyes,
"Knows what to do if a fellow gets hurt
By a thump or a bruise or a fall in the dirt.

"A fellow's mother has rags and strings,
Bags and buttons and lots of things;
No matter how busy she is, she'll stop
To see how well you can spin your top.

"She does not care—not much I mean—
if a fellow's face is not quite clean;
And if your trousers are torn at the knee,
She can put in a patch you'd never see.

"A fellow's mother is never mad,
And only sorry if you are bad;
And I'll tell you this, if you're only true,
She'll always forgive you, whatever you do.

"A fellow's mean who would never try
To keep the tears from her loving eye;
And the fellow's worse who sees it not
That his mother's the truest friend he's got."

—Margaret Sangster, in Exchange.

The kindergarten building, put up as part of the church work at Toyonaka, Japan, was paid for entirely by the people of Toyonaka, not one cent of missionary money having gone into it. From the first the kindergarten has been self-supporting. The teachers accept as salary whatever income may come in from tuitions. The kindergarten was first carried on in the church itself, but moved recently into the new building, which was built at a cost of $3,000.

THE STANDARD TRAINING SCHOOL AT GRENADA.

While we were in North Mississippi last week, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Conference Sunday School Superintendent, handed us a folder describing the Standard Training School to be held at Grenada College, June 4-9. The bill of fare is most appealing, and the cost is insignificant—seven dollars covers, we believe, all the necessary expenses at Grenada. Those who attend are expected to provide their own towels and bed linen. It means some real work to take credit at a Standard Training School; but work ought not to be so hard under such pleasant surroundings as are found at Grenada, and the result of the work makes it worth more than it costs. We hope this will be a great school, both in attendance and in results obtained.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We thank Rev. W. O. Hunt, Vaiden, Miss., for a list of eleven subscriptions recently sent in.

"I have been reading the Advocate for forty years and appreciate it," says Mrs. R. P. Goar, of Pittsboro, Miss., in renewing her subscription.

Rev. Guy Ray, Caledonia, Miss., recently sent in a list of four subscriptions to the Advocate, for which we thank him.

Rev. J. H. Felts, our pastor at Greenwood, Miss., has our thanks for a list of thirteen subscriptions recently sent in.

Dr. J. B. Mitchell, pastor of Rayne Memorial, this city, preached the commencement sermon at Houma, La., last Sunday.

Bishop Warren A. Candler authorizes the Advocate to announce that he has appointed Rev. H. G. Hawkins as presiding elder of the Meridian District, to succeed the late Rev. Robert Selby.

Rev. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, in a telegram dated May 21, states that Rev. H. W. Bowman is critically ill in a hospital at Mansfield, La. Brother Bowman is pastor of our church at Oakdale.

We learn with sorrow that Rev. Algie S. Oliver and little son have been seriously ill with measles recently. Brother Oliver is our pastor at Decatur, Miss. We join his many friends in prayer for a complete and early recovery.

The work on the Haughton and Doyline charge, Louisiana Conference, is moving along splendidly. The prayer meeting attendance runs around forty, or more, and there are fine Missionary Societies. Rev. E. W. Day is the pastor.

We thank our young friend, Benjamin Harrell, for an invitation to attend the graduating exercises of the Central High School, Jackson, Miss., on June 1, and congratulate him upon the completion of his high school course.

We regret to learn that Mrs. A. L. Jones, of Picayune, Miss., a sister of Rev. W. J. Ferguson, of Hattiesburg, is ill in the Touro Infirmary, this city. We are sure many prayers will be made for her recovery.

Rev. E. Nash Broyles delivered the memorial address at Aberdeen, Miss., on April 22, under the auspices of the R. E. Lee Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy. The address is given in full in the Aberdeen Examiner of May 4.

Mr. John A. Farmer, who has recently assisted Rev. Claude P. Jones in his evangelistic meetings and Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder of the Seashore District, in a tent meeting in North Gulfport, is open for engagements from now until July 1. His address is Box 113, Forest, Miss.

Dr. Elmer T. Clark, of Nashville, Tenn., spent last Saturday and Sunday in New Orleans. Rev. J. G. Snelling had several of the brethren to meet him at lunch on Saturday, including Dr. R. H. Harper, Rev. J. B. Peters, and the editor of the Advocate.

The book, "Alluring Arizona," by Dr. W. H. Nelson, editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, is a most interesting volume. Dr. Nelson has the ability to see things and to tell about them in an interesting way. The book costs $1.50, and it may be ordered of the author, 307 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Calif.

The book, "Francis Asbury," by Dr. W. L. Duren, formerly of the North Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, but now pastor of St. Mark, Atlanta, Ga., will be published by the Macmillan Company this fall, being put on the market by Oct. 1. This is a book that ought to have—and we believe it will have—a wide reading.

Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference, authorizes the Advocate to annnunce that Rev. D. C. Bennett, pastor of the Pine Grove circuit, has been forced to give up his work on account of failing health, and that Bishop Candler has appointed Rev. Malcolm C. Walden, of Wilmore, Ky., to fill out the unexpired term.

Rev. Jay Coburn, son of Rev. J. A. Coburn of Ponchatoula, La., died following an operation at the Baptist Hospital, this city, on Saturday of last week. Brother Coburn was supplying the Carrier charge, Mississippi Conference. The announcement of his death brought sorrow to his many friends and relatives. The Advocate joins in extending sincere sympathy to his sorrowing loved ones.

Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux writes from Houma, La., under date of May 21: "The work on Bayou Blue charge is moving on slowly but surely. Mrs. Thibadeaux has just undergone a very serious operation at Dr. Parker's Hospital at Houma, La. She is doing fine. We ask the prayers of the Christian friends for her."

Rev. James T. Harris, our pastor at Rochelle, La., writes: "We have just closed a most successful revival here. Rev. P. M. Caraway did the preaching and brought us powerful messages at each service. God graciously blessed our efforts, and twelve people were added to the church on profession of faith. Our work moves along well in every way."

The attendance at the Glendora Sunday school on the Minter City charge, North Mississippi Conference, was the largest in its history on May 12, the attendance lacking only three of equaling the total enrollment. The enrollment is almost twice the church membership. Mrs. W. R. Gay is the superintendent, and Rev. A. Y. Brown is the pastor. A fine revival meeting was recently held at Glendora by Rev. J. V. Bennett.

The New Orleans Epworth League Union will give a program of tableaux and a pageant at Rayne Memorial Educational Building on Friday evening in the interest of the Superannuate Endowment movement. As we understand it, no admission will be charged and no collection will be taken, the purpose being to arouse interest in this great cause. The program will begin at 8 o'clock. A great attendance is expected.

Rev. I. H. Sells, our pastor at Louise, Miss., writes under date of May 18: "We are having our opening service in our new church at Louise next Sunday evening. We have completed this church at a cost of a little less than $12,000. Our building is well adapted to meet the needs of this community for a number of years, and in appearance it would do credit to a much larger place and wealthier people than we have here. We hope to send you a cut of it soon. Our people have recuperated from the effects of the flood of last year in a remarkable manner, and are making every effort to care for the church and the interests of the kingdom of God."

Under date of May 18, Rev. A. Joe Beasley writes: "Here is the record for the attendance at the Pearlington Sunday school, Logtown charge, for last Sunday morning, May 13, 1928: Every teacher, every officer, every pupil, and seventeen visitors present. This really occurred without a special effort being made on the part of any one. Surely the kingdom is coming in. I am happy. I have attended some Sunday school since a child; I have taught school fifteen years, attending Sunday school wherever I taught; and I have been pastor for a number of years, but this is the first time I have experienced a record like this. I challenge the Sunday schools, large or small, of the Mississippi Conference for a record like this. I am serving a choice people."

THE TENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF FINANCE.

By Luther E. Todd, Secretary.

The annual meeting of the Board of Finance convened at the Missouri Athletic Club, room 1, St. Louis, Mo., on May 1, 1928. The following members were present:

Bishop W. F. McMurry, Senator X. P. Wilfley, Rev. Luther E. Todd, Mr. John W. Fristoe, Rev. C. W. Tadlock, Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, Bishop

S. R. Hay, Rev. R. A. Clark, Rev. Frank P. Culver, Rev. D. F. Ellisor, Rev. W. A. Cooper, Rev. T. S. Hamilton, Rev. J. T. Leggett, Rev. James Kilgore, Rev. S. P. Cresap, Mr. Addison Maupin, Mr. J. R. Dominick, Mr. J. T. Catlin, Jr., Mr. W. Stackhouse, Mr. W. E. Brock, Mr. W. G. Hardy.

Bishop W. N. Ainsworth was unable to be present on account of the illness to his wife; Rev. H. E. Draper was absent on account of having to preach the funeral of a member of his church, and Mr. R. P. Brewer and Governor G. W. Donaghey could not attend on account of pressing business matters which developed unexpectedly.

The Board was deeply grateful that the year had passed without a death in its ranks, and also without any serious sickness of any of its members.

This annual meeting was the tenth since the organization of the Board. The secretary's report revealed a vast volume of business and a number of other things necessary for the Board to review and decide upon. The twenty-one members present got right down to business without delay, and everything had full consideration of the Board, and all the business was attended to in one day.

I.—CONCERNING MATTERS OF FINANCE.

1—Superannuate Endowment.

It was shown that the total Superannuate Endowment in the hands of the Board as of March 31, 1928, was $4,901,379.11 as compared with $4,153,222.06 a year ago—a gain for the year of $748,157.05. Of this $4,901,379.11 Superannuate Endowment in hand at March 31, 1928, $3,110,583.85 is in the General Fund and $1,790,795.26 is in the Conference Funds handled by the Board. Of the total endowment in the hands of the Board, as stated above, the sum of $386,385.83 is subject to annuity.

2—Endowment Income.

For the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1928, the Board was able to earn 5.78 per cent on the total endowment capital for the time it was in hand. This compares with 5.8 per cent for the previous year.

On July 1, 1928, the Board will be able to distribute direct to the claimants, on the basis of years of service, and from the income of the General Fund, the sum of $155,031.65, as compared with $141,551.38 so distributed a year ago, or July 1, 1927.

The Board will also be able to send to the Annual Conferences at their next meetings, for distribution among their claimants, on the basis of necessity, the sum of $96,015.64, as compared with $76,123.48 sent to the Annual Conferences at their last annual meetings.

Thus the Board is distributing this year for the claimants' support a grand total of $251,047.29, as compared with the grand total distribution a year ago of $217,674.86—an increase for this year of $33,372.43.

3—Annual Conference Endowment.

So far as the Board has been able to obtain information on the subject, the Annual Conferences now have a total endowment of $4,156.620. Of this sum, $546,400 represents the reported value of 144 superannuate homes owned by the Conferences; $1,819,425 is in various securities handled by local trustees of the Conferences, and $1,790,795 in trust with the General Board of Finance.

The earnings of the Publishing House, the net income from which should go to the Annual Conferences yearly for the support of the claimants, is not included in the figures given above. Furthermore, it is doubtless true that the Annual Conferences have some other assets equivalent to endowments which the Board is not able to report for lack of definite information concerning these holdings.

4—The Investment Reserve Fund.

The Board is striving to build up a reserve fund out of concessions of a fractional per cent allowed to institutions such as ours in the purchase of securities. This reserve fund will be used as necessity may arise to protect the endowment capital against any losses which may come from investments that do not work out as expected. This fund was started April 20, 1924, and it has grown steadily. At the close of the fiscal year, which ended March 31, 1928, it amounted to a total of $32,181.49. The Board hopes that this fund will increase from year to year until it is sufficient in amount to guarantee the endowment capital 100 per cent.

5—Superannuate Endowment Bequests.

The secretary's report revealed that the Board has evidence in its files of bequests that have been made to Superannuate Endowment amounting to an estimated total value of more than $500,000. This item is not included in the report given hereinabove of the total endowment actually in hand. It is, however, an item of interest. Furthermore, it should be noted that these bequests are those which the Board has knowledge of. It is undoubtedly true that a great many other bequests have been made to this sacred cause which have not yet been reported to the Board.

In this connection, it should be stated that there was received during the past year from bequests, as follows: From the estate of Mr. J. J. Good, deceased, formerly of Blountsville, Ala., $459; from the estate of Miss Carrie Arrington, deceased, formerly of Springfield, Mo., $3,000; from the estate of Dr. W. W. Greer, deceased, formerly of Cameron, Tex., $2,400; from the estate of Mrs. Eula D. Hall, deceased, formerly of Selma, Ala., $1,500; from the estate of Mrs. T. L. Moody, deceased, formerly of Nashville, Tenn., $100; from the estate of Mr. Paul Brown, deceased, formerly of St. Louis, Mo., $100,000—a grand total of $107,459. This total sum received from bequests is included in the report of endowment assets as given hereinabove.

ANNUITY BONDS

They provide an income that will not shrink.

It is possible by this means to create a trust fund which will provide an annual income for yourself, or some loved one during their lifetime, and which will go eventually into a fundamental, world-wide, Christian program.

When writing for information please give your age. THIS IS IMPORTANT!

6—Contributions on the Annuity Plan.

It is gratifying to report that during the year the Board received $9,010 from contributions on the annuity plan. This sum, added to that formerly received on this plan for the endowment, makes a total now in hand of $386,385.83 subject to annuity. The annuity bond of the Board of Finance appeals strongly to those who wish to contribute to a worthy cause in this way. The entire resources of the Board are back of these bonds, thus making them an absolutely safe investment.

7—Collections on the General Conference Assessment.

The Board has a General Confernece annual assessment of $191,000 on the whole church. Of this amount there was collected during the fiscal year which closed March 31, 1928, a total of $133,554.66.

8—The Total Support of the Claimants.

The secretary reported that there are now 2,573 claimants, 1,090 being superannuates and 1,483 being widows of preachers. The total amount paid these claimants from all sources during the year which closed March 31, 1928, was $857,128. The average per capita amount for the superannuates for the year just closed was $428, as compared with $372 a year ago and $186 when the Board was organized, and the average per capita amount paid to the widows of preachers for the year just closed was $264, as compared with $233 a year ago and $97 when the Board was organized.

9—Expenses of the Board.

The expenses of the Board proper for the year ended March 31, 1928, amounted to $28,520.62.

The expenses for the year of the Special Effort Department of the Board amounted to $59,667.94. A considerable portion of this expense was due to the clean-up campaign to raise the Superannuate Endowment quota balances of the charges.

II. CONCERNING THE SPECIAL EFFORT FOR SUPERANNUATE ENDOWMENT.

The secretary's report brought to light many interesting facts concerning this movement, as follows:

1—Status of the Conferences on Quota Payments.

It was revealed that in four years, or March 31, 1928, all of the Annual Conferences had paid on Special Effort quotas the total sum of $3,335,814.71. The Florida Conference has the distinction of being first in the per cent paid of the total five-year quota, having paid 51.4 per cent; the West Texas Conference is second, having paid 42.5 per cent of its five-year quota, and the Southwest Missouri Conference is third, having paid 40.9 per cent of its five-year quota. The entire table showing the standing of the Conferences on quota payments will be published at an early date in the Christian Advocate.

2—Comparative Study of the Charges on Quota Payments.

It was shown that at the close of the fiscal year, March 31, 1928, seventy charges of the whole church had paid the five-year quota in full (at this writing, May 3, 1928, there are ninety charges which have done this good thing).

The secretary's report also revealed something not so pleasing, namley, that 1,747 charges of the whole church have each paid less than $100 on the five-year quota. Even worse than this, it was shown that 592 charges of the church had each paid nothing on the five-year quota.

3—Future Plans for the Special Effort Movement.

The Board decided to continue the clean-up campaign to raise the charges' quota balances until the next meeting of the General Conference. A committee of three, consisting of Bishop W. F. McMurry, Dr. C. W. Tadlock and Dr. Luther E. Todd, was appointed to consider what action the Board should request the next General Conference to take concerning Superannuate Endowment during the quadrennium of 1930-1934. This committee will report its findings to the annual meeting of the Board in the spring of 1929.

4—Present Outlook of the Clean-Up Campaign.

The secretary reported to the annual meeting of the Board that the movement now current to raise the charges' Superannuate Endowment quota balances is going forward with much promise of success. The Conference directors of Superannuate Endowment are reporting most hopefully concerning the outlook. Whatever happens, it can never be said that the Board of Finance has failed to do everything in its power for the promotion of this sacred cause committed to its care.

IN MEMORY OF MARSHALL EDWIN GOODWIN (Acrostic).

By Dr. S. J. Smith.

Much to our regret he is gone,
Aithough he is at the Master's throne.
Real worth was he, daiiy on earth,
Showing great kindness from birth;
Heaven is open to sucb as he,
Alluring him there ever to be.
Loving kindness was his down here,
Looking to God in daily prayer.

Each day, did he duty perform—
Doing this always witbout alarm,
Willing to do earthly things fair,
In every way he dld them with care,
Nearing the end with earnest prayer.

God is good, and dearly ioves his own,
Over and again he this soul condoned.
Over the rugged roads traveled he,
Doing his portion always for thee—
Working for the Master over there,
It was his aim, always to make things clear—
New thoughts came to him in daily prayer.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. ZABLE.

To her loved ones: With deepest sympathy the members of the Women's Bible Ciass of Rayne Memorial Church convey to you their condolence in the ioss of your dear, beloved, esteemed grandmother, Mrs. Zable.

She was a Christian lady, the hlghest tribute paid to cultured womanhood; her lofty ideals, both spiritual and social, were maintained always, and shall be as a becon light to beckon those who knew her best to foilow in her footsteps along the pathway that she traveled all these fruitful years.

"To gild refined gold, to paint the liiy, to throw a perfume on the violet is wasteful and excessive;" so is penning a word picture of dear Mrs. Zable. In her exemplary life, which she lived so close to the Master, whom she ioved so dearly and faithfully in her age, she so dearly and served so devoutly and actively in her youth, so sacredly and faithfully in her age, she leaves you heirs to a heritage more costly tban rubies.

"The purest treasure mortal times afford is spotless reputation," and this was hers in thought and executed as deeds.

As a member of the church, a teacher in the Sunday schooi, and a member of the Missionary Society, sbe was a testimonial of ail tbe attributes which warranted her a banner carrier of the high ideals of true Methodism; and ever thus she said, "Lord, let me not in service lag."

You shall have guidance and comfort in the "Good Book" and in prayer, which have power alone to assuage grief such as yours.

We commend you to tbe Heaveniy Father and his Omnipotence in this, your hour of sadness, and may you find soiace in knowing that "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," and, "Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is her reward in Heaven."

With iove and sympathy from the Women's Bible Class, Rayne Memorial Church.

New Orieans, May 1.

ELLEN ARMETIA DEWESE was born Oct. 11, 1866, and dled Jan. 22, 1928. She was married to A. A. Nicholson in 1887. To this union there were born elght children. Three of them died in infancy. She joined the Methodist Church when a child, at Mars Hill church; thus we see she had been a member of the church more than one haif century. As a member of her church she was loyai to ail its institutions. She was a great believer in prayer, had family prayer in her home every day. The last week of her iife she spent one hour each day in secret prayer, according to the statement of her husband. Some people are looking for something they can see and understand by sight, but Sister Nicholson walked by faith. She was at her piace in the church Sunday a.m. and died suddenly that p.m. May her loved ones ever be faitbful. She cannot come to us, but we can go to her.

RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society, Aiilgator, Miss.)

Again the sickie of deatb has severed the brittie thread of life and bas taken from us one of our friends and co-workers, Mrs. Lana Dunn Nichols.

Resolved, 1. That we thank our Heavenly Father for the association of this life, and for her character, which will always be a source of inspiration to her loved ones and friends. She bore her sickness with patience, always looking to God for help and strength and was comforted by the thought, "God wiii take care of me."

2. That we, the Church, Sunday school and Missionary Society, humbly bow in submission to Him who doeth ali things well.

3. That we extend our sympathy to the broken-hearted loved ones, pointing them to Him who will comfort in this dark bour. May they say as David of old, "Tbe Lord gaveth, the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our church paper, one to the family, and same be spread on the minutes of the Woman's Missionary Society.

Signed: Mrs. C. H. McCrain, Mrs. P. W. Smith, Mrs. E. P. Howell, Committee.

ELIZA JANE HESTER was born October 28, 1845; died March 4, 1928. She joined the Methodist Church at the age of eight years. She was married to Frances Marion Hester in 1866. To this union there were born nine children, two of them having preceded her to the grave. We see from the above that she had been a member of the church seventy-five years. She was ever loyal to her Lord and His church. When she lived on the large country circuit, her home was always the home of the Methodist preacher as he traveled his work. She was a faithful and thoughtful companion to her husband. She verily gave her life for the welfare of her children. Truly, they can rise up and call her blessed. To the family, we bid you look to the Christ she served, and we shall meet again on the other shore.

Her Pastor,
R. H. CLEGG.

EACH DAY AND ALL IT HAS.

Let us offer up to him each day, and all its occupations, yes, and all its relaxations—as it begins—and beg him to let us somehow "see" him throughout it. Let us trust him with the hallowing of our ordinary "secular" interests, let us try to shape each day's life so as best to please him. "Would our Lord like me to say this or to read that? Would he sanction this train of thought or of fancy? When I go with that companion, can I imagine his drawing near and walking beside us?" This habitual "looking up to Jesus," this repeated reference to his will and pleasure—does it seem to us likely to be oppressive, restrictive, burdensome? Let us only try it, and judge for ourselves: it will turn out to be a source of peace and comfort indescribable.—William Bright.

SARDIST DISTRICT MEETING.

The Sardis District meeting of the Woman's Missionary Council was held here May 4, in the Methodist Church. The visitors were cordially welcomed by members of the Byhalia Society. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion, in spring flowers and ferns.

The meeting was called to order at 9:30 o'clock in the morning by the District Secretary, Mrs. R. M. Short, of Como.

Following this the devotional exercises were conducted by Miss Davis, of Horn Lake, after which the roll was called; twenty-three auxiliaries responded, including Young People's and Juniors. One new Epworth Junior, one Young People and one Adult auxiliaries were added to the Jubilee list.

The auxiliaries of Red Banks, Horn Lake and Arkabutia had a splendid representation, as a number of other auxiliaries.

Miss Juanita Brown, Superintendent of the Young People, explained the plan for the correlation of Epworth League and Young People's work.

Miss Gladys Wilson, rural field worker, was next introduced, and made a very inspiring talk. After an abundant and most appetizing lunch, which was served in the new Sunday school annex of the church by the Byhalia auxiliaries, the conference convened at 1 o'clock.

Mrs. C. L. Graham gave an instructive talk on the very vital question of prohibition, appealing to the women to vote for the man who will uphold the law of the country and put down alcohol in all forms.

It was indeed a pleasure to hear from Miss Myrtie Pollard, our missionary from Mexico, who gave a most interesting talk on her work there. Two musical numbers were given by young ladies of the Byhalia Young People. Victoria and Horn Lake extended invitations to the conference for next year, Horn Lake getting the majority of votes.

UNION MEETING AT MOUNT OLIVE, MISS.

A delightful union meeting of the societies of the three churches of Mount Olive was held on Monday afternoon, April 30, with the Methodist Society as hostess. It is a custom in Mount Olive to hold these union meetings on Monday following the fifth Sunday.

The hostess committee, Mrs. Carl Calhoun, Mrs. E. D. Worthy, and Mrs. G. W. Smith, welcomed the visitors by serving delicious punch as they arrived. Mrs. W. L. Kelly, president of the W. M. U. of the Baptist church, was invited to preside and to conduct the devotional exercises. For the Scripture lesson she read Mark 16:8-20, calling on Rev. E. L. Story, pastor of the Presbyterian church, to lead in prayer.

A vocal duet, "Ivory Palaces," was feelingly sung by Mrs. J. E. Byrd and Mrs. E. L. Story. A play, "A Missionary Clinic," was the feature of the afternoon. The lesson taught by it was a benediction to all present. The following ladies took part in it and made it a great success: Mrs. A. S. Calhoun, Mrs. John Horton, Mrs. Thad Dixon, Mrs. Fitzhugh Dickson, Mrs. E. L. Story, Mrs. D. G. Calhoun, Mrs. J. L. Carter, Miss Johnnie Rose Gates, Mrs. A. W. Evans, Mrs. W. D. Lowry. After the play an interesting Bible contest was enjoyed. Our own pastor, Rev. J. L. Carter, pronounced the benediction.

The social hour which followed was thoroughly enjoyed by all. The spirit of good fellowship and tempting refreshments combined to make it a most pleasant and profitable afternoon.

The Presbyterian auxiliary will entertain on the next fifth Monday.

SARAH LOU RAWLS,
Secretary.

ZONE MEETING, HATTIESBURG DISTRICT.

Zone four, of the Hattiesburg District, met with the Prentiss Society Monday, April 30, at 2 o'clock.

After a congregational hymn Mrs. Smith read a part of the fifteenth chapter of St. John. Rev. A. J. Davis led the opening prayer. In keeping with the program, "Building Friendship," quotations on friendship were given in answer to roll call.

Mrs. Livingston, of Prentiss, very cordially welcomed the visiting auxiliaries. After another hymn Mrs. A. F. Carraway, of Bassfield, read a splendid paper on "How to Build Friendship in the Church." To build friendship, first of all be a friend. No strife can lead people to church or to Christ. Love alone can do it—true love for each other and for Christ, our Saviour.

At this time we were favored with a vocal solo by the chairman, Mrs. Clyde Smith, of Prentiss. Mrs. Winstead, of Carson, read the beautiful old poem, "Let Me Live in a House by the Side of the Road."

Mrs. W. R. Rawls, of Silver Creek, talked to us about "The Value of Friendship." Any successful life has its friends. We need friends to whom we may take our joys and our sorrows. They make the sorrows lighter and the joys happier. But best of all friendships is the friendship of Jesus. He wants to always be our friend, and if we will but let him life will be successful.

A free-will offering amounting to $3.35 was taken, which will be sent to the two Wesley Houses.

As this was the time to elect new officers the following were chosen to serve during the coming year: Mrs. A. F. Carraway, of Bassfield, president; Mrs. W. W. Gray, of Carson, vice president; Mrs. G. C. Terrell, of Prentiss, secretary; Miss Winnie Thompson, of New Hebron, treasurer.

The Bassfield members were asked to carry the many flowers used for decoration as messages of love and cheer to Mrs. W. W. Applewhite, who is ill and could not attend the meeting.

The midsummer meeting will b eheld as an outdoor meeting at Carson.

A short social hour was enjoyed with the Prentiss Society as hostess.

MRS. W. C. DALE, Secretary.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF SARDIS DISTRICT HOLDS CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of the Sardis District was held at Courtland, May 4.

The meeting convened at 9:30 a. m., with about eighty members in attendance. Devotions were conducted by Mrs. B. K. Burt, of Oakland, after which Mrs. C. L. Graham was elected secretary.

After greetings by Mrs. Pou from hostess auxiliaries, Courtland and Pope, response was made by Mrs. Baker. The roll was called by the secretary, and twenty-three delegates answered, after which Mrs. R. M. Short gave her report, which was very inspirational and encouraging. She placed special emphasis on the organization of Young People and Epworth Juniors. During the session of the conference the courtesy committee brought forward visitors for introductions.

Mrs. Redding was presented a framed picture of Belle Bennett Memorial as a token of appreciation from the Sardis District for her untiring efforts in helping to raise funds to erect this beautiful structure.

The twenty-three delegates reported zealous work being done in each auxiliary for the current year.

Miss Juanita Brown, Young People's leader, brought a wonderful message from the Council, giving gleanings from the spiritual talks made by Miss Conde at the Nashville meeting.

Mrs. Cummins, of Charleston, conducted the quiet hour, taking as her subject "Seed-Sowing," and applying it to our own lives.

A little member of the Pope Juniors gave a reading in a charming manner.

Mrs. O'Bryant introduced to the session Miss Myrtie Pollard, a product of Panola County, Batesville, and Mrs. O'Bryant's Sunday school class.

After a song by the choir, the meeting adjourned, to meet at 1 p. m.

The meeting reassembled after a delightful lunch, and continued the business of the day.

Mrs. Baker, representing the Young People, made a strong plea for trained leaders and co-operation of the mothers.

The zone leaders reported current work, and the importance of this phase of activity in the district was emphasized.

Miss Pollard, missionary to Mexico, who is on furlough, brought to us a great message in a talk on "Signs of Promise."

Mrs. Hogg, of Memphis, made a most

My father always said the 'Golden Medical Discovery' could not be equaled as a blood enricher and to build up one's general health; my mother thought the 'Favorite Prescription' superior to any other tonic a woman could take; I found the 'Pleasant Pellets' a perfect remedy for constipation and biliousness."—Mrs. R. Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

In regard to the Honor Roll for Sunday School Day. This year it is a local Sunday School Honor Roll, that is that the name of each Sunday school meeting the condition of sending 10 cents per pupil enrolled, exclusive of the Home Department and the Cradle Roll, goes on the Honor Roll.

This places all Sunday schools on the same footing and it also prevents a school on a circuit from being kept from the Honor Roll by some other school failing to meet the conditions. The Board at its last meeting felt that this was a good step and so we launch it.

We are trusting that we will have a larger offering from this source this year than we have ever had. We actually need the money and if it comes in as we hope we will be able to have another worker in the field and at the same time meet all bills and do a great deal more work.

Each of you who read this lend a hand that the work may go forward.

A letter from Rev. A. Joe Beasley reports the following from the Pearlington Sunday school: "Every officer, every teacher, every pupil and seventeen visitors present last Sunday."

We may have other Sunday schools with records like this, if so let us hear from you. To my mind this is a mark to shoot at. I hope many will shoot and hit it.

What if all Sunday school workers alone would make an effort to meet these conditions. What a change in the atmosphere it would be in the average Sunday school. Our hat is off to Pearlington and its workers. Go forward.

I do not now remember if I told you what a fine spirited school the Standard Training School at First Church Laurel was. My, it was a good school and all enjoyed it.

The first Standard Training School in the history of Yazoo City was closed Friday night, the 18th of May. We had an enrollment of 42 and 32 credits. School closings and sickness prevented a larger attendance and larger credits. I also should mention that road conditions interfered also. Six Sunday schools were represented.

The Prsebyterians came in with us and furnished one teacher and also a fine group of students. I think their spirit was as fine as any group of people I have known. It was a real pleasure to work with them. Brother Landis, their Superintendent of Religious Education, makes a co-worker indeed.

The spirit of the group was very definite in its request for a school next year. It is to be hoped that we can work to that end.

Our Missionary Offreing is way off from what it ought to be. Please get the offerings to us as soon as possible after they are taken and stress the needs from time to time.

After writing that I do know and wish to emphasize again it is far more important to the church and the good of the people to get a real Missionary Program over to the folks than it is to take the offering and make it large. The two go together.

Read the material being sent and make a real effort to do the work as the church is requesting it to be done. If the people knew, I know they would answer by a greater devotion and enlarged activities for all causes.

Pray earnestly for all the work and the workers. JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Baton Rouge Standard Training School issued sixty-four credits at its recent session, and voted to have a better and larger one, giving more specialization units in 1929. Each member of the faculty gave great satisfaction.

The Minden Training School opens at 2:30 p.m., Sunday, May 27. The instructors for this school are: Mr. C. M. Dannelly, Conference Superintendent, Alabama Conference; Prof. P. J. Rutledge, Hendrix College, Conway, Ark.; Mrs. R. E. Smith, Shreveport, La.; Mrs. R. H. Harper, New Orleans, La.

We went to Oakdale Thursday, May 10, in company with the presiding elder, Dr. Lutz, in the interest of the Standard Training School which is to open June 3. This town has been recently blessed with a great revival at the Methodist church.

We enjoyed our visit at the parsonage, but sorry to report that we found the pastor, Brother Bowman, on the sick list.

Sunday morning, May 13, found us en route from Baton Rouge to Amite in company with the presiding elder, Rev. L. W. Cain. We reached Hammond at 9 a. m., and had a short conference with the pastor, Rev. W. R. Harvell. We reached Amite in time to visit the Sunday school, and found a warm welcome by the superintendent, Mr. E. W. Forshag, and the pastor, Rev. O. L. Tucker. It was public school commencement day in Amite, and we heard a fine sermon at the High School auditorium by Brother Tucker. There were thirty-one seniors, nine boys and twenty-two girls, one of whom was Miss Olive Lee Tucker, the pastor's daughter.

At the noon hour we enjoyed gracious hospitality at the parsonage. Brother and Mrs. Tucker have three fine boys in addition to the member of the senior class, Miss Olive Lee.

In the afternoon, in company with the superintendent, pastor, and other Sunday school leaders of Amite, we routed out to Natalbany for a "Set-up meeting" in the interest of the annual Standard Training School held in the central part of the Baton Rouge District each year. At this meeting we elected Rev. L. W. Cain, chairman of the Board of Managers; Rev. O. L. Tucker, Educational Director; Mrs. Roy Stewart, chairman of the enrollment committee, and Miss Lula Price, chairman of the committee on entertainment. The finance committee is made up of the presiding elder, pastors and superintendents of the cooperating schools. Good interest was shown by all present.

While at Natalbany we visited the parsonage to see the sick daughter of Brother Royal, who had had a stroke of paralysis. We are glad to report she is improving gradually, and we do hope the prayers of the anxious parents will be answered.

Sunday night we preached for our college mate, Brother W. R. Harvell, at Hammond, and enjoyed spending the evening in the parsonage. The attendance at the night service was good. The pastor reported a great service in the morning. We noted on the bulletin board that the attendance at Sunday school was 164.

Mr. I. A. Hearn, new District Secretary of the Monroe District, writes: "We are going to have our first meeting of the new members of the Monroe District at Winnsboro, La., Tuesday, June 5, at 5:30 p. m. We want to set a few goals for our work in this district for the year, and hope that we can do much to advance Sunday school work during the year. We want you to be with us."

Rev. J. W. Faulk, District Superintendent of Adult Work of the Monroe District, writes: "I have been elected District Superintendent of Adult Work and would appreciate very much some help as to formulation of plans for my department of work."

Sunday School Day is being observed throughout the Conference this year more than ever before, and the district and Conference workers appreciate this general observance, and trust it will enable these workers to render better and larger service to the local schools.

Mr. W. C. Reynolds, of Ida, and Mr. V. R. Thompson, of Tallulah, represent the latest schools sending in Sunday School Day offerings.

Wednesday and Thursday of this week were spent at the Alexandria District Conference at Pleasant Hill. There were many good features in this last district conference for 1926 in Louisiana Methodism. The note of evangelism was sounded from first to last by the presiding elder and leaders. In the flooded sections of the district new hope was sounded by the pastors.

Representatives of the Conference-wide interests were: Brothers J. R. Peters, Superannuate Endowment Fund; R. W. Vaughan, Superintendent of Orphanage; N. E. Joyner, Religious Education; D. B. Raulins, Mansfield College: A. W. Turner, Prohibition League; and C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent of Sunday School Work.

The same District Sunday School officers were re-elected. The Training work in the district for the summer and fall was represented by Drs. Lutz and Brooks and Rev. H. N. Brown.

While in Pleasant Hill I was guest in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hardy, which home is known throughout the Conference for its hospitality.

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

Many Methodists from the Colonial District in Brazil have moved to new places and are asking that workers be sent to open new work in these towns where they have settled, but alas! the workers are so few that there is no one to send in answer to these urgent calls.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

A Daily Vacation Church School continuing three weeks, twenty hours a week, affords an opportunity for giving children more religious training than the Sunday school can give in one year. No trouble to enlist the interest of the children. What is needed is some one sufficiently interested in childhood and youth who will take the time to lead in the work. Miss Helen R. Swisher, professor of Religious Education at Grenada College, has prepared twenty young women who are willing to help do the work. Ten of these young women have volunteered to go wherever they are wanted; ten will work in the home church. It is necessary to make some careful preparation for the work at least one month before the school work begins. We have prepared the workers. Will the school use them?

There are forty schools of different types in the Greenwood District. We are asking that thirty schools observe Sunday School Day. Up to the present time, twenty-two agreed to do this important work. We are confident that eight others will fall into line and help reach the goal that has been set. One victory helps achieve another; defeat in this undertaking weakens the entire line.

We have about the same number of schools in the Greenville District, and we have the same goal, thirty schools. Up to the present twenty-two leaders in these schools have agreed to see that the day is properly observed. A few of the best organized schools are holding back because of the pressure of other matters. We cannot afford to suffer defeat in attaining our objectives on account of the lack of leadership on the part of a few schools. The instruction that is given to the children and to the entire school is of paramount importance. The offering is needed to finance our training schools, both Standard and Cokesbury, but the offering should come as a result of the instruction. The offering without the instruction cannot accomplish the results in character-building that are desired. The idea is to do a piece of honest work that will stand the test of the day of Judgment. Good work is as easily perpetuated as slipshod work. It is horrible to think of perpetuating neglect.

All the district conferences have been held. The record is that only one man in North Mississippi stood up in opposition to the issuance of bonds to endow Grenada College. A small number over the Conference were honestly opposed to having a first-class college for the Christian education of the young women of our territory, but the vast majority have registered their heart's desire in hearty approval. We are the richer in material wealth as a result of this action. No finite mind can estimate the imperisbable wealth that shall accrue throughout eternity.

We have not gone very far toward the goal of one hundred volunteer teachers who will teach one or more classes for credit. The Bible is the great source of material for religious education. There are teachers who are well equipped for this task. Select a course and have the class study the Bible in the Sunday school, study it for credit. This can be done in three months. A well bound book is respected more than leaflet or quarterly, or magazine that is handed out to the pupil, young or old. The Sunday school is the place, and the Sunday school affords the opportunity for real study of the Bible.

Have you planned to attend one of the six Standard Schools that are to be held in the Conerence? At the last minute decide in favor of making a better Christian of yourself.

FROM PLAQUEMINE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: The pastor of Plaquemine and White Castle wishes to say a few words in the dear old Advocate. First, I want to congratulate our folk and the editor on the splendid paper you are giving us. And I heartily agree with "Mister" Shipman's statement in this week's issue: "That last of Bishop Candler's 'A Beast on a Clod of Mud,' is worth one year's price of the paper." Also the editor is giving us good articles.

Now, relative to our job. Here in this difficult nad needy field (I will say mission field, though we have no missionary appropriation), for the poplation is largely French, about 90 per cent Roman Catholic; hence our progress is slow along lines of permanent upbuilding of the Methodist church. However, the pastor is on the job, giving his time here and at White Castle, humbly praying and working. We are expecting the advancement of Christ's kingdom and our great Methodist church.

Last Sunday was a happy and, we trust, a profitable day—"Mothers' Day," also "Subscription day" in our "Clean-up" for our beloved superannuates. A fine congregation was in attendance. The attendance at Sunday school was sixty-nine, the largest in several years, according to existing records.

The parsonage has been "pounded" twice since our coming here, the larder being well supplied on both occasions; and by these and other tokens of appreciation and friendship, the pastor and his wife have been kindly remembered by these splendid folk.

A nice piano has recently been purchased for the use of the church and Sunday school.

Doctor, last but not least, it's a pleasure to work for the Lord, even in a hard field, if one has an elder like Cain—his sympathetic attitude and energetic labor for the cause, are a help to the pastor and people. L. W. Cain "fits," and yonr words were aptly spoken when you recently said, "He takes to it (presiding eldering) as a duck takes to water."

Humbly asking yours and the readers' prayers,

Your brother,

A. RUFUS HOFFPAUIR, P. C.

NERVOUS HEADACHE

Kentuckian Tells How Taking Black-Draught Relieved His Pains and How Well He Feels Now.

Waynesburg, Ky.—How a few doses of Thedford's Black-Draught brought relief to a man who had been suffering from frequent spells of severe headache, is told below in the statement of Mr. Charles F. Todd, of Estesburg, near this place.

"I was suffering with nervous headaches. About once a week I would have these headaches, and have to quit work, and go to bed for about twenty-four hours. I would have pains in my neck, and right behind my right ear.

"A merchant at Estesburg saw me one day when I was suffering, and told me to try taking Black-Draught, which I did.

"I took a package home that night, and took a few doses. It relieved me. From that time on, I would take Black-Draught as soon as I felt like I was going to have one of those headaches—and they wouldn't come on.

"Every few weeks, I take three or four doses of Black-Draught, and I feel so well, and do my work, and don't lose any more time with headache.

"I haven't had a headache in six months."

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

inspirational talk on "Love, the Motive Power for Service."

The Mission and Bible Study work was presented by Mrs. B. C. Moore, of Oakland, whose auxiliary made second place in the entire North Mississippi Conference, Olive Branch leading by five points.

The Jubilee was given by Mrs. Floyd of Sardis, and she reminded us to keep ever before us the goals set for this Jubilee year.

Those present who were fortunate in having attended Council named various things that interested them most. Among the speakers were Mrs. Short, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Redding, Mrs. Graham, Misses Wilson, Pollard.

After the reading of the minutes by the secretary and report of the resolutions committee, the meeting adjourned, to meet at a place to be decided upon later.

ACTIVE AUXILIARY AT WEBB, MISS.

The May business and social meeting of the Webb Woman's Missionary Society met at the home of Mrs. L. N. Townsend, with Mrs. D. R. Crow as assistant hostess.

The local treasurer reported over $200 made so far in the year.

This auxiliary won both a blue and gold star in mission and Bible study, and led the Greenwood District in number of points—155.

This society uses all literature and helps put out, and its weekly meetings through the year are planned in accordance with the work mapped out by higher officers.

We observe all weeks and day set apart by Council meetings.

MRS. W. J. STEPHENS.
Superintendent of Publicity.

ZONE MEETING AT MOSS POINT, MISS.

We have just held one of the most interesting and helpful meetings that we have yet had. On April 25, some seventy-five or eighty women and pastors of this zone came together at Moss Point for the spring meeting.

Rev. J. L. Sells, the presiding elder of the Seashore District, gave a most interesting account of the things which impressed him most at the recent meeting of the Council; and his daughter, Miss Helen Sells, gave a very instructive mental picture of Scarritt—its physical equipment and the different types of work done by the students.

We were very glad to have our District Secretary, Mrs. T. T. Ford, of Columbia, present. This was the first time we have had this pleasure, and we received much instruction and useful information regarding the work in our local organizations from her timely address.

After the hostesses had served a most delicious luncheon, reports from the different auxiliaries represented were made. The offering of $9.61 was made and presented to the presiding elder for use in the district in carrying on a more extensive plan of work.

Our next session will be held in July at Mount Pleasant church on the Vancleave charge.

MRS. J. W. SELLS, Secretary.

ZONE MEETING AT DUSHAN, MISS.

On May 3, 1928, the ladies of the Dushan Missionary Society royally entertained the meeting of the zone. The church was beautifully decorated with huge bouquets of gorgeous roses. The leader of the zone, Mrs. John Mustin, and all the ladies of the Society met the visitors with outstretched arms.

The saddest fact of the day was the realization that only two societies were represented—Montrose, fifteen delegates, and Dushan, nine—and three lovely guests from Meridian, namely, Mrs. Cochran, Mrs. Cottrell and Mrs. Wilson.

Opening song, "Year of Jubilee;" devotional, led by Mrs. Jas. W. Abney; subject: "Leadership in the Church;" welcome address, Mrs. Keown, of Dushan; response, Mrs. McClellan, of Montrose. The minutes of last meeting were read and adopted.

A very impressive talk on "What it Would Mean to a Pastor if Each Church Had an Auxiliary," was given by Brother Vickers. Talk on "Children's Work" was given very forcefully by Mrs. Wilson, of Meridian. Prayer by Mrs. Neill, of Montrose.

Noon Hour—Song, "Forward Through the Ages." Prayer by Mrs. Keown, of Dushan. "How a Business Meeting Is Conducted" was presented in pageant form by Montrose auxiliary. A beautiful lecture on the Young People's work was given by Mrs. Cochran, of Meridian. Mrs. Cottrell, of Meridian, gave a very enlightened and informing talk on "Adult Work."

Mississippi has the honor of being on the Pioneer Honor Roll, and Mrs. Cottrell wears the pin presented at Council.

The questionnaire presented at a former meeting was answered. There were no definite plans made as to the next meeting. The meeting was closed with prayer by Brother Vickers.

MRS. E. F. PRUITT,
Zone Secretary.
MRS. JOHN MUSTIN, Leader.

CONTENTMENT.

O sweet content!
Work apace, apace, apace, apace;
Honest labor bears a lovely face.

Canst drink the waters of the crisped spring?
O sweet content!
Swimmest thou in wealth, yet sink'st in thine own tears?
O punishment!
Then he that patiently want's burden bears,
No burden bears, but is a king, a king!
O sweet content!

Cute in a Baby—Awful at Three —and it's Dangerous

by Ruth Brittain

Thumb sucking does look sweet in a baby, but it is disgusting in the three-year-old and sometimes it hangs on until fifteen or sixteen! The habit may cause an ill-formed mouth or induce adenoids; and it always interferes with digestion. Pinning the sleeve over the hand; attaching mittens, or putting on cardboard cuffs, which prevent bending the arms at the elbows, are some of the ways to stop the habit.

Another bad habit—irregularity in bowel action—is responsible for weak bowels and constipation in babies. Give the tiny bowels an opportunity to act at regular periods each day. If they don't act at first, a little Fletcher's Castoria will soon regulate them. Every mother should keep a bottle of it handy to use in case of colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, loss of sleep, or when baby is cross and feverish. Its gentle influence over baby's system enables him to get full nourishment from his food, helps him gain, strengthens his bowels.

Castoria is purely vegetable and harmless—the recipe is on the wrapper. Physicians have prescribed it for over 30 years. With each package, you get a valuable book on Motherhood. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper so you'll get the genuine.

A SUCCESSFUL MEETING AT OAKDALE, LA.

On May 6, the Methodist church at Oakdale, La., closed a very successful three weeks' series of meetings. Oakdale feels most fortunate in having had Dr. W. H. Bromley, of Cynthiana, Ky., in his wonderful addresses during this time, and Mr. Ralph Johnson, of Chattanooga, Tenn., musical director and leader of young people's work.

Dr. Bromley is a distinctive Kentuckian, courteous, with calm demeanor and sagacious piety, re-enforced by his profound knowledge of the Bible. In a quiet way he swept sophistry aside and blazed the trail for sinners to follow.

How well we remember sermons when a few sentences from his lips swept away doubt and helped us settle the important questions of life, leading many to reconsecrate their lives for the Master's service; He was never aggressive nor sensational, but ground out the essentials necessary to the salvation of souls.

Great problems of all sorts arise before us and spectral shapes give menace and admonition; in such a period, more preachers of Dr. Bromley's type, with temperate, devout mind and balance of judgment, are needed. Scores of people were converted during the meeting, and have since joined various churches of the town.

An Epworth League, consisting of fifty-two charter members, was formed.

The influence of this meeting will have its effect on future generations. Dr. Bromley came to Oakdale at the solicitation of Rev. H. W. Bowman, the local pastor, who is an old friend and who has endeared himself to many friends; who regret he is having to take a leave of absence on account of his failing health.

APRIL PRODUCTION OF WILLYS-KNIGHTS AND WHIPPETS IS RECORD.

High Earnings Are Reported by Willys-Overland for First Quarter of 1928.

April production of Willys-Knight and Whippet fours and sixes topped the highest month in the history of Willys-Overland with a total production of 38,500 cars. This represents nearly 50 per cent of total production for the three preceding months, officials of the company declared this week in Toledo.

This announcement was made following the company's financial statement for the first quarter ending March 31, which reveales earnings of $2,802,-896.55, after interest but before Federal taxes and special rebate deductions which were charged off in this quarter. This shows an average profit per unit of production on the 76,698 cars built in this period, of $36 per car.

The extraordinary charge-off for the first quarter which covers inventory adjustments and rebates to dealers on cars in stock at the time of the drastic Whippet price cut in January, amounts to $1,155,320.72, reducing the net earnings transferred to surplus to $1,647,-575.83.

Commenting on this statement, John N. Willys, president, said: "The charge-off to cover dealer rebates and inventory adjustments obviously is not a recurring charge and was applicable to cars in possession of dealers and materials and stock on hand at the time of the Whippet price cut. Before this charge the profit per car was $36.

"With a rapidly rising production schedule which is absorbing overhead faster than cost sheet estimates, the per car profit is naturally rising. The company's price policies have justified themselves and are plainly benefiting profits and finances as well as trade position.

"Volume production on the scale contemplated when the Whippet prices were announced were not reached until March, during which production totaled over 50 per cent of the entire production for the first quarter. Production of the new Whippet Six was not started until April, and this same month has seen a marked increase in the production of Willys-Knight models.

"With production volume steadily increasing, there is reason to believe that earnings for the second quarter will be highly satisfactory."

In January Willys-Overland produced 16,289 cars, February figures totaled 25,744, and March reached 34,635.

April production exceeded March by nearly 4,000 units, and with orders for 35,000 cars for May delivery, the situation is considered by company executives as highly satisfactory.

Two new records were established by the company in April, one on April 19, when 1,810 cars were produced, and a shipping record on April 26, when 2,047 cars were shipped.

Production now averages 1,600 cars a day, and it is said that new manufacturing facilities will add appreciably to these figures before the end of the year.

More than 1,000 new dealer contracts have been signed since Jan. 1, out of 4,000 applications, while employment at the Toledo plant, with nearly 22,000 workers on the payroll, is the largest in the history of the organization.—Adv.

Epworth League

EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTES.

At the regular monthly meeting of the New Orleans City Union Epworth League held Tuesday, May 8, at the Rayne Memorial Church, the election of officers was held, with the following results: President, Alfred Hanson, re-elected; vice president, Aima McGowan; secretary, Betty Howard; corresponding secretary, Evelyn Patterson, re-elected; treasurer, Edgar E. Cayard; chorister, Rev. A. M. Serex, re-elected; pianist, Mrs. A. M. Serex.

Following the election the Oratorical Contest for New Orleans District was held. Those taking part were:

Miss Clara Kirkland, Felicity Church, who spoke on "Missions and Non-Christian Practices in America."

Ewoth Sanford, First Church, spoke on "A Missionary Motive for this Generation."

Miss Julia McGowan, Second Church, spoke on "Missions and International Relations."

The contestant which received the unanimous vote of the three judges was Miss Julia McGowan. The judges were Rev. B. M. Taylor, Rev. G. M. Hicks, and Miss Elizabeth Langford. The three orations were very good, and the judges indeed had to thoroughly digest them before making a decision. All of the young people showed through their talks that they spent a good deal of time in the preparation of same, and those hearing same were well rewarded for attending the meeting. The winner will be sent to the Mansfield Assembly, where she will enter against the other districts in Louisiana.

FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: It is hard to realize that this time next month we will all be at Mansfield Assembly having a wonderful time together. I hope that you are planning and expecting big things at Assembly this year, because we want our tenth year to be the banner year for us all, but it will take you to make it so.

I enjoyed, very much, attending the Minden District Conference at Jena. I was in the lovely home of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Cudd while there. From Jena I went to Clinton to the Baton Rouge District Conference, and was most cordially entertained in the home of Mrs. L. M. McKnight. I then went to Hammond to meet with our District Secretary, Miss Wilda Addison, to assist her in lining up Baton Rouge District for Assembly. Since Dr. Frank Wells, of First Church, Baton Rouge, and Rev. L. W. Cain, the presiding elder, are both on our Assembly program we feel that we have a special reason for having a large representation from that district.

I spent two days in New Orleans with our District Secretary, Edgar Cayard, and while there I had the pleasure of attending the City Union meeting and hearing the Oratorical Contest for that Union. The three contestants who entered gave three of the most stirring orations I have had the opportunity of hearing anywhere. It was very difficult for the judges to decide the winner, but they finally announced it to be Miss Julia McGowan, of St. Mark's Hall. I feel sure that our district elimination at Assembly will find us with a State winner that we will be proud to send to Mount Sequoyah to compete with other Conferences of the Central Western States.

After stopping a few hours in Alexandria to confer with our State president I went to Jonesboro for a few days. In talking with our treasurer I find that anniversary gifts are still coming in. We have recently received the following: Bastrop, $8.89; Ferriday, $10; Pineville, $17; Morgan City, $4.70; Little Creek, $2.50; Hall Summitt, $2. That brings our total to date to $614.55. Let's finish up this observance as soon as possible.

Trusting that every chapter has already named its delegates to the Assembly and that we are all working and praying for a most wonderful gathering of Epworth Leaguers on June 12-19, I am,

Your worker in his service,

ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Field Secretary.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

MILLSAPS COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The thirty-sixth session of Millsaps College came to a close on Tuesday of last week with the baccaulaurate address, delivered by President W. P. Few, of Duke University, the graduating of a class of more than sixty, the awarding of degrees and honors, and anouncements for next session.

The address by President Few was singularly appropriate and forceful. Without any oratorical frills, the distinguished head of one of the world's great universities puts into his speeches a clearness of thinking and an intensity of feeling that compel attention and keep the intellectual faculties in constant activity. We have heard many of the baccalaureate address at Millsaps—perhaps most of them—but we do not recall a greater than the one we heard last Tuesday.

In addition to the degrees conferred upon the large number of graduates, the honorary degree of Doctor Divinity was conferred upon Rev. R. A. Tucker, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., and Rev. J. L. Decell, presiding elder of the Jackson District. President Key was very felicitous in his remarks in conferring the degrees, calling attention to the service rendered by both the honored preachers to church and State through an active and successful ministry. The honor was as worthily bestowed as it will be becomingly worn.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of the board of trustees of the college, gave an encouraging report of the progress of the campaign to raise a fund of $650,000 for needed buildings and equipment for the college. Jackson and Hinds County have raised more than their allotted quota, and the campaign will be pushed throughout the State until the urgent needs of Millsaps are provided for. There can be no question as to the urgency of these needs. They are keenly felt by those who are charged with the responsibility of carrying forward the work of the institution; and they are easily seen by those who, like the writer, have kept in touch with the college for the last twenty-five or thirty years, and have been compelled to take note of the fact that the material progress has not kept pace with the academic and scholastic achievements of the institution. Apparently the college has just about reached the limit of its development until further equipment is provided. We wonder that some man or woman of means does not see and seize the opportunity to render an inestimable service to the church and the commonwealth by providing for one of the greatly needed new buildings, at the same time erecting a monument to a name that would be honored through succeeding generations. What one may not do, certainly the many friends of Christian education in Mississippi will not fail to do.

The only other features of the commencement exercises we had the privilege of attending were the presentation of the three-act comedy, "Nothing but the Truth," by the Millsaps Players, on Monday afternoon, and the banquet and annual meeting the Alumni Association on Monday evening. We heard some fine reports of the sermons preached on Sunday by Dr. Charles L. Goodell.

"Nothing but the Truth" is a real comedy, technically and actually, and the players have reached a high degree of proficiency in their portrayal of the situations arising out of the theme of the play. Those who are familiar with such productions declare that it is equal to many professional presentations.

The alumni banquet and meeting Monday night were well attended, and it seemed that "an enjoyable time was had by all." Some old-timers were there, as well as most of this year's graduating class, and many others scattered along through the years. It was the very definitely expressed determination of the alumni to continue their efforts until the full alumni quota of the $650,000 is raised.

Millsaps College is a great institution.

ANTI-RACING BILL IN THE LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.

A bill prohibiting race track gambling in Louisiana has been introduced in the Legislature, now in session in Baton Rouge. Without knowing the details of this bill, we are strongly in favor of the enactment of legislation at this session of the Legislature that will do away with the evils that so manifestly attend race track gambling and that will comply with the mandate of the State Constitution to the effect that gambling is an evil and the Legislature shall adopt measures to suppress it. The adoption of such legislation is dependent upon the strength of public sentiment back of it. It is tremendously important, therefore, that those who favor this legislation let their representatives at Baton Rouge know how they feel about it and that they urge them to give it their support and vote. Anybody that knows anything at all about the racing business knows that those supporting it are working day and night at the job of keeping the law away from it. They have very definite opinions on the matter and they do not fail to let the Legislature know what those opinions are. Now is the time for all good men to rally to support of the efforts to put the racing evil out of business. It can be done—but it can't be done by doing nothing.

THE CHURCH PAPER.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, now in session at Kansas City, is giving some attention to the question of church papers. In connection with that subject, Dr. Dan B. Brummitt, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate—one of the best of the papers that come to our table—makes some remarks. We quote some of them from his issue of May 17:

"Much is said about costs, deficits, and the like. It is hardly probable that one Methodist in ten realizes the purely uncommercial character of the church papers. It is as vain to expect them to be self-supporting as it would be to look for cash dividends from a college. If the church can get along without official papers, it is manifest folly to spend money on them. But if the church sees that a well-conducted series of papers is valuable to its work, there ough to be no demand that these papers shall both serve the church and pay their own bills. * * *

"The church can have papers if it will pay for them. It cannot have them otherwise; not even if it changes its orders to its editors every four years; not even if it asks of the editors all manner of plain and ornamental bricks without straw; and certainly not if it closes the door of opportunity to those young journalists who, from time to time, and quite unintentionally, it chances to produce.

"These are not pleasant words. They would be inexcusable but for one quality: they happen to be true."

In the Florida Conference Department of the Christian Advocate (Nashville) last week, the Florida editor, Rev. B. F. Rogers, speaks along the same line. We quote from him: "One of the most important questions which will come before the Florida Conference this year is the problem of its Conference organ. This seems to be a perennial problem. It will continue to be such until the right thing is done about it, for there is an old saying that no question is ever settled until it is settled right. * * *

"If the church paper is really valuable—and we have never found a member of the Conference who would say that it is not—then why not act like we regard it as valuable instead of merely talking about its value? We do not ask the pupils in our Sunday school if they will subscribe for lesson papers. We order a supply sufficient for the needs of them and then pay for them out of the common fund. The circulation of the Conference organ is not merely a local church problem. It is a Conference problem, and if it is ever solved satisfactorily the Conference must do it."

In all of which there is food for thought.

"WHAT'S THE MATTER IN CHINA?"

Everybody wants to know what is going on in China, for world issues are involved in what takes place there. As a background for a study of that awakening country, we commend the little book, "What's the Matter in China?" by Dr. Elmer T. Clark, issued under the auspices of the Board of Missions. The cost of the book is insignificant—twenty-five cents—but its value is great. The Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church has ordered fifteen thousand copies for use in developing a missionary spirit. It has been largely used in our own church, but there is room for a wider reading. It ought to have it.

THE PREACHER AND EXPERIMENTAL RELIGION.

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

For the first thirteen years of his ministry Wesley preached the gospel with very meager results, as he himself confessed. It was not because of lack of education, consecratiou or zeal. As to education, he was one of the best scholars of his day; as to zeal, he was abundant in labors; as to consecration, let these words answer: "Lo, I come if this soul and body may be useful to anything, to do thy will, O God. If it please thee to use the power thou hast over dust and ashes, here they are to suffer thy good pleasure. If thou pleasest to visit, either with paln or dishonor, I will humble myself underneath it, and through thy grace be obedient unto death, even the death of the eross. Hereafter no man can take away anything from me, no life, no honor, no estate; since I am ready to lay them down as soon as I perceive thou requirest them at my hands."

After such complete consecration to God, what dld he yet lack that caused his ministry to be so barren? He lacked the most essential thing for a Christian minister—a Christian experience of God. As strange as it may seem for one brought up in the church as Wesley was, he was—unconsciously, of course—trying to be his own Saviour. He was putting the "emphasis on himself, on his own motives, acts, self-denials, prayers, aspirations, and not on his Saviour." And, as Fitchett says, "woe to the soul that shifts the center of its faith in this fashion, and finds the center, not in the redeeming offices, the great and radiant figure of the living Christ, but in the imperfect and broken fragments of his own aets and motives."

That Wesley did not have, at this time, a Christian experience of God, his own words testify: "I went to America to convert the Indians, but O! who shall convert me? who, what is he that will deliver me from this evil heart of mischief? I have a fair summer religion. I can talk well; nay, and believe myself while no danger is near; but let death look me in the face, and my spirit is troubled. Nor can I say, 'To die is gain.'"

But it was after a ministry of thirteen years that that discovery was made. Now that he is aware that something essential is lacking in his expereince, note with what intensity of soul he seeks the one thing needful. "Whoever sees me, sees I would be a Christian. Therefore are my ways not like other men's ways. Therefore I have been, I am, I am content to be, a by-word, a proverb of reproach." "All my words," he says, "all my righteousness, my prayers, need an atonement for themselves, so that my mouth is stopped. I have nothing to plead. God is holy; I am unholy. God is a consuming fire; I am altogether a sinner meet to be consumed." He is not far from the kingdom now.

God never allows one of his children to hunger and thirst after righteousness in vain. Peter Bohler, a devout Moravian preacher, is sent to teach Wesley the way of salvation more perfectly, and to lead him unto full assurance of faith. Never had a teacher a more teachable scholar. But it was only when Wesley "trusted in Christ, Christ alone for salvatlon," that he was assured that "God had taken away his slns," and "felt his heart strangely warmed." Not ouly a new peace, but also a new power entered hls llfe. "Before, he could not move a village, now he can shake three kingdoms." Multitudes of from five to twenty thousand hang upon his words, are moved to the depths of their being, and many turn to God. Wherever he goes the people feel that a prophet of God is in their midst. The drunkard becomes a sober man, the profane swearer abandons his oaths, and the irreligious turn to God. Nor was his a fleeting experience, it continued with him for more than fifty years—to the end of his life.

These thoughts have been suggested by the reading of "The Eloquence of Christian Experience," the Lyman Beecher lectures (1926) at Yale, by Dr. Calkins. In one of the lectures, entitled, "The Christian Experience and the Preacher," we are continually reminded of Wesley's experience before and after receiving the witness of the Spirit. Dr. Calkins says though a preacher possess every other qualification, "if he lacks, or in proportion as he lacks, a deep vital and personal experience of God and of the Christian revelation of God, he is sure to fail as a preacher. For preaching is simply the uttering of one's own experience." Again: "If it is our experience of God through Christ which qualified us to be prophets, it is out of such experience that sermons are born. A sermon is the effort to express one's experience of God through Christ."

Speaking of the danger that the pulpit may have intellect without passion, or fervor without intellect," Dr. Calkins says: "Our dauger is not that we shall be over-intellectualized—no man can ever be that—but that we shall lack that deep inward and spiritual experience of Christian truth which will cause all the intellectual framework of our preaching to become the invisible background of it, while the preaching itself is direct, simple, authoritative, and moving with the fervor of an intimate experience of God and a personal knowledge of the unsearchable riches of Christ."

He calls "unreality" the foe that lies in wait for the preacher. "A very competent authority, himself on the inside where he can observe, has said that the two besetting sins of the ministry are laziness and lying. By lying he means the essential thesis of unreality. The moment a preacher begins to declare something which he has read about, which he has been taught about, which some one else has preached about, which he has every good reason to believe people ought to know about, yet something which lies outside and beyond the range of his own personal experience —that moment preaching becomes unmoral if not positively immoral."

When men have intellectual doubts they "need to be confronted with spiritual reality" rather than to be argued with. "The sermons that will do the most to solve men's intellectual doubts," says Dr. Calkins, "are those which, issuing from the depths of spiritual experience, ereate an atmosphere of such spiritnal reality that in it these doubts are dissolved and the soul knows because it sees the truth."

Just after writiug the words above, my eyes felt upon the following paragraph in Stanley Jones' book, "Christ at the Round Table." It shows that Dr. Calkins' lecture is to the point. "A Hindu medical student of very keen observation and deep spiritual sensibilities asked me one day how he could find God. I took my New Testament to point out certain passages to him as guide-posts. I had scarcely begun to read these passages when he leaned over and politely but positively closed the New Testament in my hand, and said, 'Now tell me from your own experience how to find God.' It made me think. All of my work with him had to fall back upon my own experience of God. Was it clear and real enough to be adequate? Of course we cannot close the New Testament, as he suggested. It would be disastrous if we did so, for in the New Testament we are held by the historical Christ from drifting. But he was deeply right in insisting that I had no business preaching Christ as a Saviour and the Bringer of God unless I could share that experience with him."

SOME INSPIRING FACTS CONCERNING OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL FORCES.

By J. R. Pepper.

Think of the 16,000 Sunday schools with about two and a quarter millions enrollment.

Think of the 173,000 officers and teachers—more than are in the standing army of the United States.

Think of the 400 training schools held last year by 1,113 approved instructors teaching therein, and with 69,884 credits.

Think of the twenty-nine Conferences with dual extension secretaries, who are reaching the most remote rural schools of our church, holding Cokesbury Training Schools, etc., for those who have never had such opportunities before.

Think of the 86,421 members received into the church from the Sunday school—nearly three-fourths of all who were received during the year.

Think of the increase of the enrollment, 46,900 over last year, or a net gain of 10,925.

Think of the 917 churches observing Children's Week last year, and the many forward steps taken during that time.

Think of the 1,813 new Wesley Bible classes enrolled last year, with 25,000 classes in all, and with a membership of 500,000.

Think of the missionary offerings for 1927 of $482,691 with an increase of $26,970 over the previous year.

Think of the twenty-four Annual Conferences which now have some home and parent teacher work introduced, and with a library of 949 books for parental education.

Think of the correspondence work of immense value, touching those who are taking correspondence courses and with an increase of 2,500 credits for last year; and it is said that this is one of the largest correspondence schools in the world.

Think of the Junaluska School of Religion beginning this year in conjunction with the great Duke University.

Think of the fourteen Pastors' Schools last year, and the plan for sixteen for the present year.

Think of the fifty-nine colleges, forty-seven of which are denominational colleges and universities, giving college Sunday school courses.

Think of the circulating library that is being built up for the use of Dual Extension secretaries.

Think of the $88,700 spent for Sunday School Extension in the home field last year.

Think of the assistance that is to be given by our Sunday School Board to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Sunday School Board—one of the finest co-operative efforts yet undertaken.

Think of the more than 100 new Sunday schools that were organized by the Dual Extension secretaries, in addition to their other great activities.

Think of the 1,793,838 pieces of literature sent out by our Service Department during the past year.

Think of the support of those fine men, S. A. Neblett in Cuba, and J. O. Kim in Korea.

Think of the expert departmental faculty covering all lines of Sunday school endeavor, and each one laboring as if it were in a research laboratory in order that the "finest of the wheat" may be given to our great army of Sunday school officers and teachers.

And, finally, think of the great editorial staff of our General Sunday School Board, composed of ten persons, every one of whom, from the chief editor, Dr. E. B. Chappell, to the last one on the list, chosen because of special fitness for the task of issuing fourteen periodicals of many sizes and degrees of helpfulness; and last year 542,725,000 pages of this varied literature were sent out to our constituency as the result of their fine, untiring labors.

All of these arms of service are working together in the utmost co-operation for the general onward movement of God's kingdom, and nobody knows what will be the outcome in the next few years, if God's blessing continues to favor our great work.

MINDEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Minden District Conference met in the Nolley Memorial Church, Jena, La., May 2 to 4. Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder of the district, presided at all sessions, and the great success of the conference was largely due to the efficient and kindly manner in which he presided.

During the conference great mention was made of and honor paid to that noble pioneer Methodist preacher, Richmond Nolley. He died in the fulfillment of his mission and lies buried near Jena. In the church cemetery there stands a memorial shaft to his memory. Honor was also paid another noble soldier of the cross, Rev. B. H. Sheppard, whose grave is near the Nolley Memorial shaft.

There was throughout the entire conference a high tone of spiritual and brotherly love. From time to time, messages were brought in devotional services and sermons by the following brethren: T. J. Holladay, George Fox, W. F. Roberts, P. B. McCullum, S. S. Holladay, Jr., E. V. Duplantis, and J. D. Fomby.

The attendance at the conference was good. The people of Jena royally entertained the conference, both in opening their homes and in serving noonday lunch at the church. At the first night session, Mr. A. D. Flowers, mayor-elect of Jena, welcomed us to the city. Response was made by Judge R. W. Oglesby, District Lay Leader. Rev. H. W. Cudd, the pastor-host, was very successfully careful to make our stay enjoyable.

During the course of the conference, the following connectional causes were presented:

Christian Education, with especial emphasis on the Centenary bond issue, was presented by Dr. N. E. Joyner. The Superannuate Clean-up Campaign, by Rev. J. B. Peters. The Orphanage, by Rev. R. W. Vaughan. Epworth League, by Miss Elizabeth Langford.

All business of the conference was dispatched with smoothness. The pastors' reports were optimistic and encouraging. Two young men, Brothers Montgomery and Tally, of Springhill, were licensed to preach. Delegates were elected to the Annual Conference. Mr. C. M. Roberts was elected District Lay Leader, and B. T. Gallaher and C. E. Ives were elected Associate District Lay Leaders. Ferriday was chosen as the next place of meeting.

JAMES T. HARRIS, Secretray.

THE VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Vicksburg District Conference was royally entertained by the people of the Methodist church and their friends, in the historic city of Port Gibson. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. B. F. Lewis.

We convened in business session Wednesday morning, with our presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, in the chair. B. M. Hunt was elected secretary, and I. H. Sells, assistant. All the pastors were present but three, who were detained by illness and other good reasons. There was a good representation of laymen from all parts of the district.

The reports of the pastors were gratifying. Revivals are being held, and many have united with the church, while others are planning for their meetings. Churches are being built, and others repaired. The whole work of the church seems to be progressing in this section.

The connectional interests of the church were represented by Rev. B. F. Lewis, Rev. T. H. Mills, Dr. J. M. Sullivan, W. D. Hawkins, Rev. J. M. Morse, and R. A. Maddox. The latter spoke on the Superannuate Endowment Campaign in a very telling way.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: R. W. Boult, H. H. Chrisler, J. M. Sessions, W. Hemingway, J. E. Briggs, C. C. Greer, F. L. Gordon, Mrs. G. P. McKeown, S. W. Sharbrough, and J. G. Anders, with Mrs. T. H. Fore, M. M. Satterfield, Mrs. J. L. Nelll, Mrs. J. C. Lowrey and L. C. Marsh as alternates.

A very helpful sermon was preached by Rev. B. M. Hunt Wednesday evening.

Luncheon was served by the ladies of the church in the Presbyterian annex. We were royally entertained in every way. Rev. Otto Porter and his good people spared themsives not at all in their entertainment.

Louise was selected as the next meeting place.

I. H. SELLS, Assistant Secretary.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Smart and the Tensas Country.

The Waterproof charge covers the entire Parish of Tensas. Our pastor there has a tremendous task, but Rev. L. W. Smart is proving equal to the opportunity. So well is the work progressing under his splendid leadership that all indications point to a need for another preacher resident in that great section south of Tallulah, west of the mighty Mississippi, north of Ferriday, and east of the Tensas. Methodism has been in that section for a hundred years and more. We need more intensive work there than has been undertaken for many years.

At Waterproof Brother Smart has made some needed improvements in the parsonage and its surroundings. We now have a thoroughly modern home for the pastor. Also he has projected much needed improvement in the way of a Sunday school building at the rear of our church which will doubtless be under construction before the end of the Conference year. St. Joseph is going along splendidly under the pastor's direction, as are also Newellton and Wesley Chapel.

Brother Smart being the only resident pastor in Tensas Parish, there is of course within the bounds of his charge much promising mission territory. He has Macedonian calls for preaching from here and there in his parish, many of which he meets, but some of which he finds it impossible to answer. There is plenty of work for two preachers in this wide field, but the funds are lacking. This assurance we have, the capable leadership, the tremendous earnestness, the tireless energy and the consecrated heart of Brother Smart will bring to pass wonderful things on the Waterprooof charge, and out of his efforts will come, we are certain, wonderful results for our great church.

ELMER C. GUNN, P. E.

A CRISIS—A DUTY.

The nation, and especially the Southland, is today face to face with a moral crisis. Our ideals, involving the purity of the American home and the sobriety of the American people, which have required two hundred years to build up, are threatened with overthrow through the nomination and possible election of a whiskey candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and the consequent re-enthronement of rum. But it is still believed that, through the earnest and instant co-operation of half a million Christian voters in the South, the nomination of such a candidate may be prevented. Great national leaders, like Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, and Senator Owens, of Oklahoma, who are co-operating with the Southland Committee of Safety, believe that a sufficiently strong protest presented at Houston will defeat the program of the "wets."

The Southland Committee has sent to every community of the South an S. O. S. call in the shape of a printed protest to be signed by Democratic voters. Reports from our workers indicate that already one hundred thousand of these protests have been signed in the South outside of Texas, which promises a high list, possibly two hundred thousand. Protests at the rate of four thousand daily are coming into the Southland Committee's office, at Nashville. But the time is now short. Thousands on thousands more of protests are needed. Will not the Christian Democrat who reads this call write with typewriter or pen at the top of a sheet of paper these words: "We protest against the nomination at Houston of a 'wet' candidate for the Presidency," and then secure and send to us all the signatures thereto possible? Our workers report that ninety per cent of the voters approached readily sign.

Will not our brethren of the pastorate in all the evangelical churches who have not already done so, send us the number of men and women in their congregations or church circles who are known to be committed against a "wet" candidate? This will require but a few minutes of time. It is numbers we need. Do this to-day. Send to

THE SARDIS DISTRICT MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

The Sardis District Ministerial Association was held in the beautiful little church in Byhalia, Tuesday, May 15, and was most graciously provided for by the pastor-host, Brother J. D. Simpson, and his good people. A splendid program had been arranged by the program committee, and it was interestingly carried out, each member speaking to the part assigned him as ably as though he were an expert.

We met at 10 o'clock and heard a scholarly sermon from Rev. W. W. Hartsfield, which fed our souls and warmed our hearts. Then Rev. C. T. Floyd took the chair, and Rev. W. W. Jones was elected secretary, and Brother Floyd addressed the conference on the importance of the Golden Cross.

The regular program was called, and the following subjects were discussed: "The Pastor's Relation to Civic Organizations," by Brothers G. W. Boyles and S. B. Potts; "How Shall We Ban Immoral Literature?" by Rev. J. D. Simpson and Brother W. W. Hartsfield; "What Preparation Should Be Made for a Revival?" by Rev. H. R. McKee and Rev. A. J. Henry. A round table discussion led by Rev. G. A. Baker, "Should We Establish a Conference Organ at Jackson, Miss., for Mississippi Methodism?" provoked interesting remarks.

Resolutions of sympathy were sent to our beloved presiding elder, Rev. T. M. Bradley, who was absent because of serious illness in his family, and to Rev. W. C. Galceran, Jr., who has been in a Greenville hospital for several weeks.

Our next regular meeting will be June 12. Rev. and Mrs. G. A. Baker and their good people, of Coldwater, have invited us to come and bring our families. The following program will he observed:

Sermon by Rev. K. S. L. Cooke, of Tyro; "My Judgment as to What Should Compose a Preacher's Library, and the Books a Preacher Should Read," by Rev. W. W. Jones, Rev. K. S. L. Cooke, and Rev. W. M. Jones; "The Value and the Most Helpful Way of Presenting the Doctrines of Our Church," by Rev. W. W. Hartsfield, Rev. G. W. Robertson, and Brother J. D. Simpson; "How Best to Develop the Social Life of the Church," by Brothers H. R. McKee, A. J. Henry, and A. C. Johnson.

I must not fail to speak of the beautiful new Sunday school annex which the Bybalia people have just added to their church. It shows that the pastor and his people have vision and are trying to establish the kingdom of God. I am sure that the building of these modern educational plants will be an inspiration and an encouragement to our two peerless Sunday school leaders, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney and Rev. E. G. Mohler.

A. T. CLANTON, Secretary.

The pastor of each Methodist church in Belgium is making an effort during the present year to open up a new preaching place in some town near his work. In addition to the large centers in Belgium where our church is at work along with other evangelical churches, there are many towns of minor importance in this country where the gospel of Christ has never been preached by any church.

THE GREENVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

On the mornlug of May 17, the Greenville Dlstrict Conference met in the historlc city of Greenville. Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, our efficient and beloved presiding elder, presidiug throughout the conference. Every courtesy was shown to all visitors, and every item of business of the church received proper emphasis.

The attendance was good, every pastor in the distrlct belng present with the exception of Dr. H. F. Brooks, of Clarksdale, who was detained because of the revival in progress at his church. However, Mrs. Brooks was present, together with others from Clarksdale.

It was a distinct honor to have as a visitor the editor of the Advocate aud have him so ably represent the cause of Christian literature. Other visitors were: Dr. D. M. Key, of Millsaps College; Dr. J. R. Countlss, of Grenada College; Mrs. Alma G. Rlley, of the Orphanage at Jackson; Rev. T. H. Mills, from the Memorial Home for Young Women at New Orleans; Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Conference Sunday School Superintendent; Rev. A. T. McIlwain, former presiding elder of this district, now pastor of First Church, Corinth, and Conference Director of the Superannuate Endowment, and Hon. R. M. Weaver, of Corlnth, champion of the cause of the "Forgotten Man." All these distinguished vlsitors very ably represented their respective causes.

The preaching of the conference was most effectlvely attended to by Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Hollandale, the veteran of our district, who organized more than one-third of the churches now composing the district, and Rev. J. W. Ward, the popular pastor of the church at Cleveland.

The lalty of the district will be ably represented at the Annual Conference at Pontotoc by the following: Judge Percy Bell, Greenville; J. H. Sherard, Sherard; Mrs. Nellie Summerville, Greenville; J. H. Johnson, Clarksdale; S. V. Wall, Cleveland; C. L. Hasie, Glen Allen; Mrs. J. E. Rather, Leland; Mrs. W. C. Channell, Tunica, and Mrs. J. W. Wheeler, Coahoma; with J. R. Whisnant, of Clayton; Mrs. Earnest Moore, of Clarksdale; and Mrs. Eugene Johnson, of Dundee, as alternates.

Grenada College.

The plan to endow Grenada College by the sale of bonds was presented to the conference by Dr. J. R. Countiss. Rev. A. C. McCorkle introduced a resolution ratifying the request of the Conference Board of Education for the issuance of bonds to the amount of $300,000 to endow Grenada College, which was passed without a dissenting vote.

District Goals.

Rev. W. W. Woollard introduced the following district goals or objectives to be accomplished:

1. A genuine revival lu each church.
2. To organize and conduct our Sunday schools according to the standard of efficiency.
3. To teach our young people in the Epworth Leagues what real Christian leadership and service is.
4. To make our Woman's Missionary Societies to be organizations to bring in the kingdom of God.
5. To arouse our laity to a sense of their responsibility In the church.
6. To look to the meeting in full of all our financial obligations.

The pastor-host, Rev. J. E. Cunningham, and the good people of Greenville spared no effort to make the stay of all the visitors pleasant, for which the conference was duly grateful.

The conference adjourned to meet next year with the good people and in the handsome new church of Shaw.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE CAMPAIGN NEWS.

Telegram from Bishop Candler.

I rejoice greatly in the successful progress of the campaign for Millsaps College. Citizens of Jackson have done grandly, and I confidently hope the campaign throughout the State of Mississippi will be equally successful. It is all important that it should be.

(Signed) W. A. CANDLER.

The Work Goes On.

Millsaps College begins this week the second stage of its building and improvement fund campaign.

As the first phase uears its conclusion the fund is approaching the $300,000 mark.

Many churches have siguified their intention of staging their portion of the appeal durlng June or July. Many churches, too, have placed the goal assigned them in their budget.

The alumni, too, are continuing their efforts. The appeal will be continued until every church and every alumni district has gone "over the top."

"We are pleased with what has been accomplished," asserted Barney Eaton, of Gulfport, general chalrman of the campaign, "and we will continue with undiminished zeal the work of the second phase of the appeal. From all sides come assurances of interest and support. Many of the churches have signified a desire to do their part of the campaign in June and July, and we purpose giving all an opportunity to share in this great task."

Report Adopted by Millsaps Board of Trustees, May 21.

We, your committee appoluted to recommend action in regard to the campaign for building funds, beg leave to report as follows:

We record our gratification at the notable success of the campaign in Jacksou and Hiuds County, where the quota of $150,000 was exceeded, while other subscriptions are confidently expected.

We are especially grateful for the handsome contributions of B. B. Jones, Captain and Mrs. G. T. Fitzhugh, W. M. Buie, the I. C. Enochs family, Stewart Gammill, Enochs and Wortman, and of others who have given generously to the fund.

No group has shown a more loyal spirit nor manifested a larger liberality than the students and faculty, who have set an inspiring example to the Methodists of the State.

We express our gratitude to Mr. R. E. Kennington for his masterful leadership of the campaign, and to Mr. B. E. Eatou and Mr. C. L. Neill, who have given generously of their time and strength to the prosecutlon of the campaigu in the larger groups throughout the State.

While the general canvass is incomplete, some churches having temporarily deferred the matter, and some others being now in the midst of their campaign, we rejoice at the success achieved and reported from many communities, and we give notice to the friends of Millsaps College that we shall proceed with the good work till every church shall have had the cause presented to its membership.

Statement by President D. M. Key.

Gratifying progress has been made in the great task we have embarked in behalf of Millsaps College. The church has been made more fully aware of the great service the college is continually rendering; of the remarkable recoguition lu the educational world that has come to Millsaps because of its thorough scholastic organization; of the solidity and permanency of the institution, due to the endowment that has been built up. The great possibility of increased usefulness because of its unique situation and key position in a great territory that is rapidly developing has also been set forth; and also the absolute necessity at the present time that its physical plant facilities be brought up from the bottom rank of our first-class Methodist colleges to a coudition comparable to the leading position held in endowment and in service.

These facts have enlisted the heartiest interest and generous response both in labors and lu gifts on the part of those who have realized them. Our thanks are due to the general chairman, to the zoue aud district chairmen, and to all who have been giving their time and energies to the campaign. Too hearty praise cannot be given, likewise, to those who because of their large donations have launched the great movement and have joined the group of great benefactors, headed by Major R. W. Millsaps, who are the builders of Millsaps College: B. B. Jones, Stewart Gammill, W. M. Buie, the Enochs family, Captain and Mrs. G. T. Fitzhugh, and many others. The complete and unqualified success and completion of the task assumed by the city of Jackson is heartening to all who are at work on the larger project. It is a challenge to the alumni and the church, and augurs final success for the entire undertaking.

In the churches of the two Conferences much remains to be done. Local conditions have delayed the matter in many places, and about half of those reporting are planning to complete the work during the next few weeks. From all parts of the State come assurances that the work will be continued unto successful completion. The total of over $250,000 already reported is the strongest encouragement to the college and its supporters to go forward with the great task, assured of God's blessings on our labors.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION DAY.

The Annual Conferences of Southern Methodism have authorized and ordered the observance of Christian Education Day in the local church. Nearly all of the Conferences have adopted the suggestions of the General Board that the second or third Sunday in June be set apart for this occasion. The pastors throughout the entire church have been furnished with sample leaflets and programs, and many of them have already ordered such quantities as they will need for the observance of the day in their Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues and pulpit services. This literature is furnished free of cost on application to the Board of Education, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

The Pastors

are urged to observe this day and thus carry a vigorous educational message to their congregations. The importance and place of our church school is not realized by the rank and file of our membership. The large contribution they are making to the ministry and laity of the church is not known. When our people know, they will give adequate support and resources for this department of the church. Our bishops have emphasized it again and again by saying that "every interest of the church is dependent upon our educational institutions." Our missionaries, pastors, presidlng elders, bishops, secretaries and other Christian workers are largely trained in our own church schools.

The Presiding Elder.

will ask the question at the third quarterly conference, "Has Christian Education Day been observed?" We hope every pastor will be able to say either that it has been observed or that it will be observed in the near future. We are dependent upon the pastor for conveying the educational message to our people, and no seed sowing will bear larger fruit in the coming years. Let us train young life wisely and religiously and thus make a conquest of the world in Jesus' name.

Remember

the literature offer is free. It is being sent only to those who apply for it. Have you sent in your order?

"PREACH THE WORD."

By Rev. James H. Felts.

For more than thirty years the writer has been a Methodist preacher. So far as he knows his character has never been questioned or his desire to help men challenged. Criticism has come his way often. Mistakes and blunders have been made. He has not always been choice in his use of "preaching subjects," himself being the witness. So much by way of confession.

Does the end sought always justify the means used? That depends. A certain preacher in Kentucky announced as his evening subject, "The Best Town by a Dam Site in the Country." The house was "packed." The message was tame. The vital things of our gospel were not mentioned. His success had to be measured by numbers only.

The writer has used such subjects as, "They Made Him Mayor," "The Case of a Drunk Preacher," "The Elijah Blues," "Five Flapdoodle Girls," "A Strange Funeral," "The Man Who Was Dead and Didn't Know It," "Passing the Buck," "Joy Riding," "Patent Medicines," "A Bad Egg in a Bad Nest Hatched a Song Bird," "A Mighty Fine Girl," and the like. Every one of them had definite Scriptural background. In every instance there was a perceptible increase in the number of hearers. Did it pay?

The other way has been definitely, persistently tried through a period long enough to get a real idea of the effect. Result? A growing conviction that no kind of preaching should be substituted for the gospel story, and few atttractions should be offered to induce people to attend church. Congregations are more dependable, regular, uniform. The spirit of worship is in evidence. A more definite deposit is made. Our Lord is not "obscured" by paint and powder. The preacher's own soul is fed. His desire to speak the truth in love is intensified. The actual per cent of his people who worship with becoming regularity is increased. The personal satisfaction is worth no little.

The man who attempts to compete with outside attractions had just as well "shed his coat"—he is going to "get a run for his money," and may meet disaster on the way. Most men go to church to worship. They want good music and gospel preaching. They are entitled to it. Whatever the apparent success and general interest when worship is turned into lunches, lectures, entertainment, and a general whoop-em-up, Billy, nothing gives stability and assurance like "Jesus Christ and him crucified."

In my present charge I have had opportunity to make interesting comparison. After special subjects ceased to be used there was a perceptible falling off on the part of the congregation. The point of discouragement was reached. Putting the best that in me was into each message, working through the short hours (working hours are always short), publicly and privately giving emphasis only to the worship idea, leaving all kinds of fads in the discard, eschewing the disputed questions that so much vex intelligent Christians and cause little fellows to quibble, I had the happiness of seeing my congregation grow steadily, surely, permanently. Additions to the church on profession of faith have reached a number nearly as great as the total of the three preceding years, some of them coming in at the mid-week service. Perhaps the acid test is ahead. The summer months in this delta country are hard on man and beast. But should there be no additional visible results this year, I have already seen enough to warm my heart for many moons.

In view of what I have written, and much more I could have written, is it presumptuous for me to address my younger brethren in the language of Paul to Timothy? "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." Or to adopt the language of the Psalmist, "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Good music, constant work, definite, purposeful preparation, a message with the hot heart of the gospel in it—I doubt if there is anything quite so satisfactory to all parties concerned.

MEETING OF THE GENERAL HOSPITAL BOARD AND OF THE HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION.

The General Hospital Board held its annual meeting in St. Louis, April 16. The Board members were the guests of Barnes Hospital for lunch, and were shown through that large and famous institution.

The report of the General Secretary, Dr. Charles C. Jarrell, showed that all the Annual Conferences had been visited but two; that the hospitals had been beneficiaries of the labors of both the secretaries in various ways, and much other field work had been done by them in the busy year just closed.

The exhibit of the work done in the office shows that this young board has rapidly acquired the strides of big business. Thirty-five thousand letters have been written, and five thousand packages of Golden Cross literature had been assembled and posted to their destination. Four hundred thousand Golden Cross buttons, one million and a quarter enrollment envelopes, and over a million and a quarter pieces of literature had gone into these packages.

The report showed that the Conference Treasurer had paid the General Hospital Board $33,508.58, or 67 per cent of its General Conference assessment.

The total Golden Cross returns for the past year were something over $56,359, according to reports reaching the General office. The total amount raised was probably greater. This sum is very much larger than that of any previous year. The North Georgia Conference was first with $13,954; Texas Conference next with $9,907.15.

The General Secretary brought out the interesting fact that the total amounts carried in Annual Conference budgets locally for Conference hospitals amount to $102,000.

The auditor's report was presented by the treasurer, Dr. F. W. Brandou, who is also Associate Secretary. This report showed that the books of the General office have been correctly kept and all moneys accounted for. The economy of the administration was evidenced by the fact that the deficit acquired during the previous quadrennium (when the Board was running on an income of $8,000) had been almost entirely wiped out, and would be by the end of the year. Other than this small deficit ($1,050) the General Hospital Board has no deficit of any kind.

The year just closed has been a good one with the hospitals. The following hospitals reported building projects concluded during the past year, or still going on:

1. Dallas Methodist Hospital opened since Christmas its great plant, worth over three-quarters of a million dollars.

2. The Methodist Hospital at Fort Worth is now rushing to completion its marvelous building, representing an investment of over one million dollars. This great hospital will open some time this year.

3. The Good Samarlian Hospital at Lexington, Ky., is just completing a building program which represents an investment of nearly three hundred thousand dollars. Their new hospital, which will open some time this spring, is a model of substantial construction and efficient adaptation to the service it is to render. The chairman of the Board, Mr. H. L. Ott, has devoted his large knowledge of building operations and big business to the progress of this institution.

4. The Montgomery Memorial Hospital completed last year a beautiful Nurses' Home, and it is now hurrying to completion a heating plant, a laundry, a Negro building, and a new hospital building on the east wing of its front line. General Steiner and his trustees are now conducting a campaign for $1,000,000 in Alabama.

5. The Methodist Hospital at Hattiesburg, Miss., during the year, entered into its splendid new hospital, which cost around $250,000. Mr. W. S. F. Tatum is giving his acquaintance with large affairs and practical knowledge to the growth of this hospital, whose history reads like a marvel.

6. The Southern Methodist Hospital and Sanatorium at Tucson, Arizona, finished in February a beautiful new building, not large enough even now, and soon to be utterly inadequate for its growing patronage.

The Golden Cross returns in nine generous Conferences not having hospital were given to this tubercular enterprise—our only connectional hospital. By this means, its life was saved in the hour of peril.

The other hospitals reported no building projects at this time, but several of them will make enlargements in the near future.

The Duke Hospital at Durham, N. C. (part of Duke University) will be one of the greatest in the nation, and will head up a chain of hospitals, fostered under the Duke Foundation in the Carolinas.

The latest Southern Methodist Hospital is the McLeod Infirmary of the Methodist Church, at Florence, S. C. The distinguished Christian surgeon, Dr. F. H. McLeod, will continue to direct this fine institution. Its capacity is one hundred and thirty-five beds. It has a Negro building, in charge of well-trained Negro nurses.

These Southern Methodist Hospitals now number ten (eleven with the Fort Worth Hospital), are worth $8,000,000, and do $350,000 worth of free service a year. They treat over 23,000 patients annually and are training a host of nurses for service in the coming years.

Barnes, Wesley, and the Methodist hospitals of Memphis and Houston are institutions that any State or church may well be proud to sponsor. The reputation of Barnes is international. May its facilities soon be enlarged.

The Board was gratified at the growth of hospital conviction in our church, and expressed its belief that while much progress has been made, the movement was yet in its infancy. The chairman, Bishop Warren A. Candler, sounded this optimistic note in his opening remarks.

The following members of the Board were present: Bishop Warren A. Candler, President; Dr. S. H. C. Burgin, Vice President; Dr. C. C. Jarrell, General Secretary; Dr. Frank W. Brandon, Associate Secretary; Dr. A. F. Smith, Dr. R. H. Harper, Mr. H. L. Ott; Mr. R. J. Guinn; Mr. M. M. McCall; Dr. G. A. Neuffer.

New Orleans was selected for the next place of meeting.

The Hospital Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met the succeeding day, April 17. A fine program was splendidly carried out by the various executives and field workers of our hospital enterprises. This Association has quickly grown to good proportions, and this meeting was far and away the best yet. The speakers kept the bell ringing all day long and into the night.

Dr. Jarrell was re-elected President, and Dr. F. W. Brandon, Secretary and Treasurer. New Orleans was selected as the next place of meeting.

WHAT MINISTERS' CONFERENCES ARE DOING.

In connection with the preparation that is being made for the forthcoming quadrennial meeting, marking the twentieth anniversary of the Federal Council of Churches, information is being assembled as to the extent of church co-operation conducted through interdenominational ministers' organizations. Every minister who reads this paragraph, who is a member of an interdenominational ministers' organization, is requested to send to Secretary John Milton Moore, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City, the names and addresses of the president and secretary of the organization with a brief statement of the inter-church activities in which it engages.

ROBERT SELBY: AN APPRECIATION.

By Q. K. Nimocks.

"For me to live is Christ; and to die, is gain."

Robert Selby was one of Nature's nohlemen, and exemplified hoth in his private life and puhlic ministry the teachings of the Nazarene whom he followed so closely and served so faithfully all his life.

It was the good fortune of the writer, who lost both his parents in infancy, to find a home with Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Selby, of Newton, Miss., and his earliest impressions are associated with this fine Christian home and family, where ties of love and friendship were formed as lasting as life itself.

Robert, the second son of this devoted coupie, was about my own age, and we grew up together as blood hrothers, with a mutual affection which neither separation nor the flight of time could erase. The happy associations of earlier years were recalled and renewed hy his visit to my home in Fayetteville, N. C. (which was the girlhood home of his mother), in the summer of 1925, the first time we had met in years. The fleeting years had not changed him, unless to ripen his powers and mellow his character. He was still the same gentle spirited, lovable Bob Selby of old. His sermon in Hay Street Methodist Church here, in the old home of his sainted mother, stirred tender memories, and moved all hearts, and he received a wonderful greeting at the close of the service.

Sprung from a long-lived ancestry as he was, and well preserved and vigorous in body and mind, with the promise of years of added life, his passing at the age of sixty-two was a great shock to me, and a sore personal hereavement as well.

Like Samuel of old, he was good from his youth up, and long before the average hoy hegins to think of his life's work, young Selby had decided to dedicate himseif to the Christian ministry, and formulated his plans accordingly.

In this worthy amhition he found ready sympathy and encouragement from his godly parents, who gladly entered into his plans and sacrificed to send him to Vanderbilt University for special training in the work he was to do. Both lived to see him an ordained minister of the Methodist church, and a worthy and honored memher of the Mississippi Conference, where he served from circuit rider to presiding elder for some forty years.

The record of that service, one of increasing power and expanding usefulness, closed on Sunday, May 6, last. While on his way to preach that day, a mortal illness seized him, and suddenly, after a short space of intense suffering, he passed away. "God's finger touched him, and he slept." The message he thought to deliver to a waiting congregation that day remained unspoken. But the life so suddenly ended that Sunday morning spoke a message more powerful and compelling for Jesus Christ than any words of man could speak, and to a far larger audience than the saddened congregation of Salem church.

Throughout his ministry he had the companionship and counsels of a devoted wife, who, with a numher of children horn to the union, and a sister and brother, survives, with a numher of other relatives and a host of friends to mourn his loss.

Loving hands hore him to his last resting place in the cemetery at Vicksburg, Miss., and tenderly laid him away, a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends paying him the last sad tribute of respect and love, and a number of his hrethren and friends in the ministry joining in touching and eloquent trihutes to his memory, as was fitting.

He died as he had wished—in haruess, while ahout his Master's business.

"How heautiful it is for a man to die
Upon the walls of Zion! to he called
Like a watchworn and weary sentinel,
To put his armor off and rest in heaven."

The memory of such a life, so gentle and pure, so true, strong and courageous, like the Christ he loved and served, will ahide as a sweet incense, refreshing all who, like the writer, knew him intimately and loved him well.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

In a study of Jesus' life it seems there are incidents that throw a richer, fuiler light upon his ministry and his personality than others. That fascinating scene of Caesarea-Philippi is one of these intensely interesting events. His withdrawal from the husy haunts of men, and seeking the lonely heights that crowned the northern shores of Gallilee, carries a significance that may well challenge our deepest study. He saw that the turbulent crowd that had witnessed so many manifestations of his power in the working of such stupendous miracles were ready to plunge the country into all the horrors of an insurrectionary warfare. If he could feed five thousand, more than five times ten thousand swords were ready to leap from their scahhards at his command. Caesar might well tremble in his palaces, if this power, so well attested, chose to direct its supreme purpose against him. But his was a broader vision; he was inaugurating a campaign that dwarfs into insignificance all other merely miiitaristic movements. With him the sword was a symbol of the spirit, not an instrument of destruction. So he left the canting Pharisee, wily Herodian, and agnostic Sadducee, for a season to their own devices. And they awaited him like unleashed hounds from their kennels, to pounce upon him at the opportune moment—when his time had come, hy the will of the Father, to he delivered into their hands.

In the fancied glory of that mighty kingdom of which the disciples hoped and dreamed they most signally failed to recognize love—all-emhracing, far-reaching love—as the one tremendous power which he impersonated. Peter's sword flashing in the torchlight of the Roman soldier, was an instrument of war; that sword sheathed at the Master's command was a symbol of a greater power than Caesar knew. Only when men learn to love God, in a measure at least, as Christ loves them will his kingdom come, with its brotherhood, its consideration, its sympathy, and its righteousness. Then will the iight which shone from the Lehanon heights, ahout the crest of his own Galilee, when he was transfigured, shine fuiiy into helieving hearts.

Comparisons are said to be invidious and not infrequently are unfair, for lack of knowledge on the part of one making them. The pioneer preacher, his life, his style of preaching, his limitations, his successes and his failures, in short, the general tenor of his personality, conduct, and ministry, are subjects for the iusatiable maw of the press. Men of every vocation persistently refuse to be classified, for no two men are alike in appearance and character. They are as varied as the coloring of a kaleidescope, yet in a few general features are alike. May we mark some of the latter?

These early preachers were desperately in earnest, no mild, soothing, mellifluous parlance issued from these Boanerges. No casuistic thinking was theirs—they thought and wrought on lines that, to them, were clear, straight, and right. The glory of their gospel lay not within the narrow bounds of human acceptance, but was a message from the court of heaven and bore the insignia and credentials of the Almighty One who had commissioned them. To him, and to him alone, were their consciences confessed. At times they seemed to court danger. The ordinary disasters, incident to their day, fire, flood and pestilence, did not daunt them, only called for the exercise of a courage born of faith, prayer and feliowship with him who held them in keeping. The mettle of these men was tempered by hardship and endurance. Oh, these men were not perfect—some were rough, uncouth, perchance, in some of the refinements of life and deportment; but they were honest, rugged and true. They believed in God, in God as Isaiah had portrayed him in majesty, power, honor and glory. And God must have helieved in them, for he signally honored their ministry, and they desired no more signai honor than to serve God and glorify him. No knight of a crusading era ever pressed the battle more ciosely to the enemy's gates than did these soldiers of the cross. And many were the victories. May we of a latter day he worthy of these fathers of our church and follow in their train!

IN FIELD AND GARDEN.

After a winter of almost unprecedented cold and snowfaii, spring is welcomed by hoth boys and girls in the great Near East Relief orphanage in Russian Armenia. One thousand two hnndred children, divided into small groups, each under the direction of a leader, cultivate their own plots which, together, cover 250 acres. The crops they will learn to handle this year include cabbages, potatoes, onions, heets, carrots, wheat, oats, corn, sunflowers, broom corn, milo, maize and summer vegetahles.

A record must be kept by each pupil giving the foilowing information about his field or garden: Date fertilized, date of preparing seed bed, date seeded, amount of seed used, cultivation practice, irrigation practice, production, average production per hectare. This work not only gives the boys and girls training in the hest methods of agriculture, but furnishes much of the food used in the orphanage.—Near East Relief Bulietin.

MOUNT SEQUOYAH.

Our Western Methodist Assembiy wiii open on June 21 with a big Temperance and Social Service School, which will iast four days, closing on Sunday, June 24.

The program is being arranged by Bishop James Cannon, Jr., and Dr. Eugene Crawford. These two great leaders of our Methodism are arranging a great program. There will be many outstanding national speakers on this program.

This conference is being arranged not only for Methodists, but for every man and woman in our country who is interested in this great question, as this is a very critical hour in the history of our nation.

It is hoped that all Anti-Saloon League workers, members of the W. C. T. U., and Temperance and Social Service committees wiii be present for this great conference.

SAM M. YANCEY, Superintendent.

Our Methodist schools in Huchow, China, are now being conducted under Chinese principals and Chinese boards of directors. These schools have been fairly well attended and finished the first half of the year in fine shape and without trouhle. Religious instruction has been given regularly, and though it has been on a voiuntary hasis the arrangement has been a success.

AN UNWELCOME GUEST.

By Edna Payson Brett.

A little April shower
Who stayed behind to play,
Did not appear, alack, alas,
Until the first of May!

The children at the party,
Cried out in sharp dismay,
"Why, you were not invited—
Please scamper away!

"We cannot have you spoiling
Our May Pole streamers gay;
Nor let you drench our dainty,
Dear little Queen of May!

"You're lots of fun in April—
Such saucy jokes you play;
But please remember never
To come the first of May!"

DADDY'S DAUGHTER.

"I wish, daddy, that I'd been a little boy instead of a little girl," pouted Mildred, looking up from the plate which she was wiping.

"You do?" laughed daddy. "Now, mother and I think it's pretty nice to have a happy, helpful little girl about the house."

"I'm happy most of the time," Mildred decided. "But you see, daddy, I don't like to do what girls do; I like to do what boys like to do."

Daddy didn't laugh that time. He only smiled as he remembered how eagerly his little daughter had watched him down at the store one morning when he was mending a clock. There was a secret back of that kind smile which Mildred never found out until one rainy Saturday more than two weeks later.

"I can't go out all day long," she sighed. "It's too rainy even to play sailor boy in the pond."

"Quite true," agreed father. "But, daughter, suppose you make your bed and help mother with the dishes. Then I shall need you at the store."

How big Mildred's eyes grew then! She had been needed at home ever so many times, but never had she been needed at the store until that rainy Saturday morning, and the store is such an interesting place.

In spite of the rain, Mildred sang as she spread her bed. She even tried harder than usual to make it look just like a frosted cake, for secrets are such fun. She knew daddy was having one down at the store, and of course as soon as she found it out it wouldn't be a secret any longer. She liked to keep wondering what the secret could be.

"Perhaps some lady is coming in to buy her little girl a ring for her birthday, and daddy wants me to keep the little girl out of the way till it's picked out, or perhaps he's going to let me watch out so that the little things won't get lost. I hope it's the watch."

But when Mildred's home tasks were done she was glad to run down to the store to learn the secret.

"Hello, daughter!" daddy greeted as she stepped up to the counter.

There was no lady and no little girl there, except of course herself.

"Hello, daddy!" Mildred answered. "What's the secret?"

"Secret? Who said anything about a secret?"

"Nobody," laughed Mildred, "but I know there is one."

Then that blessed daddy came around the counter, took his little girl by the hand and led her out into the back shop. There the very first minute Mildred saw a little table with tools and an alarm clock on it.

"Why, daddy, how can you work at such a little table?" Mildred asked.

Daddy smiled. "I couldn't," he said, "but how about you."

Mildred drew up a low chair and in much less than a minute was seated before that table, clock and tools.

"I just fit," she smiled. "Daddy, what do you want me to do?"

"That's your clock, daughter. You may do whatever you want with it."

"It doesn't go," Mildred noted. "I'll fix it."

And set to work with a will. Outside the rain was falling, but she didn't mind at all. Mildred was doing a boy's work, and she was the happiest girl in town, though really I'm afraid that poor clock never did "go" again.—Selected.

THE LITTLE TEMPLE OF THE TWENTY BELLS.

By Blanche Elizabeth Wade.

Once upon a time there was a little temple in a toy garden and the little boy who owned it called it the Little Temple of the Twenty Bells, because upon the twenty corners of the temple, which looked as though it had one roof right above another, there were twenty tiny bells.

From the Little Temple of the Twenty Bells you could see all that was going on in the garden. You could look up at the mountain behind called Fujiyama and across a little valley to another mountain and down a winding path to the small river, and you could see small figures of men and women and storks and a deer and water birds, and an owl fastened into a tree, and many such things.

One night Harold had been playing with the garden, which was on a low table in the bay-window of his nursery, and all at once, as he sat watching what was going on in the little garden, he heard the twenty bells on the temple corners begin to ring. They never had rung in the daytime, for they were made of clay like the rest of the temple. But now they tinkled a soft, Japanese tinkle.

"Hoot, whoo-oo, whoo-oo!" said the little owl up in the pine tree. "What a fine night. Just the sort of night for me to fly!" and Harold saw him fly across the valley to another tall pine near the Little Temple of the Twenty Bells.

There was a little splashing sound down on the river, and round a bend of it came the little boat that Harold had moored near a real, growing water plant. Its sail filled with the wind, and on it came till it reached the wishing bridge. There it stopped, and out came a gangplank to the shore, and off the gangplank stepped a man with a bale over his shoulder. He went up to the top of the bridge.

"I wish," said he, "to have a safe journey with this bale of silk, up the lonely path of the Temple of the Twenty Bells."

Then he went down to the shore and began to walk up the long, lonely, winding path.

"Wait a minute," said a stork that had been standing on one foot in the water. "I heard your wish, and I will make it come true across these colored sands by going with you as far as the old stone lantern where the rocks begin." Harold saw the stork walk with the man across the colored sands at some distance from the river bank. The stork bowed when the man thanked him, and went home.

"You made a wish on the wishing bridge," said the lantern, "and I will make it come true as far as my light will go." And all at once a bright light shone from the holes in the side of the lantern, and the man walked far up the path after thanking the lantern, which blinked back at him.

The light helped him to the next turn, and in the last faint rays of it he saw a deer standing.

"Your wish on the wishing bridge will come true so far as I can help you," said the deer, and walked by the man's side a long way when only starlight and moon showed the path. Then the deer had to go off into the woods, but the man saw a little tea house standing just beside the nearest tree.

A young girl came out and said, "Your wish on the wishing bridge will come true for the next mile, but have some tea to rest you." And she brought him a tiny pot of tea and a plate of rice cakes. Then she had her servant walk with the man a mile, and that brought him to the woods behind which stood the Temple of the Twenty Bells. The man thanked the servant, who went back, and all at once there was a little whir of wings, and "Whoo-oo?" said the owl. "Is it you? Your wish will come true, for I'll take you the rest of the way." And he flew low in the trees, and guided the man to the temple steps, where stood a funny little priest.

"Your present of fine silk for my temple is received with thanks," said the priest, "and for your reward you shall stay here and rest and hear the music of the twenty bells. They ring only once like this when the moon is full. Listen well, for you will hear the sweetest voice in the world."

Why, it was the sweetest voice in the whole world! It was mother's, and there she stood ready to put Harold into his soft bed!—Youth's Companion.

A FORGET PARTY.

"Did my son post that letter I gave him yesterday?" asked Ned's mamma.

Ned's hand dived into the inside pocket of his coat and brought out a crumpled letter.

"I'm so sorry, mamma!" he cried, seeing the grieved look on his mamma's face.

"I, too, am sorry," responded mamma, "as that was a letter inviting Aunt Amy to stop off here on her way home."

"Oh!" cried Ned. "And I so love Aunt Amy!"

"If you catch this mail, the letter may yet be in time," said mamma.

Ned ran off as fast as he could to post the precious letter.

Uncle Charlie knew that Ned had been forgetting again, and he thought of a plan to cure Ned of this habit.

"Ned will be eight years old Saturday," said mamma that day at teatime.

"Can I have a party with boys and girls, and plum cakes and candles?" cried Ned.

"Of course, you can," said Uncle Charlie. "I'll buy the candles—eight and one to grow on."

"I'll bake the plum cakes," said mamma.

"I'll write the invitations," said sister Nell.

"I'll make a heaping platter of fudge," laughed Aunt Amy, who, after all, had gotten the delayed letter in time.

"And I," said papa, "will send up some ice cream."

Ned danced for joy and ran off to school.

"Do you think," asked Ned at dinner Saturday, "my party will come right at 2 o'clock?"

"Well, well," said Uncle Charlie, "I forgot all about those candles."

"I've been so busy," said Aunt Amy, "that I forgot to make the fudge."

"And I," said papa, "forgot to order the ice cream. It is too bad!"

"It doesn't matter at all," said Sister Nell, "for I forgot to invite any one to the party."

Ned's face grew longer and longer, and he looked at his mamma, who had not spoken yet. Surely she had not forgotten!

"Why," laughed Uncle Charlie, before mamma could speak, "it'll be a forget party, won't it?"

This was too much. Ned burst into tears and ran to his own little room. After what seemed a long, long time to Ned, and to Ned's mamma, too, she stole upstairs with a great big piece of plum cake, for try as she would, mamma could not forget her little boy's birthday.

After that, when Ned forgot, which he seldom did, some one would say, "I guess we better have another forget party."—J. V. Roach, in Christian World.

Editorial

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL GENERAL CONFERENCE.

It is difficult at this time to summarize accurately the results of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which convened in Kansas City on May 1 and adjourned on Tuesday of this week. Some of the outstanding things are the following:

1. The appointment of a commission to consider all propositions for unification with any other church.

2. The deposition of Bishop Anton Bast, of Denmark, from the episcopacy on charges of imprudent and unministerial conduct.

3. The retirement of six bishops from active service on account of age, and the election of three new bishops. The new bishops are: Raymond J. Wade, of Chicago; James C. Baker, of Urbana, Ill.; Edwin F. Lee, of Singapore, India, as a missionary bishop. Dr. E. Stanley Jones was elected a bishop, but declined the office.

4. The adoption of a provision for the organization of Central Conferences, which would have the power to elect bishops and otherwise function as autonomous ecclesiastical bodies. This measure, involving constitutional matters, will have to be passed on by the Annual Conferences this fall and next spring. Its purpose is to give the church outside of the United States self-determination.

5. The adoption of a report authorizing the union of the Korean Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church with the Korean Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

6. The dismissal of charges against Bishop F. J. McConnell of "evil and malicious motive and immorality of administration." The charges were dismissed "as being totally without foundation in the specifications."

We thank the pastor, Rev. T. A. Ferguson, of Richton, Miss., for sending us a copy of a recent pastoral letter issued by him to his people. A fine revival meeting has recently been held, in which there were thirty additions to the membership of the church. The work of the church prospers in all departments.

Mrs. Monroe Kling, mother of Mrs. H. T. Carley, whose serious illness was noted recently, has recovered sufficiently to come to New Orleans, where she will spend the summer with her daughter. She was accompanied by her young granddaughter, Chesley Newman, who will remsin for a short visit.

Among the graduates of Millsaps College at its recent commencement was Miss Elizabeth Setzler, a young lady whom the editor of the Advocate has known from infancy, and whose father, now deceased, and mother he has counted among his best friends for many years. She is a worthy daughter of fine parents.

Mr. John R. Pepper, the always resourceful superintendent of the First Methodist Sunday school, Memphis, Tenn., prepared a unique envelope for the Sunday School Day offering this year. The envelope has five hearts printed on it, with values of $10, $5, $1, fifty cents, and twenty-five cents, with the request, "Please put the size of your heart in this envelope."

Dr. W. L. Duren, pastor of St. Msrk Methodist Church, will assist the pastor in a week's meeting at Itta Bena, Miss., beginning on June 4. Rev. R. A. Clark, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, will sail from New York on June 15 with the Wicker tours for a trip to Europe and the Holy Land. He will be gone about three months. Brother Clark attended the meeting of the Millsaps College Alumni Associstion last week—the first he has attended in twenty-seven years. He was graduated with the class of 1901.

One of the finest reference books that we know anything about is the "Blue Book of Southern Progress," issued annually by the Manufacturers Record, Baltimore, Md. It is a treasury of information concerning the progress of the South from the standpoint of the South itself. It is accurate and authoritative. The price is fifty cents—cheap enough.

Rev. R. A. Bozeman, our pastor at Farmerville, La., preached the commencement sermon for the Farmerville High School on May 20. Brother Bozeman will preach in a union tabernacle meeting with Rev. O. C. Cooper at Farmerville, beginning on the second Sunday in June. The music will be in charge of Prof. Frank Cheek, of Baylor University.

Rev. A. C. Johnson, Shuford, Miss., requests us to state that he has engaged Prof. H. B. Nabors to assist him with the music in revival meetings during the summer. Prof. Nabors is a personal worker as well as musician. Brother Johnson states that they have some open dates that they will be glad to have taken, either in Louisiana or Mississippi. Pastors interested should address him at Shuford.

Rev. Leon I. McCain, our pastor at Minden, La., has been much in demand this year as a commencement preacher. We learn from the Signal-Tribune of Minden that he has preached six commencement sermons for high schools this year. He was also invited to deliver an address at the Dutchtown High School, in Ascension Parish, of which he was once principal.

On Sunday evening, May 13, Mr. Carlton McCorkle and Miss Sara Murphree were married at the parsonage in Duncan, Miss., Rev. R. G. Lord performing the ceremony. Mr. McCorkle is the son of Rev. and Mrs. A. C. McCorkle, of Shelby, Miss. The young couple will make their home in Shelby. The Advocate extends to them all good wishes as they embark upon the beautiful sea of matrimony.

Dr. R. A. Tucker, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., was the commencement preacher for Birmingham-Southern College last Sunday. Dr. Tucker was graduated from the old Southern University thirty years ago. He was honored by the conferring of the degree of Doctor of Divinity by Millsaps College at its recent commencement, and a like honor was conferred upon him by his Alma Mater this week.

We have just received from the publishers, the Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn., a new book, "Christ and the New Woman." This volume contains the lectures delivered by Dr. Clovis G. Chappell before the faculty and student body of Wesleyan College, being the first series on the "S. R. Belk Lectureship" foundation. We have not yet had time to read it—but Dr. Clovis Chappell always writes interestingly and helpfully. The price of the book is $1.25.

The auditorium at Lake Junaluska, N. C., will be renovated and improved and named the "George Stuart Memorial Auditorium," in honor of the late Dr. George R. Stuart, who was always deeply interested in the work of the Southern Assembly at Lake Junaluska. The friends of Dr. Stuart who would like to make a contribution to the memorial are invited to send their checks to Mr. F. M. Jackson, Jackson Building, Birmingham, Ala., who is treasurer of the memorial committee.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Ruston District, writes: "Please announce that Ruston District Sunday school workers are urged to attend the meeting arranged for Rev. J. O. Kim, our Korean missionary, as follows: Ruston, June 10, 8 p.m.; Homer, June 13, 7:30 p.m.; Gibbsland, June 29, 10 a. m. Brother Kim is to be our honor guest at the Sunday school conference at Gibbsland, June 29. Let us make these occasions big things for our Sunday school work."

Mrs. Barbara Lutz, mother of Dr. Albert S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, died at her home in this city on Monday night of this week. She was advanced in years, being more than eighty-five years old. She was a devout woman, full of good works, and her death was merely a translation to a better world. The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

Mrs. Emma Wyman, sister of Mr. S. H. Meyer, of this city, died in Shreveport the latter part of last week. She was a devoted member of Noel Memorial Methodist Church. The funeral services were held in Shreveport by her pastor, Rev. A. C. Scott, and Dr. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the Shreveport District. The body was brought to New Orleans for interment, the service at the grave being conducted by Dr. J. B. Mitchell, pastor of Rayne Memorial. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones and friends.

Several years ago, the Hattiesburg District Conference arranged to send quite a number of Advocates to the Mississippi Sanatorium for the benefit of the patients there. This club has been continued annually, the funds being provided this year by the Hattiesburg District Conference through K. T. Moore, and the Vicksburg District Conference through Rev. J. B. Cain. Rev. W. M. Williams, pastor at Magee, who renders a very fine service at the Santatorium, has also always taken great interest in seeing that the Advocate is furnished to that great institution.

ADDITIONAL CLUBS.

Since the previous report, the following have sent club subscriptions to the Advocate:

Mississippi Conference.

Rev. H. C. Castles, Madison, 51.

Louisiana Conference.

Rev. E. V. Duplantis, Sicily Island, 25.

The club offer expires on June 1. We are grateful to the brethren who have taken advantage of this opportunity to circulate the church paper more largely among their people. We pray that the Advocate may be a blessing in every home into which it goes.

A SUGGESTION TO LAYMEN.

One of the best opportunities for preachers which this year offers is that of Seashore Pastors' and Divinity Schools, to be held simultaneously, at Seashore Camp Ground, Biloxi, Miss., June 18 to 29.

There will be courses of study provided for preachers of all ages and classes: For undergraduates, a course for applicants for admission on trial, and a course for each of the four years of study required by the Discipline; and for post-graduate study, and also for laymen, there will be four splendid courses, full of instruction and help.

The platform addresses will be of the highest order, as Dr. Leander S. Keyser, Professor of Systematic Theology in the Hamma Divinity School, Wittenberg College, Springfield, O., and Dr. J. A. Faulkner, of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J., each a master in his line, will give the addresses.

Good laymen, I know of no kinder thing you could do for your pastor, or better investment to make for your charge than to give that pastor a vacation for this time, June 18 to 29, and sufficient money to pay all expense of attending, and make sure thereby that he does not miss this helpful opportunity. You can easily do this, which will be a joy to him, and will come back to your charge in blessed increase of service.

The expense is small: A fee of $2.50 per session, board and lodging on the Camp Grounds for as little as $1.50 a day, or at The White House, one of the choicest hotels, for $2.50 the day. Railroad cost you can inquire at your station.

And remember, the four postgraduate courses of study are also for you good laymen. A blessing awaits you there.

"A hint to the wise is sufficient."

JOHN NOEL LIPSCOMB, son of William Lipscomb and Ann Elizabeth Norwood, of East Feliciana Parish, passed to his heavenly reward on Jan. 7, 1927. He was 87 years and 8 months oid, having been born in May, 1840. Mr. Lipscomb graduated from Centenary College in 1860 and served in the Civil War in the Confederate army. He was married twice, the first time to Eurola Collins, on June 2, 1861. Of this union there survive four sons and twelve grandchildren. His first wife died May 18, 1888. The second marriage was to Ciara Montgomery, who, with two sons, survives. Mr. Lipscomb united with the Methodist church in his early years, and lived a consistent and devoted life. He was one of the most dignified and courteous gentlemen that it has been the pleasure of the writer to know. His interest in the work of the church was unabating. His family always was one of the outstanding adornments of his home. When by reason of years he couid no longer read the printed word, he would call upon one of the members of the household to read, after which he wouid lead the family prayers. Brother Lipscomb was an official member of the church, being steward and recording steward for many years. His life and example are a beacon light to his devoted children and neighbors. God took him to himseif and we mourn, but hope to meet again. Interment was made in Roselawn cemetery, Baton Rouge, a beautiful piace of perpetual care. Rev. A. M. Winn, pastor at Zachary, conducted the services at the family residence, while the tears of oid friends spoke far better than words the esteem and love they felt. Four sons, one grandson, and one neighbor were the palibearers.

Rest from thy ioved employ,
The battle is fought,
The victory is won,
You have enterd the Master's joy."

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of respect of the Adult Bible ciass of the Ridgeland Methodist church:

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to cali home our brother and friend, D. H. HILL; and,

Whereas, Mr. Hili has in the few years he was a member of this ciass endeared himseif to the church as a whole, and more especialiy to this class; and,

Whereas, his iife was lived in service to his feliow-men; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Adult Bibie class of Ridgeiand, do hereby express our sincere and heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Olive Hili, to the sons and daughters, and to other near and dear relatives and friends.

2. That we offer thanks to Almighty God for his godly iife and the priviiege of associating with him.

3. That a copy of this expression of sympathy be sent to the bereaved family, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and to the Jackson Daily News.

Signed: E. E. Tucker, teacher; L. J. Gossin, J. W. Carr, Mrs. L. M. Mooney, Mrs. Joe Jenkins, Mrs. A. S. Brown, F. P. Henderson, Mrs. L. J. Gossin, Jennie Boston, and others.

On Easter Sunday, April 8, 1928, at 12:50 o'clock, MAMIE RUTH CARNEY'S spirit left for its flight back to the God who gave it, at the Baton Rouge General Hospital, after an illness of five and one-half weeks. All that physicians, nurses, and loved ones could do was of no avaii, so her spirit left them all for a better home. She suffered untold agony. She always looked forward to Easter with great childish joy. So how fitting a day for the passing away of her mortal body, for her soul to put on immortality to await the coming of her ioved ones! She had that simple, sweet faith of a child in her God. Ali during her illness she said her prayers, and then, "Good night, mamma," in the day as weil as at night. She was 12 years, 2 months and 16 days of age. She was laid to rest in the city of Baton Rouge in the Magnolia cemetery, by her grandmother, Mrs. Emily Forsyth Melson, who preceded her to the grave nine years. She is the daughter of M. M. and S. B. Carney, of Ethel, La.; a great-niece of Rev. W. G. Forsyth, of the Mississippi Conference, and a great-granddaughter of Rev. James L. Forsyth, who for many years served in the Louisiana and the Mississippi Conferences. His obituary appeared in the New Orleans Christian Advocate Nov. 17, 1887, a copy of which is still preserved by a member of the family and can still be read distinctly. "Suffer iittle chiidren to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," can be her epitaph.

A friend,
MAMIE WHITE.

SAMUEL BANKS, son of Rev. H. M. and Mary F. Banks, was born Aprii 9, 1895, and departed this life Jan. 5, 1928. He united with the Methodist church at 5 years, and lived a devoted member tiil God called him. He possessed such a sweet, kind and gentle spirit, ali who knew him ioved him. In May, 1917, he eniisted in the army, leaving home and loved ones and gave himseif to his country, willing to face the hardships and dangers that others might be safe. He served his country tweive months, nine months of the twelve overseas. He ranked in the Thirty-second Division, and at the close was placed in the Army of Occupation and marched into Germany. Midst the evils of army life Sam held out faithfui to his God, and returned to the oid home the same clean boy he was when he ieft. On Aug. 1, 1926, he was married to Jettye Adams, of Winnsboro, La. They were striving to get started in life, but soon a dark shadow feii over the iittie home and he was cailed up higher, where all is iove. He was stricken with appendicitis and we carried him to the Riverside Sanitarium, Monroe, La., where he was operated on. As the end was near he was calm as a summer breeze, knowing he wouid soon be at rest. At the close of the day he bade fareweli to us and went to live with Jesus and his redeemed. He leaves his companion, mother, two brothers and two sisters, one half-sister and brother, besides other loved ones to mourn his going. One little sister and his father preceded him to heaven. We think as he stepped over the river and embraced his father, he uttered these words: "Home at last, papa, in answer to yours and mother's prayers." He was 32 years and 9 months old. We laid him to rest in Concord cemetery near his father. Oh! how we miss him and how sad our hearts are, but our loss is his gain. It won't be long tili we meet again.

HIS MOTHER.

MEETING OF THE ABERDEEN DISTRICT MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Aberdeen District Methodist Mniisters' Association met at Woodland church, Thursday, May 17. The song service was led by Prof. S. S. Sauls, who also sang "In the Garden." Brother W. C. Newman preached a fine sremon, using for his subject, "Atonement." At the conclusion of the sermon, Brother Newman gave opportunity for testimony as to what the Cross of Christ meant to each individual. One preacher remarked that the preaching service alone was worth the effort of his 100-mile trip to attend the meeting. You boys better come on to these meetings.

The afternoon session began with singing by the congregation. Brother Selman led in prayer. The leader then called on Brother Newman for a solo. He sang "The Old Rugged Cross," which was very pertinent to the sermon. Brother Baird presided in his usual dignified and interesting manner. W. C. Beasley acted as secretary, the secretary being host.

After the reading of the minutes and the roii cail the following program was rnedered: Topic: "Sin." 1. "What Is Sin," by W. C. Beasley and W. N. Dodds. 2. "The Remedy for Sin," by E. M. Shaw. It was thought by many that the whole progoram was even better than usual. The one outstanding feature was the open forum, including various discussions on "What Sin Is." These discussions were full of pep and inspiration and a little sprinkle now and then with information. Well, the best of ali, we feit at home, and we didn't mind giving our views. Some of our feliows waxed a iittle phiiosophical as well as eloquent, but it is believed that they will get over it. Come to the next preachers' meeting at Buena Vista. A collection was taken for the expense of the secretary.

A vote of thanks was given Brother Newman for his good sermon; to Prof. Sauls for his spiendid song, and to the ladies for providing a wholesome iuncheon.

Mrs. W. E. Weel spoke on the W. C. T. U. work, stressing the importance of the ballot, and of electing the right men to guide the destiny of the country. Rev. J. W. Thompson, pastor of Broad Street Church, added some strong thoughts along these lines, which was followed with prayer by Mrs. K. B. Allsup for the continuance of the good work done by this organization and for the proper men being elected to office. Mrs. Allsup also read the Scripture lesson, and for this chose a part of the sixty-seventh Psalm. After a hymn, prayer was offered by Rev. C. W. Wesley, pastor of the church at Purvis.

The Jubilee song, "Blow Ye the Trumpet, Blow," was sung, and was followed with a Jubilee talk by Mrs. W. J. Ferguson, who told most interestingly of her attendance at the Council meeting at Nashville. The speaker touched on the entire program, bringing out strongly the point of making Christians by contact. Another point brought out was that incorporated in the Belle Bennett Building are religion, education, service and beauty. Mrs. Ferguson covered a big subject in a delightful manner, holding the rapt attention of her audience.

After a free-will offering, the closing prayer was given by Rev. W. J. Ferguson, of Court Street Church. During an enjoyable social hour the hostess societies served a delightful salad course.

MRS. JEFF BROWN, Secretary.

SHOWER FOR PASTOR'S WIFE.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist church of Mount Olive, Miss., gave a miscellaneous shower to Mrs. J. L. Carter on Monday, after the parsonage was destroyed by fire. The family suffered a complete loss, nothing being saved but the car.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. A. S. Calhoun, who led the devotional exercises. Following a brief business meeting the ladies showered Mrs. Carter with many pretty and useful gifts. She took much delight in opening each package, and expressed great appreciation to all present for their thoughtfulness of them since their great loss.

The Society members enjoyed seeing the gifts, and assured Mrs. Carter that she and Brother Carter are held in love and esteem by the entire community. Delightful refreshments were served after the gifts had been seen by the ladies.

Brother and Mrs. Carter, with their sons, John and James, are pleasantly located at the home of Miss Johnnie Rose Gates and her father, Mr. J. P. Gates.

Plans are being made to rebuild the parsonage as soon as possible. An interesting meeting of the church members was held recently, and much interest was manifested in the plans for the new home of the pastor and his family. The building committee is as follows: Mr. A. W. Evans, Mr. J. C. Calhoun, Mr. G. L. Rawls, Rev. J. L. Carter, Mrs. E. D. Worthy, Mrs. D. G. Calhoun and Mrs. J. L. Carter.

ZONE MEETING, VICKSBURG DISTRICT.

On April 27 the Gloster Auxillary was hostess to the auxiliaries of the southern zone of the Vicksburg District. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Tucker, of Woodville. The devotional exercises were conducted by the pastor, Rev. B. M. Hunt.

The program for the afternoon on "The Jubilee" was given by Gloster. "The Scriptural Basis for the Jubilee" was discussed in an unusual manner by Mrs. Priest. He who prescribed the Jubilee of the Jews will bless our Jubilee. "The Goals of the Jubilee" was presented by Mrs. Lowry, who touched briefly on each of the four goals we are striving to attain. Mrs. Jackson brought out that we should bring the best that we have in her talk on "The Thank Offering." What a privilege is ours to see the culmination of fifty years of labor! Let us show our joy in the thank offering. A round table discussion on "The Practical Effect of the Jubilee" was led by Mrs. Hunt. The many responses showed that much good is being accomplished during this special season of reflection.

The climax of the program was the report of the district secretary, Mrs. McKeown, on the Council. In her usual pleasing manner she told of the many interesting happenings of this great meeting.

Music for the occasion was largely furnished by the young people. Two numbers, "The Rosary" and "Perfect Day," were given as a violin and saxaphone duet. A song by the Young People's Auxiliary and a solo, "Ivory Palaces," by Mrs. Hemby added much to the program.

After discussing briefly the plans of the summer, Centreville was chosen for the next meeting.

MRS. OTTIS JACKSON, Secretary.

GREENWOOD DISTRICT WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The district conference of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Greenwood District, North Mississippi Conference, met in the Methodist church at Cruger, on Wednesday, May 9. Owing to the fact that Greenwood District covers so large a territory, the conference was divided, Cruger entertaining only the members from the southern part. There were visitors and delegates from fourteen auxiliaries, with about one hundred in attendance.

A splendid program had been arranged by Mrs. Vol. Bailey, District Secretary, which was interspersed among the business proceedings, thereby eliminating the monotonous routine of reports. But the reports at this meeting were not so much of the tiresome kind, since they all had a ring of real missionary zeal and love, so dear to the hearts of all missionary women.

After the devotional for the morning session, which was led by Rev. T. E. Gregory, of Itta Bena, the forenoon was taken up with reports, readings, songs and talks by the Young People and Juniors, including an interesting talk by Miss Juanita Brown, of Sallis, Conference Superintendent of Young People's Work.

At the noon hour, a delicious plate lunch was served by the ladies of the Cruger Auxiliary.

The devotional for the afternoon was led by Mrs. John Holloman, of Itta Bena, after which reports from the Adult Societies were heard.

Among other appreciated guests and members, the conference was fortunate to have present Mrs. W. W. Wilburn, of Lexington, Conference Treasurer; Mrs. Dr. Holloman, of Itta Bena, and Mrs. R. P. Nehlett, of Kosciusko.

Mrs. Wilburn read the Annual Conference report, and also explained very distinctly the correct method of filling out report blanks.

Mrs. Holloman brought a message from the W. C. T. U. which was very timely, for there is a vast amount of ignorance along this line among the ladies who are not members of this organization.

Mrs. Nehlett told us, in part, of the proceedings of the wonderful Council meeting at Nashville. It was, indeed, a glorious meeting, and must have been a great inspiration to every one who was so fortunate as to be present.

The Jubilee work is being stressed; we rejoice over the work which has been accomplished by the Woman's Missionary Society in the past fifty

Sunday School

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent.

Last Sunday, May 20, found us en route to White Chapel. Epworth Leaguers from all parts of Alexandria District met there for a rally. I was invited by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Sudduth, to address the young people at the Sunday school hour, which was a very inspirational meeting; also to preach at the 11 o'clock service. In spite of the inclement weather, we had a large crowd for the morning service.

At the noon hour the ladies of the church served a most delicious dinner, which was enjoyed by all. Brother Sudduth and his fine congregation are to be congratulated on the good work they are putting over.

Rev. W. C. Childress, our pastor at Mansfield, writes: "We observed Sunday School Day in our school on last Sunday. It was a very fine service, and the offering amounted to about $42." He also says, he and Brother Raulins have been talking over the matter of a Standard Training School to be held shortly after the opening of the next college term. We trust that Mansfield will have a great Training School this fall.

A letter from Rev. H. W. Ledbetter states they are to have a sub-district Sunday school meeting at De Ridder on the third Sunday in July. The Leesville Standard Training School will be one of the main features at this meeting.

The Ruston District will have a district-wide Sunday school conference at Gibsland Friday, June 29. The district Sunday school officers are to be elected at this meeting. We are expecting to hear good reports on Sunday school work for the Ruston District this year.

The faculty for the Oakdale Standard Training School, which is to open at 7:30 p. m., June 3, has been secured. The members of the faculty and courses for this school are: Dr. A. S. Lutz, "The Bible" (New Testament); Dr. Cleanth Brooks, "The Spirit and Genius of Methodism;" "The Religious Education of Young People," Mrs. J. A. Bays, Beaumont, Tex.; "The Small Sunday School," Rev. C. D. Atkinson. Indications are we are going to have a great school at Oakdale. We regret very much Brother Bowman will not be with us in this school on account of illness.

The course on "Story Telling" in the Amite School will be taught by Mrs. W. W. Templeton, of Memphis. Dean and Mrs. R. E. Smith have been invited to teach in this school, Aug. 26-31.

The city of Monroe has decided on Oct. 21-26 as the date for their Training School.

We were in Shreveport and Leesville this week in the interest of the Sunday school program. In Leesville, the pastor at DeRidder, Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, joined us in a group conference in the interest of a Training School for this fall. Meeting of the board of managers will be held at De Ridder June 27, at 7:30 p. m.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The past week marked an epoch in the history of the work. Mrs. Van Alystine, president of the adolescent section of the Conference-Wide Sunday School Conference, called the adolescent workers to Jackson for a meeting to discuss plans and ways of doing the adolescent work in a worthy way. While the meeting was small, it will be far-reaching and will set the pace for other and more largely attended meetings and it impressed me that it was a worthy meeting in every way. When our volunteer workers are willing to pay the price to lay down other duties and give a day to discuss their Sunday school problems, it means a great deal. Only three Districts were represented, but the work was most helpful. We were indebted to those who attended for their suggestions. We trust that Mrs. C. C. Clark, of Lucedale, Miss., will write up the findings of the meeting for the Advocate, and thus get the decisions of the meeting before the Conference.

This past week Glendale church held a two-teacher Cokesbury School. This is the first time the elementary unit has been given in our Conference, and we trust that it has proved helpful and will be the forerunner of many such efforts on the part of various churches.

* * *

Mr. Hull has in all probability closed the most successful Cokesbury School ever held in the Conference, with Brother Broadus at Caswell Springs. He had a large group to take credit, and from the number of superintendents and general workers it ought to mean a new day in the history of that charge. It is always a great event to me when a small church has the opportunity of a training class. Nothing will take its place and nothing will pay larger returns for the same amount of effort.

* * *

Sunday School Day money is coming in slowly. We trust that every Sunday school in the Conference will observe the day in a worthy way. It is hoped that our Honor Roll will be twice as large as ever before in the history of the Conference.

Our goal for preachers taking credit in Leadership Training was 100. We have 50 to date. The last half is going to be a hard pull. I trust we can make it.

We still have a large number of Sunday schools who are not supporting Missions; and many who supported the cause last year are not doing so this year.

* * *

Pray for the work. Write to us about your Cokesbury Schools. We are sending out the schedules and information in regards to them this week. If you do not hear from us, write us right away.

Yours in Him,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

It may be rather early to make a prophecy, but it looks as though the North Mississippi Conference will lead the church in issuing Cokesbury certificates. Mohler, Sharp, and Hammontree are making a notable record. They are doing a work that will tell on the life of the church. Our aim is to give training to one or more teachers in every school, and in turn have these teachers reach the parents and children. Nothing short of universal religious education is our prayer.

The Greenville and Greenwood Districts have forty schools each. Our goal is to have these districts observe thirty Sunday School Day services in each district. So far, twenty schools have ordered programs. We are expecting the remaining schools to [illegible] attain the goal set. Some of our go[illegible] men complain about receiving so ma[illegible] letters. It is no fun to keep on writi[illegible] letters, but this is an important pl[illegible] of religious education, and if ma[illegible] letters must be written to get it do[illegible] there is nothing left to do but wri[illegible] letters. Did it ever occur to you that the Sunday school proposes to give sound religious education to all the people in the church, out of the church, big, little, old and young, rich and poor, literally to every soul? Did it ever occur to you that the Sunday school is the church carrying out the terms of the Great Commission? This is a big task with an omnipotent Lord back of it. Surely the Lord needs men and women of his mind and his spirit of sacrifice to teach all the people, all things he has commanded. ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Alexandria District heid their annual meeting at Natchitoches, La., Aprii 24 and 25, 1928. The first session was called to order by Mrs. O. E. Grant, District Secretary, at 11 o'clock on the morning of the 24th. Our Jubiiee soug, No. 294 in the Methodist Hymnai, was used for the opening hymn. Brother H. N. Brown, pastor, led the prayer. Mrs. H. N. Brown, of the hostess auxiiiary, weicomed the visiting co-workers, and Mrs. Grant responded. Mrs. J. C. Brown, of Pleasant Hiii, was eiected secretary of the conference, after which Mrs. Z. T. Gallion conducted the quiet hour. Brother Anders dismissed with prayer; then a delicious lunch was served by the Natchitoches iadies and a pleasant social hour was observed.

The afternoon session convened at 1 o'clock, with Mrs. Grant in the chair. After the song, "Lead, Kindiy Light," Mrs. V. G. Hyams conducted this session's devotional. She brought a beautiful message. Prayer was led by Mrs. Grant. The roii cail showed representatives from the Alexandria, Alexandria Young Peopie's, Boyce, Eunice, Lecompte, Marthaville, Natchitoches and Pieasant Hiii auxiliaries. The reports from these auxiliaries were good aud showed many accomplishments during the year's work. The Montrose iadies were present and told of the work done by their union organization. The Alexandria Gieaners and the Oakdale auxiliary, who were not abie to send delegates at this time, had splendid written reports. One of the main features of the afternoon ssesion was the district secretary's message, in which she outiined the work for the year. After the zone leaders' reports, we realized that our work couid not progress as it has without the zone work. Mrs. W. D. Bozone, of Aiexandria, was introduced as our new leader for zone No. 2. A compiete and interesting report of the Annual Conference, held in New Orleans, was given by Mrs. E. L. Griffin, from Boyce. Mrs. Grant announced that Brother H. B. Thomason, of Lecompte, was very iil at his home, and asked that we remember him with prayer at this time. This special prayer was led by Brother Brown. The State Superintendent of Children's Work presented her work, stressing the fact that the chiidren of to-day wiii be our citizens of to-morrow, and stressed the necessity of training our young in his service. She urged every auxiliary to keep a note book record of the work done this Jubiiee year for reference for those who are living to celebrate Centenniai Jubiiee. Brother Richardson, of the Presbyterian church, who has just returned from the Orient, told us of the missionary condition in the East. His taik was enjoyed and disclosed some interesting facts. During the business part of the session Mrs. H. N. Brown made a motion, and it was carried, that a District Board of Missions, composed of the district secretary and zone leaders, be organized for the purpose of making surveys of the district needs. Mrs. J. C. Brown dismissed with prayer.

In pianning the program, the evening session was given to the young people and children. The chiidren of Natchitoches, under the direction of Mrs. Mitchell and Mrs. Owen, rendered a very interesting program. Miss Kate Whitman, of Aiexandria, gave a splendid report of the Alexandria Young People's Auxiiiary. This is the oniy Young Peopie's Auxiliary in our district, and we were giad to have it represented by Miss Whitman and Miss Edwina Bianchard. Mrs. Ailen, of Shreveport, was our Conference guest, and gave a most vivid mental picture of the spiritual feast experienced by those who had the pleasure of attending the Jubiiee Councii this year in Nashviiie. Her description of the Belle Bennett Memorial was so complete that we had only to close our eyes to behold the wonderful structure. The evening session came to a ciose by singing our Jubiiee song, and prayer by Brother Brown.

Wednesday's meeting was called to order by Mrs. Grant at 9 o'clock. Prayer was led by Brother Anders. The Alco and Pineville ladies, who came only for the second day, reported spiendid work, with ail departments functioning in a progressive way. Mrs. Wrinkle, of Pinevilie, discussed the methods of presenting and creating an interest in the Bible and Mission studies. There was a general discussion on social service activities and any other projects undertaken in the different auxiiiaries. Mrs. Powers, of Alexandria, reported on the splendid work done by the hospitai committee. She also toid of a project with colored giris at the Peabody Colored Schooi, where colored giris are being trained for more efficient service in the homes of the peopie whom they are working for. Mrs. Allen gave another inspirationai message. Mrs. H. N. Brown toid the conference of the work done by our rural worker, Miss Ora Hooper, who is now doing rural work in Baton Rouge District. The round table discussion was conducted by Mrs. T. L. Owen, of Alexandria, and at this time many of the local problems were threshed out, and as every one entered into the discussions freely, every one derived much good from the round table. The goals established for our district are: To organize the children and young people in every auxiiiary; that every auxiliary support a whole or a part of a Houma scholarship, and that every auxiliary where there are Negroes plan to work with them in some way for their welfare, have health units for them, have day nurseries and Bible classes with them. Everybody was urged to make use of literature headquarters; to study the Year Book and minutes more; to read the Council Bulletin and use it in connection with the work; to put forth every effort to make this, our Jubilee year, the greatest in the history of our missionary work. It was recommended that each auxiiiary president appoint a committee, with its Superintendent of Loc Work as chairman, to bring the nee of the district parsonage before th church, Sunday schooi and auxili of each church.

Through the committee on res tions, Mrs. H. G. Owen, Mrs. A. Lyon and Mrs. E. L. Griffin, our app ciation was extended to the Natc toches iadies for their gracious h pitaiity; to the pastor for his digni presence and co-operation; to the fl er committee for the beautiful flow and their arrangement; to Mrs. Al for her spiritual feast; to the child and adults who contributed to the s cess of the program; to the presid of the Missionary Society and her workers for the iovely iunches ser daily, and to all who contributed our comfort, pleasure and spiri upiift. The quiet hour was conduc by Mrs. Gallion, and was an inspi tion to all. No place was decided u for the next meeting. After the c ference was dismissed by Bro Brown, a deiicious innch was serv

How Much Water Should Baby Get?

A Famous Authority's Rule

By Ruth Brittain

Baby speciaiists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily caiculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other iiis of babies and chiidren such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is pureiy vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in goid.

Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

DISTRICT MEETING OF THE RUSTON DISTRICT.

The Ruston District Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society held its annual meeting at Jonesboro, La., on May 3, 1928. After an opening hymn the invocation was offered by Rev. J. F. Dring, pastor of the Jonesboro church. A very interesting and inspiring devotional was given by Mrs. R. A. Bozeman, of Farmerville, in which she placed stress on our recognition of God as our Father and of our brotherhood in Christ.

Our District Secretary, Mrs. Carolyn Dawson, made a short talk on the work of the district, the things we have already accomplished and the things we are striving for. Reports were called for from each auxiliary in the district. Out of the twenty-four auxiliaries, twenty-one were represented with an attendance of 135 members. These twenty-one auxiliaries reported 592 members, 147 subscriptions to Missionary Voice, twenty-one Bible study classes, twenty-one Mission study classes, nine organized prayer leagues, fourteen observances of week of prayer.

Two Young People's Auxiliaries with three representatives reported thirty-seven members, ten subscribers to Missionary Voice, two Mission study classes, two Bible study classes, two prayer leagues, two observances of week of prayer. Seven Epworth Junior organizations were reported with the three divisions of work.

Mrs. Dawson introduced the visitors, who added much to the pleasure of the day: Rev. R. A. Bozeman, pastor of Farmerville; Rev. J. F. Waitman, pastor of Dubach; Rev. R. V. Fulton, pastor of Clay; Rev. S. J. Starkey, pastor of Athens; Mrs. Thurman, president of the Jonesboro Auxiliary; Mrs. A. C. McKinney, of Ruston, State W. C. T. U. president. The following State officers were in attendance: Mrs. Virgil Spinks, of Ruston, president; Mrs. S. M. Collins, of Monroe, vice president; Mrs. J. B. Pollard, of Monroe, assistant corresponding secretary.

After announcements as to literature and luncheon, Mrs. Spinks made a few short remarks on the importance of each auxiliary's studying the minutes and becoming familiar with the changes required for attaining membership on the Honor Roll.

Quiet hour was conducted by Mrs. Pollard, who used as her Scripture lesson Matthew 27-28. In her talk she emphasized the fact that it was women who ministered to Christ and that he gave them a place of honor. Mrs. Pollard concluded her talk with two beautiful stories portraying the spirit of Missions. After a hymn, Rev. S. J. Starkey dismissed us for luncheon with a short prayer.

The afternoon session was opened by singing, "Jesus Calls Us," after which Mrs. Pollard spoke on some of the most important phases of our missionary work. The remainder of the meeting was most fittingly devoted to a Jubilee program. Mrs. Spinks' address on "Looking Backward" gave us a concise and interesting account of the pioneer work of our women. "Looking Forward," by Mrs. Collins, was a splendid sketch of the features of the Jubilee program.

Special features of "Our Responsibilities" were discussed as follows: "Why Organize the Young People," Mrs. L. S. Dillon; "Importance of Cultivating the Child," Mrs. J. H. Pittman; "Our Standard of Excellence," Mrs. W. F. Henderson; "Casting a Good Vote," Mrs. A. C. McKinney. Each of these numbers proved of great interest, especially Mrs. McKinney's, which was one of deeply needed instruction. A Prohibition resolution was presented and adopted by the conference.

Gibbsland was selected as the meeting place for the next district conference. A rising vote of thanks was tendered Jonesboro for their gracious hospitality.

FROM BATESVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have had such a wonderful revival here, I am sure that you and the many readers of the Advocate would like for me to tell about it. We were fortunate in securing the assistance of Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Greenwood District, to do the preaching for us, and to have Mr. Malcolm Todd, of Durant, to lead the singing. We began the meeting the fifth Sunday in April, and continued for ten days. These two brethren make a splendid evangelistic team—in fact, an ideal one. Let me tell you about them. Mr. Todd, a cousin of mine, is a student in the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Tex. He is a consecrated young man and the most satisfactory singer I have ever known. There is no vanity or "show off" in him, he is just a modest sensible young man who takes your choir and your song books and makes that part of your meeting a success.

Brother L. P. Wasson is so well known for ability, unquestioned orthodoxy, and sincerity that it is almost presumptuous for me to tell the Advocate family about him; he is fearless and uncompromising with sin and formality, and so preaches Christ Jesus that Christians yearn for holiness and sinners cry out repentantly, as they did of old, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" If all our leaders were as loyal to our church and as zealous for our Christ and had the passion for lost souls as Brother Wasson is, we would have revival fires in every church. He preaches that old-time gospel, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanses us from sin."

Now the results of the meeting: well, we had a revival in the church, men and women reconsecrated themselves to the Lord, pledged to quit such sins as cursing and drinking and worldly ways, family altars have been erected, a men's prayer meeting and another Woman's Missionary Society circle organized, and we have received nineteen members on profession of faith. We are happy.

During the revival we were honored with the presence and help on several occasions of a number of our neighboring brethren. Brother M. E. Scott, of Lambert, preached two helpful sermons, and Dr. C. M. Chapman, of Como; Brothers C. T. Floyd, of Sardis; G. W. Robertson, of Courtland, and our own popular and capable presiding elder, Rev. T. M. Bradley, were with us a number of times.

A. T. CLANTON, P. C.

P. S.—The pastors and members of the other churches in town were true yoke-fellows. Rev. J. W. Lee, pastor of the Baptist church, hardly missed a service, and Rev. C. P. Thrulkil, pastor of the Presbyterian church, was in every service until he was called to Florida.

A GOOD SOCIETY AT FLORENCE, MISS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist church at Florence held its regular meeting in the home of Mrs. W. C. Ellis, Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The attendance was fine, and every one seemed anxious to help make the Society one hundred per cent.

The delegates to district conference at Pelahatchie gave helpful and inspiring talks about the work. Mrs. T. G. Ellis told about the work of children and young people. She is Superintendent of the Young People's Society here, and I think with a little help will soon have this department one hundred per cent.

After a short business session, delicious refreshments were served by our hostess, Mrs. W. C. Ellis.

Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In the proper dose, given in the directions, it is equally effective at all ages. Elderly people will find it especially ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

REVIVAL AT FAYETTE, MISS.

My Dear Dr. Carley: We have recently closed one of the most helpful series of revival services in our church here that I have had part in during the years of my active ministry. Beginning on Sunday night, April 29, our presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, preached a strong sermon on "The Resurrection as Proof of the Deity of Christ." From Monday night until Wednesday night, May 9, Rev. J. H. Jolly preached twice each day to the spiritual uplift of all who heard him. Congregations were large at every service, more than fifty people being present at every service except one, including both Saturday and Monday mornings. The weather, though cool, was almost ideal. Attendance on the four prayer groups averaged about seventy-five daily for the whole period. Twenty-eight persons united with the church on profession of faith and a number by certificate. We had the whole-hearted co-operation of the Baptist and the Presbyterian pastors and people. Our people were not only charmed with the earnestness and sincerity of Brother Jolly's preaching, but were helped in their spiritual lives. Their expression of appreciation have been without a dissenting voice. The song services and children's prayer group were under the direction and leadership of Mr. H. L. Smith, of Ellisville. Gifted in this particular line of work and trained through a number of years of active service, Brother Smith is an excellent song leader and an efficient worker in revival services. As a soloist he sings with ease and clearness of enunciation and, best of all, with spiritual understanding. I shall be glad to have them both again in future years.

After an absence of eight years I am back in the neighborhood of my first pastorate. Much has happened in the last twelve years, and I rejoice at the progress the church has made in Southwest Mississippi in those years. Interest and activity among the young people has increased a hundredfold—really, I think much more than that. I am sure there are as many young people and children who will lead in prayer in any one of several charges now as there were in all the district, then.

We are pleasantly situated among a delightful people who try in every way to make us comfortable. We have pleasant ministerial neighbors, too. Brother Grice on the north was my neighbor last year and has been a close personal friend for years. Brothers Williams and Metcalf on the east, Morrow on the south, and Anders and Lewis on the southwest are all giving a good account of themselves, and reports from their charges are considerably above the average of former years. Brother W. W. Cammack, who lives here, and Brother J. W. Price, who lives in this county, have neither been entirely well this year, but abound in good fellowship, and are much help in the work.

This is a historic country, Methodistically and otherwise. Spring Hill church, where the first Annual Conference in Mississippi was held, was some four miles from here. The first parsonage in the Mississippi Conference was said to be at Fayette, and so far as I know we are now living on the same property. Three of the leading families in Mississippi Methodism lived in this county and have relatives here still, the Drake family, the Watkins family, and the Jones family. Three children who joined during the meeting are great-grandchildren of John G. Jones, and one child is a great-granddaughter of William B. Johnstone. On Easter Sunday afternoon Brother Anders and I held service at Christ Episcopal Church at Church Hill, and will do so each month throughout the year. This is an old historic church, organized in 1820, the present building erected in 1857. They have a record of every child baptized, every person confirmed, and every funeral conducted from the church, while we Methodist folks are often unable to find the minutes of the last quarterly conference.

Our five-year quota on Superannuate Endowmnet will be paid in full this year, thanks to the faithful effort of Brother R. R. Liddell, who has carried it forward faithfully and vigorously each year. Other causes have received and will receive faithful attention. My predecessor, Brother J. L. Smith, had labored faithfully and effectively among these people for four years, and has a warm place in their hearts still. We hope to have him come back to see us during the year.

J. B. CAIN.

MRS. PAULINE DANIEL

New Orleans, La.—"I had been suffering with feminine trouble for one year. I could not stand on my feet five minutes nor do any kind of work. I suffered with sick stomach, headache, backache and pains in both of my sides. I went to several doctors and the only thing they could see was an operation. I could not make up my mind to have it so my sister told me of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I tried it and felt better with the first bottle, so I kept on taking it. I only weighed 89 pounds when I started and a year after I weighed 138 pounds. I don't know what it is to have a pain any more." —Mrs. Pauline Daniel, 3136 Constance St.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

RELIGION.

We hear very little criticism of genuine religion—either as it is practiced or as it is preached. There is plenty of complaint about the lives of people who profess to be religious but are not, and about preaching that pretends to aim at the heart of the gospel but misses it by many a sad mile; but the man that simply and sincerely follows the teachings of the Master and obeys the laws of right living laid down in the Good Book is respected and trusted by his fellow-men; and the preacher that brings to his hearers messages of hope and comfort and the uplifting and inspiring power of a real gospel has the blessed privilege of knowing that he is a blessing to the community in which he serves.

It is not real religion that is having to fight for its life to-day, but a religion that misses the main things; that neglects the fundamentals and puts tremendous emphasis upon incidentals; that finds fault with what is, without supplying the motive and the power for attaining what ought to be. Evil is to be condemned and rebuked; but the evil-doers themselves will honor the preacher that reproves them in a spirit of transparent love. After all, it is the infinite love of God that provides us with a gospel of salvation.

THE WRONG REMEDY.

Miss Ida M. Tarbell, well known for her histories of the Standard Oil Company and the United States Steel Corporation, has an article in the June number of the Delineator in which she, writing as a convert to the National prohibition law when it was adopted five years ago, now takes the position that national prohibition is a failure, and that modification of the Volstead act is the best way to promote temperance. She cites instances that have come under her own observation as evidence that the situation is worse now than it was before prohibition was adopted.

While we do not travel about the country anything like as much as Miss Tarbell does, we do go about a little, and our experience does not at all coincide with hers. We used to see drunk people on trains and in hotels, but we very seldom see them now. A railroad conductor told us not long ago that conditions on his train—and he runs a fine one—were immeasurably better than they used to be. Without questioning the sincerity of Miss Tarbell, we seriously doubt the accuracy of her statement of facts.

But in any case, the remedy proposed by her—and many others—is fundamentally wrong. The remedy is not modification, but enforcement of the law. In practcially all the cases cited by Miss Tarbell, the violation of the law was so patent that any officer performing his duty could have stopped it at once. Practically all those who favor modification profess to be opposed to the saloon; but they have yet to tell us on what ground those who now violate the law against selling any kind of alcoholic drink would obey the law if they were authorized to sell light wines and beer. Their temptation to sell stronger drinks would certainly be as great as it is now, and the difficulty of detecting and convicting them would be infinitely greater.

This country cannot be legally half-dry and half-wet—it must be all of one or the other. It is now legally all-dry—and it must be kept that way.

SUPPORT THE ANTI-RACING BILL.

We have information to the effect that there is a fine chance to pass the anti-racing bill that has been introduced in the Louisiana Legislature. We understand that a desperate effort is being made to smother it in committee. It is probable that an effort will be made very soon to call it up for action without any action by the committee. It is important that those favoring this bill let their representatives in the Legislature know their views. Since the time is short, it is urged that voters send telegrams to their representatives urging them to vote for the bill. The greatest economic and moral evil in Louisiana to-day is the racing gamble. It is time to put it out of business.

SOME ROMAN CATHOLIC STATISTICS.

The official Roman Catholic directory for 1928 has recently come from the press. From an exchange we take the following statistics concerning the membership and activities of the church in the United States:

There are 19,689,049 Roman Catholics living in the United States, not including the Philippine Islands; this is 205,735 more than there were last year. Last year, 33,991 non-Catholics were converted and became Catholics.

Of the total number, 1,273,291 live in the archdiocese of New York, 1,250,000 in the archdiocese of Chicago. No other archdiocese has more than a million Catholics in it.

There are 2,281,837 pupils in United States Catholic day schools and colleges.

There are 18,293 Catholic churches and 25,773 Catholic priests in the United States.

Young men to the number of 14,432 are studying for the priesthood in 136 theological seminaries.

There are 615 Catholic hospitals, 147 Catholic homes for the aged, and 351 Catholic orphan asylums caring for 51,961 United States Catholic children.

BEAUTY WITHOUT MODESTY.

We don't know anything about "bathing beauty contests" except from what we read in the newspapers. These contests seem to be organized so as to enlist local, State, sectional, and national interest. The successful candidate for the honor is chosen on the basis of "beauty"—not of face and form properly clothed, but displayed in the more than semi-nude condition made possible by the modern bathing suit. There may be "beauty" in a contest of this kind to the eyes of the men who act as judges and who stare at the exhibition; but surely there is little evidence of that most beautiful of all feminine qualities—modesty. It is a poor spectacle.

SEEING AND HEARING.

Dr. William J. Mayo says that ninety-five per cent of man's information is obtained either directly by visual means or indirectly through visual training, and that hearing is second in importance only to seeing as a means of gaining information. This statement emphasizes, of course, the vast importance of making the best use of our organs of sight and of hearing. It suggests, also, that we might be better off if we would shut our eyes and plug up our ears occasionally—we see and hear some things that don't do us any good. The difference between mediocrity and genius lies largely in the power to see.

THE ABOLITION OF WAR.

War, like many other evils, cannot be wished out of the world—it will have to be driven out. It can be driven out only by nations that have come to understand what a terrible thing it really is. Nations can come to understand that only by a process of educating their people concerning the evils of war. Therefore, all those agencies that are striving to educate all the people to the point where all international disputes can be settled by peaceful means, are to be commended. It is fitting that the church, enrolled under the banners of the Prince of Peace, should do all in its power to abolish war. The Kingdom of God cannot be fully established in a war-torn world. The last war was terrible enough. If there is ever another, the horror of it cannot be imagined. Let all those that love the Lord pray and work for peace.

CHEAP SERMONS.

Not long ago we received an advertisement from a public speakers' bureau offering us the exclusive use of forty sermon outlines for the year from April, 1928, through March, 1929, for the modest sum of $8, all cash, or $10 in monthly installments. The guarantee is offered that these outlines will be sold to only one preacher in a community and that they will be mailed to the purchaser at least two weeks prior to the month in which they are to be used. We wonder if there is much demand for these outlines—they are certainly cheap enough. Yes, they are cheap; but only "cheap" preachers would have any use for them.

THE ANGELUS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Softly, gently, darkly, lightly
Falls the twilight o'er the plain,
As a tender mother nightly
Folds her child of love again.

Clear from out the tower pealing,
Filling all the air with sound,
O'er the quiet spaces stealing,
Rings the prayer bell from the town.

Signal of the day's toil ending,
Toilers drop their sickles bright,
Faith and hope in prayer blending,
Seek to find the heavenly light.

See the youth and maiden standing,
Head in meek submission bowed,
Whisper low, thy grace demanding,
Pater Noster, be this allowed.

WHAT WILL THEY DO WITH IT?

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Thousands of graduates will go forth from the colleges and universities of our country during this month of June.

It is assumed that all upon whom academic degrees are conferred have received what is called "a college education."

It has cost much to establish and maintain the educational institutions in which they have been enjoying the advantages offered in academic courses. This cost for the year 1927 is reported by the Federal Buraeu of Education to have reached nearly the sum of $500,000,000.

The report gives the figure of 975 as the number of institutions for higher learning in the United States and puts the cost of them at $480,000,000.

Of this amount the Federal, State, and city governments supplied $116,000,000, while from private benefactions the sum of $168,000,000 was derived. The students paid in tuition and other fees no more than $50,000,000, or a little more than one-ninth of the cost of the advantages enjoyed by them.

From these facts and figures it appears that the higher education in the United States is largely a matter of private benevolence, and that the young men and young women who profit by it pay little for it; and that they owe a great obligation to the general public for what they obtain. They owe very much to the Christian churches of the country; for atheists and agnostics, and their like, do little for higher education except as they are forced by taxation to support the institutions established, controlled, and conducted by the civil governments of the land.

Most of the colleges and universities of the country have been founded and fostered by the Christian churches; and a large majority of them are still owned and directed by the churches—which is an inexplicable fact if, as some would have us believe, the Christian religion is in conflict with learning, especially scientific learning. Without the endaevors and endowments of the Christian churches in the United States, science would be in a bad way among the American people.

Since the churches have done so much for higher education, they have both the right and the duty to ask what are the fruits of their investment. They are amply justified in asking "the college graduates" what they propose to do with the education provided for them at so great a cost.

There can be no little doubt that some types of education do not promote the public welfare; and there are reasons for fearing that they are becoming too common in the land.

It was evidently in view of the grounds for such fears that Hon. John J. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education, addressing the National Educational Association, said with reference to the promotion of good morals in the schools:

"If we cannot teach these virtues along with modern thought, then we had better dismantle our splendidly equipped institutions and return to the old log school house. In the words of a famous evangelist, 'I would rather have my boy in heaven learning his A. B. C.'s than in hell reading Latin and Greek.' We had better have citizens who have character and little education than citizens whose knowledge is a peril to society.

"The man who discovered that surgical instruments should be sharp made an important discovery, but much more important was the discovery that they should be sterilized. Better to have a dull knife that is clean than a sharp one that is foul.

"Germany showed us plainly the evil of education for culture and efficiency without a proper social attitude. Germany raised the efficiency of education to the nth power, but this efficiency was directed into a spring at the throat of the world and brought on an outpouring of calamity that almost destroyed civilization."

The public has a right to demand that the education for which it expends so much shall not yield evil results, but shall bring forth fruits of moral and spiritual good.

The institutions established and maintained by the Christian churches should not fail to accomplish these high and holy ends. They should be prepared even to answer with candor to their founders and with credit to themselves the question, "What do ye more than others?" And their graduates should be able to answer, "What are ye more than others?"

A godless graduate of a Christian school dishonors his Alma Mater and defeats, as far as he is able, the very end of her existence.

The education of any college graduate is a trust committed to him by the public to be devoted to the public good. His investments in it is but the smallest fraction of what others have invested in it, and this fact he should ever bear in mind. It excludes all selfishness in the use of the culture which the higher education imparts.

Sir Francis Bacon denounced selfish culture as "a depraved thing;" and so it is. It is scarcely possible to conceive of a more despicable form of depravity than that of which an educated man is guilty when he perverts his intellectual culture to his own exclusive benefit and takes no account of the duties to others which it imposes upon him.

The selfish use of money is universally and justly condemned, although frequently indulged. But the selfish use of the higher riches imparted by education is far meaner. It well deserves to be called devilish; for the most conspicuous characteristic of the devil is that he employs his diabolic intelligence for the accomplishment of the basest ends. So does the man who uses culture selfishly.

There is a culture which takes the form of strutting and posing; and it is contemptibly selfish. It is intellectual Pharisaism which thanks God that it is not like other men; withholds its sympathy from the ignorant and uncultured; and, like the priest and the Levite on the Jericho road, "passes by on the other side" of all cases of human destitution. Such vain culture is as false as it is faithless. It is a pitiful perversion of culture and a dreadful defeat of life, when as one grows more learned by study and more capable by intellectual growth he loses sympathy with the common people; becomes disdainful; affects airs of cold and heartless superiority; and refuses fellowship and friendship for all outside his clan of dauuty self worshipers. Such culture as he claims corrupts his soul and destroys his faith.

The source of much hostility to Christian faith is this selfish culture which "neither fears God nor regards man." This fact was pointed out years ago by the editor of one of the best of American magazines, who said:

"It is often noticed, with surprise and regret, that as culture comes in, faith goes out. The fact seems strange to those who think that faith, if it is a rational thing in itself, should grow vigorous and far-reaching with the rising power and deepening delicacy of the mind. 'Is it only the ignorant who have faith?' they ask; 'and must man surrender this divinest of all possessions when culture enters?' Ay, he must, if culture is pursued as an end in itself. Culture thoroughly Christianized—culture pursued for ends of benevolence—strengthens faith; but culture that ends in itself and its possessor is infidel in every tendency. The culture which is pursued for its own sake makes a god of self, and so turns away the soul from its relations—earthly and heavenly—that self becomes the one great fact of the universe. A culture which does not serve God by direct purpose, and with loving and reverent devotion, is the purest type of practical infidelity; and there are notable individual instances, even in so young a civilization as ours, in which constantly ripening culture has been a constantly descending path into Paganism."

What will our college graduates of this year do with their education? Will they use it for the honor of God and the blessing of men, or will they hold it for selfish gratification?

It might be asked what will their education do with them; for culture makes or unmakes its possessor.

Will our thousands of graduates, educated at so great a cost, be servants of men or smirks among men?

MISSISSIPPI NO LAGGARD.

By Rev. T. J. Bailey, Superintendent, Mississippi Anti-Saloon League.

Very few States in the Union were ahead of Mississippi in sentiment and legislation against the liquor octopus which had fastened itself upon these United States. This monster, so firmly entrenched behind custom and almost unlimited capital, and backed up by the United States Government, was thought by many to be invincible, but the heavy siege guns of temperance and prohibition activiey were leveled against the den of this ravenous beast with such precision of aim, such rapid and deadly fire and such desperate determination that this citadel of iniquity began to totter, indicating clearly the beginning of its end. Finally, it fell with such a thud as to throw the whole world into a state of amazement. The victors were jubilant, the vanquished chagrined and desperate.

In this great warfare Mississippi took an active and leading part. In 1886, forty-two years ago, it passed by a very gratifying majority the local option law. This was a great stride forward and lent encouragement to the battle-scarred veterans of prohibition. A further advance step was taken in 1908 when the State-wide prohibition law was passed unanimously by the House with only four voting against it in the Senate. This was an illustrious victory and put additional iron into the blood of prohibitionists for further advancement.

In the development of prohibition legislation in our State the next step was the enactment of a State wide, bone-dry law in 1913.

In the Senate the vote stood 25 for, 16 against, while in the House it was 51 for, and 28 against. The outstanding legislative act of Mississippi which gives it pre-eminence over all the other States in the Union in prohibition legislation leadership is the fact that it was the first State to ratify the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Both branches of the Legislature passed the ratification resolution within thirty minutes without a dissenting vote. This was on Jan. 8, 1918,

The fact is, our problems are one. This is true whether it be the salvation of men or the planting and cultivation of our institutions. Nor can any man stand in his pulpit and preach Jesus Christ effectively till the Spirit of that Christ is his. Here is our center of gravity. We cannot afford so to preach Him as to become castaways ourselves. We must see Him with unblinded eyes and hearts aflame. The institutions established and sacrificed for in His name must be of larger moment than our petty personalities. We are fellow citizens of a common cause, co-workers in a common cause; and we are better men, broader men, finer men, more generons men when we give and take without rancor or spite. This day also dawns.

Yes, there is a bigger, better, finer day in the offing. Here's to the man who is Christian enough to see it, man enough to work for it, Methodist enough to co-operate with others in His name.

CLOSING OF THE MISSISSPPI CONFERENCE TRAINING SCHOOL.

On April 19, 1928, at the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the Mississippi Conference Training School, I was asked, by an order placed on the minutes of said board, to write a short history of the school to be placed on the minutes of the board, also for publication.

In the year 1887, the Methodist people of this presiding elder's district, at that time known as the Forest District (now Newton), decided to locate a church school somewhere in the district; and through the influence of J. M. Pruitt, James P. Abney, W. B. Massey, Dr. R. Burton, and other leading Methodists, the school was located at Montrose, Miss.

At once the school property of Montrose was deeded to the Methodist church or Conference, a board of trustees appointed, and the church school began to function. It was run as a district school for fifteen or eighteen years; then, through the influence of Rev. W. W. Moore, who was then president of the school, the school was taken over by the Mississippi Conference, and was afterwards known as the Mississippi Conference Training School. A new brick building was erected, more land secured, and the school took on new life.

I doubt if there is a church school anywhere in the State of its kind that has done better work than this school during the forty years of its existence. Fifty-seven young men that have attended this school in whole or in part have entered the ministry—five to the Presbyterian church, three to the Baptist church, and forty-nine to the Methodist church; and as far as this writer knows, are all making good. Besides these, hundreds of men and women that have attended this school throughout the country are teaching and are in other honorable vocations of life that are helpful to humanity.

At the 1927 session of the Mississippi Conference, Rev. M. L. Burton was appointed commissioner to close out the school and dispose of the property, which has been done, and the school now will be known as the Montrose Consolidated School.

Whereas, this closes the existence of the Mississippi Conference Training School,;

Therefore, be it resolved by the Board of Trustees, That we extend to all the preachers of the Mississippi Conference and business men of said Conference our sincere thanks for their help and the religious influences that have been wielded in the school for the past forty years of its history.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

There are times when poverty is not only an inconvenience, but puts me in a half-bad humor with the fate that doomed me to be poor. Harper & Brothers, publishers, have sent me two books which if I had the money I would love to make a present of to every preacher and many laymen. The title of one of the books is, "The Scandal of the Cross," by Dr. E. M. Poteat, and the other, "The Bible Under Fire," by John L. Campbell, D.D. Reserving remarks on Dr. Poteat's book, except to say that it is a most timely and luminous treatise on the Atonement, I want to call special attention to Dr. Campbell's book, "The Bible Under Fire." It is the very book we need now to rout the arrogant Modernists and scatter the infidel to the four winds. Didn't grand old Isaiah say ages ago: "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him"—or as the margin of the A. V. renders it, "shall put him to flight!" Well, this book will surely put to flight the enemies of the Lord. When I got the book, I took my seat under the scuppernong vines to read it, and took my pencil to mark the passages that specially struck me; but I had not read far until I put up my pencil, for I saw that every page almost contained quotable passages. Let me quote one passage, and then you send and get the book and read it all:

"The tide has turned. In the realm of scholarship the battle against the Higher Criticism has been fought and won. The haughty boast of 'Scientific Methods' and 'Assured Results' no more occasion any alarm. Indeed, these expressions have become a joke. An abler scholarship has pricked the bubble. Objection after objection has been met and triumphantly answered. The records of ancient contemporary nations have been deciphered. The spade has been busy. Archeology has spoken. The stones have cried out. Manuscripts have been discovered, compared, studied and translated. The results are a vast and constantly increasing mass of evidence in corroboration of the Word of God."

Let our laymen read this book, and when their pastor returns from the university, and begins to spout his "assured results" of modern scholarship," serve the rotten sauerkraut of German skepticism, instead of the heaven-descended manna of the old gospel, he can know that he is a reverend jackass and withhold his quarterage! He may be A.M., D.D., Ph.D., LL.D., and all that; but with this book one can make his learning look ridiculous. The book, to quote the cover, is "A defense of the traditional theory of the integrity of the Scriptures." You get it and read it, if you have to sell your breeches to pay for it. That is what Erasmus did once. Who was he? Good-night!

Three churches were built last year in the Songdo district in Korea, one other planned, and two others had extensive repairs done. For the sixty-five congregations in the district there are now sixty-one church buildings, thirty-three of which are permanent.

THE LAYMAN AND THE CHURCH.

By Dr. J. M. Sullivan, Mississippi Conference Lay Leader.

The supreme challenge in a man's life is to the acceptance or rejection of the will of God. The authoritative revelation of this will is to be found in the Word of God—the Christian's Bible. The agency for the interpretation and promulgation of the will of God is the church. The supreme individually recognized call of God is to the Christian ministry, but the very position of man in human society is a challenge to seek to know and to practice the will of God in his social relations, as well as in his personal attitude toward God, and there is therefore a degree of sacredness in every vocation and profession. Hence the layman may recognize a call of God, not only in circumstances which seem providentially directed, but in the voice of the church.

Certainly if God has a purpose in his great universe of matter and force; if in the relation of our planet to the others in wonderful precision of adjustment; if in the countless natural resources available for the needs and comfort of all life; if in the laughing brook, the mountain torrent, the seas of the air; if God has a will in the lightnings that trace his glory in the clouds, or that wing the thoughts of man from continent to continent; if in the wonders of the fauna and flora of all lands —in song of birds or delicate beauty of leaf and bud and flower; if in the response of the human soul to the influences of the true, the beautiful, and the good; if in all around us and in our physical being God has a purpose, then we must agree that there is a will of God concerning our intellectual relations, our corporate obligations, and our moral responsibilities. There is a call to mass action through individual participation.

In so far as the church is an expression of the will of God, and not of that of a mere man or woman, it has a vital message, and to this it behooves us to give attention. This call is not only to repentance, and faith in Jesus Christ as a risen, living, and atoning Savior of mankind, but a call to the believer to add to his faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity. And this explicit call of the church is not only that we may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, but that "ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ," and may make your calling and election sure, "for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

The organized church is a necessity for the extension of God's kingdom on earth. It supplies the laity with the gospel ministry and with faithful expounders of the Word. It sets forth a creed, a religious platform, which should not be an invitation to narrowness and bigotry, but to definiteness and declaration of faith. It supplies the avenues for systematic worship, instruction, service, and fellowship. It has given to the world all its worthwhile ideals and been a saving factor in every nation and community. The great mission of the church is the evangelization of the world, and in the fulfillment of this mission the laity are associated with the ministry in the fellowship of the "faith once for all delivered to the saints." That is an inspiring list of salutations and references concerning lay helpers, men and women, that Paul gives in Romans 16, and Phoebe must have been a good church lay leader at Cenchreae, for she did not hesitate to take long and perilous journeys to distribute literature, and was one of Paul's most enthusiastic helpers. Again, in Paul's letter to Timothy he says: "Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, and the things which thou hast learned of me, among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men who shall be able ot teach others also." These lay helpers were recognized as of more importance and possessing larger fields of service than mere financial agents, and it is true to-day that, while a habit of cheerful liberality is sorely needed and funds are inadequate for the care of the ministry and the enterprises of the church, there is a fundamental value in the cultivation of a sense of responsibility, place, and opportunity. It has been said that "the layman will occupy his true place in the church when the church rediscovers the spiritual functions of laymen and adjusts its teachings and program of work to call out and utilize the lay forces of the church." But there is another side, and we may say that the layman will find his true place in the church when he discovers his constant need of spiritual power and his duty to adjust his life to intelligent, unselfish service to God through the church, and gives evidence of sincerity and permanency in his stand for righteousness.

The church has made great advance in its effort to mobilize the lay forces for intelligent and effective service, but there is some fundamental need that challenges the attention of every Protestant denomination to-day. The statement was recently made in the leading editorial of our official lay organ, the Methodist Layman, that "we would not be far from truth when we say that we realize no more than twenty per cent efficiency from the standpoint of the entire male constituency of the church." This is unfortunate and should be corrected. It may be due, in part, to neglect or oversight on the part of some representatives of the ministry, or to faults in the program of the church; but it is no doubt chiefly due to the character of the religious attitude and spiritual vision of the laymen themselves. What we need as laymen is not only to discover our obligation, but to appreciate our God-given opportunity, and if this is done, the laity should be encouraged and assisted by the leadership of the church. Mr. Babson has said that what the world needs to-day is "not more legislation, but more religion." Every loyal and consecrated layman will seek the sources of spiritual power and efficiency. Bible study, prayer, and worship are fundamental in spiritual culture. A knowledge of the church, its achievements and plans, is also important. A spirit of co-operation rather than criticism, of liberality rather than selfishness, of ministering rather than being ministered unto, will hasten the evangelization of the world. One of the great needs of the church to-day is an informed laity. No people will emerge from superstition until they are enlightened, no nation will prosper unless the patriotism of its citizens is born of intelligence, and the church cannot progress as it should until the great body of its membership have an interest vitalized by contact with its activities and knowledge of its affairs. This gives emphasis to the value that should be placed on the young people's organizations of the church, through which the home may be supplemented in developing early information regarding its doctrine, polity, history, influences, and life challenge. The church has long supplied its membership with a system of splendid literature, and this was never as complete as now, but it is not appreciated and utilized as it deserves to be. Until it is, vast numbers of the laity will not appreciate their full duty and opportunity in the church.

During recent years great progress has been made in the material equipment of the church, better facilities for organization and work, much having been done for physical convenience and comfort; and yet, too often, the loyalty of the body is expressed more constantly and emphatically in the provision of the equipment than in the practical use of it. The great interest shown by men and women in the church as evidenced by the recent development of large Bible classes, and further by group organizations for evangelistic effort is encouraging; but the church is suffering to-day from the indifference of a large part of its membership who seem to get no broad vision of their duty to the church or of their responsibility through it in the world. In almost every religious denomination emphasis is being put on the study and practice of Christian stewardship. If fully observed, it will fill our churches to overflowing, it will make every home where it is practiced a spiritual force in the community, it will multiply many times the possibilities of service through the church, it will add to the joy of living and extend the spiritual vision.

SOME CHANGES IN COLLEGE PRESIDENCIES

Several Southern Methodist colleges will open their fall sessions under new administrations.

Dr. George F. Winfield, who has been president of Lon Morris College, Texas, for the past [illegible] years, becomes president of Whitworth College, Mississippi. Rev. E. M. Stanton, for several years dean of Lon Morris College, will succeed Dr. Winfield as president of Lon Morris.

Mr. Edwin Kidd, who was formerly president of Kidd-Key College, Sherman, Texas, will again assume the presidency, succeeding Rev. E. Spurlock, resigned.

Centenary College-Conservatory, Cleveland, Tenn., is passing to private control and ownership, and Miss Flora Bryson, who for some time has been connected with the State Teachers College, East Radford, Va., becomes its new president.

THE SUNFLOWER MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

The Sunflower Ministerial Association met Tuesday, May 22, in the Carrollton Methodist Church, Rev. Sam E. Ashmore, pastor-host. Brother Ashmore had made all arrangements for the Association to meet in the beautiful natural park just back of the parsonage, but because of rain it was necessary to hold the meeting in the church. Between showers, however, we made a trip through the park and found much evidence that Brother Ashmore has been hard at work beautifying this wonderful piece of property.

The Association was much pleased to have Brother and Sister H. P. Lewis, of Ripley, former members of the Association, with us on this day and Brother Lewis brought a very interesting greeting to the Association. Rev. Simon Bryan of Leakesville, was also a welcome visitor.

The sermon of the day was delivered by Brother J. C. Wasson, of Acona. It was a helpful, spiritual message from I Corinthians 13:13, and delivered from a heart aflame with the love of God.

In the afternoon the discussions centered around "Prohibition." Brother George had given the subject great study and made a masterful speech. The following resolution was passed unanimously by the Association: "Resolved, That we will not vote for any wet candidate of any party for President of the United States."

The ladies of the Carrollton church assisted Mrs. Ashmore in serving a delicious and abundant buffet luncheon in the parsonage. The members of the Association demonstrated the fact that this was greatly enjoyed, and Brother George, of Biloxi, voiced the sentiment of the assembly in very eloquent and gracious words.

The new reporter was elected because the Association thought it too much to ask Brother McCafferty, the secretary, to fill that responsible position and report the meeting to the paper, because Brother McCafferty is kept busy at home with five small children gracing that delightful home. Brother J. O. Dowdie was almost elected reporter for the Association, but protested that he, like Brother McCafferty, would be too busy. It was the first intimation the Association had had that Brother Dowdie was contemplating such a step, but we are ready to congratulate him, and we will not prevent him with the strenuous duties of reporter for the Association.

The program for the next meeting is as follows: Sermon at 10:30 a.m., by Rev. M. E. Soand; Criticism of the sermon favorable and unfavorable; Selection of next place of meeting; Appointment of program committee; Lunch.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE COUNCIL MEETING.

By Mrs. Algie S. Oliver.

I see so many interesting pieces in the Mission... Voice and Nashville Christian Advocate that I ...ot refrain from adding a few words, as I have never attended any meeting that stirred my soul and filled my heart with enthusiasm and made me more determined to do a better work for my Master.

I would like to say here that it was through the generosity of three of the auxiliaries in the zone of which I am the humble leader or helper (I like the word helper better), Union, Hickory and Decatur, that I was enabled to make the trip—they paid one-half of my expenses. I shall always feel under obligations, and assure each of them that there is a warm place in my heart and a prayer on my lips for them.

I knew, but could not realize, that our woman's work was such a big thing, and that it extended over such a wide area—almost over the whole world. We in our little auxiliaries get discouraged at times and feel that we are doing so little, that we had just as well give up and quit; but were it not for the many faithful little auxiliaries, we could not have the great Council meetings such as we had at Nashville this year.

There is no question about women being able to transact business with as much ease and rapidity as any group of men that you might find anywhere. Mrs. F. F. Stephens, our Council President, is a most wonderful presiding officer.

The reports from all the fields were optimistic, and each field was represented (except possibly one or two) by one of its very own, who had been influenced directly or indirectly by those whom we have sent as a representative of our Lord Jesus, and as each nation gave its message and said that they were looking to America not only for help but as an example, I was made to shudder at the responsibility; yet we have the command, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world;" and, too, we have the assurance that we can do all things through him that strengthens us. And we have this command: "In all thy ways acknowledge him." Our friends across the seas are watching us to see whether or not we are acting our part of "Big Brother" or "Big Sister" to those of other nations.

It was my privilege to be at the dedication of beautiful Scarritt College. The building is indeed a thing of beauty. Mrs. W. J. Piggott, of Irvington, Ky., said: "We have builded a wonderful structure, building so nobly and true that all who behold it shall marvel at the work we do. And all who have shared in the making shall thrill with a feeling of pride and joy that comes from the doing of a work that shall ever abide. We have given this beautiful building to our Heavenly Father. We have laid the foundation in service, cemented by the spirit of love, and supported by the pillars of friendship. Its altars are justice and truth. We have made it a haven for the worker and a high inspiration for the youth. Yea, we have builded a glorious structure."

When we entered the beautiful Wightman Chapel, where the memorial service was held for Miss Maria Gibson, there seemed to be such a sacredness that we could all but see the spirit of those who had labored so faithfully and who had so willingly given life and service, hovering around.

I was made to feel prouder than ever of our own Mississippi Conference when I saw that Mississippi was on the Roll of Honor. I was glad I could say, "Our Scarritt." I was glad I had had even a small part in erecting so wonderful a structure.

One of the most outstanding features of the Council was the pageants, one given by the adults and the other by the children. In these pageants we were made to see the changes wrought where Christ has been preached, also some of the things accomplished. We were shown that Christians are often persecuted for Christ's sake. And yet, how true they stood!

The children's pageant showed us clearly the possibilities wrapped up in these little lives, and, too, the great responsibility that is ours of leading them to Jesus and teaching them of divine things.

I felt as I looked upon these pageants as John felt on the Isle of Patmos, that I was seeing things that I could not tell. Friends, I can tell only those who can know the impressions we received. My desire is that I may live more like Christ, that I can show his power in my life.

When I was told that I was to be made assistant to the district secretary to help with the Young People's work, I thought I would refuse to accept the work; but with the assurance that he would be with us, I consented to give as much of my time as possible to this work. We have done a great work, yet there is a greater work to be done. We must no longer consider our young people a problem, but a challenge, that will require the best there is in us to accomplish the things that should be done, and fill this great need.

I had the great pleasure of visiting with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Carruth and interesting family, also Mr. and Mrs. Chariet, for dinner, and a lovely drive over the city. These people were members of our church when we were at Summit.

The weather man gave a variety of weather. We had some days of sunshine, and then days of cloudiness and rain, and finally a perfectly lovely snow. I'm sure every one enjoyed the weather, especially we of the far South.

THE LAST RITES.

The Pacific Methodist Advocate tells of a preacher in southern Illinois who went to the home of one of his members and spent the night.

Just before bedtime he said to his host: "Brother, if you will bring me the Bible I will read a chapter; we will have a prayer, and I will go to bed."

"We have no Bible."

"Well, bring me a Testament then."

"We have no Testament."

"Well, bring me the church paper, and I will read you something out of that."

"We never take the church paper; it costs too much. Besides we never have any time to read it."

"You haven't a Bible, not even a Testament; you say you are too poor to take the church paper, and you haven't any time to read it? Brother, there is only one thing I can do for you."

So he reached into his pocket, pulled out his Discipline, and read the service for the burial of the dead.—Exchange.

WHY THE TOAD IS SO USEFUL.

Toads and frogs are often called the gardener's most valuable helpers, and they are encouraged to live in green houses as they are useful in destroying insects and vermin harmful to plant and vegetable life.

As a destroyer of bugs the toad has no equal in the animal world. The United States Department of Agriculture estimates that toads are worth $20 each per year to the farmers for the number of noxious insects, bugs and worms which they destroy. Never harm a toad. He is nearly worth his weight in gold.

The toads do not find it easy to live. They may be parched by the summer sun or crushed under plows and the feet of the cattle or eaten by birds and snakes. The plucky little toad as he hops away from his old home goes to face dangers and to do us a valuable service. Let us be as thoughtful and kind toward him as we can.

There is no truth in the fancy that toads are poisonous or that warts are produced by handling them. Treat them kindly. They are entitled to our best for their good works. Selected

"SEEING THE WEST WITH THE SUNDAY SCHOOL DELEGATES."

By Van Carter, General Secretary, Louisiana Council of Religious Eductatlon.

Pike's Peak, Manltou, Colorado Springs, Denver.

Arriving in Colorado Springs for dinner we wiil ali retire early so as to be ready for the trip to Pike's Peak on the morrow, when we wiii leave the hotel in the wee small hours of the morning for the famous sunrise trip to Pike's Peak. We travel upon the world's highest motor highway, a doubie track bouievard of easy grades which zigzags up the mountain, and within two hours we journey from the land of flowers to the land of snow, and may engage in a skirmish of snowballing 14,100 feet above the clouds. On the way up are many charming vistas of clear streams, waterfalls, forests and open country; and the quick transitlon from summer weather below to the cold of the upper spaces is a startling one. On the summit is a signal statlon and observatory. From here 60,000 square miles of scenery spread out before you. Here nature ls seen ln her grandest as well as most fantastic moods. Great mountain peaks are here—massive, gigantic—lifting themselves into the regions of perpetual snow. Here are half a dozen stupendous canons, whose rock waiis rise perpendicularly a thousand feet. Here on a snowy crest you are in the midst of a veritable wonderland.

Zebuion Pike, discoverer of the famous Peak, and after whom lt was named, after futile attempts to scale lt, deciared that no human belng could ascend to its pinnacle. Our party having come to the summit over such a magnificent highway, and seeing the cog railroad which begins at Manltou and ends on the "top of the world," climbing 7,518 feet ln its nine miles' uphill course, wili reallze that man has again done the impossible!

Our autos will return through Manitou, giving us an opportunity to visit the famous springs and the many sights close by, where may be found the wonders of canon and gorge, of dizzy helghts and awful depths, of gigantic rock-form and weird caverns, as weii as the beauties of dashing mountain stream and of peak-guarded deiis. Here are the minerai springs to which the Indians brought their sick iong before the coming of the white man; and, since the healing waters were the gift of the Great Spirit, they named their paradise, Manitou. These waters are agreeable to the taste and adapted to the cure or aiieviation of many chronic iiis. Here a $400,000 bath house, utiiizing the famous mineral waters, has been built. The town itself is beautiful, with its weli kept lawns, fountains and spring covered pavilions.

From Manitou we auto to Colorado Springs, a city of 35,000, which is surrounded by a greater number of scenic wonders than any other area on the giobe. Among the most noted are Pike's Peak, already mentioned, the Garden of the Gods, a pubiic park of 480 acres in which titanic forces have been at play and gigantic rocks have been sculptured by wind and water. Among the objects of special interest are Gateway Rocks, 330 feet high; Cathedrai Spires, and Balaneed Rock; Cripple Creek, ciustering amid smoking stacks of mines that have added miilions to the world's store of goid; South Cheyenne Canon, which for a distance of a mile and a haif, amid rock walis often 1,200 feet high, presents a succession of beautiful views, inciuding the famous Seven Falls; the Cave of the Winds, which is nature's own handiwork in the form of staiactites, stalagmites and other crystalllzed formations. This is an underground journey of one miie through caverns lighted by eiectricity, to which an admission is charged. At noon we wili leave Colorado Springs, taking a short run to Denver, where the afternoon wiii be spent in an automobile trip over the city. Those not desiring to visit Denver may remain in Colorado Springs untii our special returns to that point.

Denver is the capital of Colorado, the largest city between Kansas City and the Pacific Coast. We will be surprised to see the beautiful parks, lawns and boulevards in this famous city of the Rocky Mountains. Constant irrigation is responsible for the greesward and for the brilliant displays of blooming flowers that the lowlands cannot duplicate. By its charter the city must employ a fixed percentage of all expenditures for pubiic improvements in the purchase of park land. This gives the city a park system, connected by imposing boulevards, that will be a credit to it for all time. The city is exactly one mile above sea level, which gives it a commanding view of the main range of the Rocky Mountains, terminating with Pike's Peak on the south and Long's Peak on the north. it is the gateway to tweive nationai parks and thirty-two national mountains; thus the traveler may have access to innumerable piaces of interest and delight.

Here ends our sightseeing of the West and begins our journey homeward. The delegates will have had a most magnificent tour of America's outstanding natural phenomena and they can return to their homes realizing that just as nature is so wonderful and beautiful, just so it is the purpose of God to have man grow more and more in his image.

A STRANGE PLEADER FOR PROHIBITION AT THE KANSAS CITY GENERAL CONFERENCE.

By Rev. J. L. Decell, D.D.

Are we losing a sense of morai distinctions?

Dr. Clarence True Wilson, Secretary of the Generai Board of Temperance and Pubiic Morals of the Methodist Episcopai Church, usually a resourceful man, must have struck a lean streak at the Kansas City Generai Conference a few days ago when he hailed Jack Johnson, a notorious Negro pugilist, and had him address the General Conference on the subject of prohibition.

The Kansas City Daily Star quoted Jack as saying:

"I want you to kuow I am against whiskey, beer and ali intoxicating liquors because I don't believe liquor helps the human body at ail. To serve God you must train the mind as weil as the soul. Liquor and some other things are degrading to both the mind and the soul. I wish you success in your battie to drive iiquor out of America."

Jack was asked if he were a member of tbe church and said, "No, but I wish it mighty weii."

To say the least, it was a strange spectacle to see Jack Johnson up teliing a General Conference, "To serve God you must train the mind as weli as the soul." Horrible dictu! Has the moral law been reversed or iimited to drinking iiquor? Will Elisha's staff in the hand of Gehazi raise tbe dead now? Peter, knowing that Simon the sorcerer was not a fit instrument for communicating morai inspiration, said: "Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter; for thy heart is not right in the sight of God" (Acts 8:21). First of all, the prohibition issue is a moral quesdon. Poiiticians and scoffiaws would iike to reduce it down to a mere political opinion. Given this is a morai issue, tben program promoters should see to it that their pleaders at ieast live a morally decent life. If America must have prohibition at any price, then she wili soon be without it at every cost.

It is not objectionabie on account of Jack Johnson's color, but his character. It is more the honor for the church that he isn't a member, for he is yet engaged in the beastiy business of prizefighting. Shortly before his visit to the Conference he was knocked out of the ring at Topeka, Kansas, by Bear Cat Wright, an Omaha, Nebraska, negro. His purpose for being in Kansas City at the time he appeared before the General Conference was to fight a ten-round bout with Big Biil Hartweli, a negro pugilist of Kansas City. Press reports say that he did fight and Jack broke his hand in the sixtb round.

A pugilist of the dives, wedded to a white woman, having been a fugitive from justice, and witbal a notorious rounder, up propounding tbe doctrine of Temperance before a General Conference! It would have been reprehensible for white Jack Dempsey to have accepted such an invitation; and it is quite doubtful that he would have been invited were he married to a Negro woman.

This country needs an upstanding and high souled man for its Chief Executive, one who will enforce the laws without favor. And even had it been desirable to leave an influence to help the Negro delegates to the convention, which is to follow the Conference, to line up for a "dry" candidate, surely one of their three Negro bishops or representatives from their ninety-three delegates would have been an example more consistent with the ideals of the church and wielded a more wholesome influence in the Nation.

The cause of prohibition is a sacred one and its banner should be held aloft throughout this great Republic. But the soiled hands of Jack Johnson cannot protect the purity of its white folds nor will the example of his iow life promote the triumph of the cause.

REPORT ON THE SPIRITUAL INTERESTS OF THE CHURCH, ADOPTED BY THE GREENWOOD DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The following report on the Spiritual Interests of the Church was adopted by the Greenwood District Conference of the North Mississippi Conference at Belzonl, Miss., May 17, 1928. The conference instructed me to send the same to the Advocate for publication. The report follows:

"We, your Committee on Spiritual Interests, offer the following report:

"From the best information at hand we are convinced that there has never been greater activity on the part of the ministry in the general work of the church, manifesting itself particularly in almost a universai effort to carry out the prescribed programs, and resorting to such other plans and measures as they feei might possibly add to its effectiveness.

"That this muitipiying of machinery—this strict conformity to and dependence upon these material methods. agencies, and forces, is conducive to greater and deeper spirituaiity, we very much doubt.

"Not that the measures and methods are in themseives wrong or necessarily hindrances or impediments; but we fear there is too much disposition to depend upon tbe machine rather than upon the power of the Holy Spirit. That there is a manifest need for a deeper spirituality not only in the district, but in the church at large, is universally recognized it needs not have to be emphasized.

"Organization has its piace and is not to be undervaiued, but the best of organization, even when put into earnest operation, cannot take the place of the Holy Spirit.

"The various forms of materialism that are being dlsseminated throughout the church by numerous open and secret agencies are effecting hurtfully her sprituality much more, we think, than is generally recognized. And that which makes it all the more insidlous and baleful, is that it has its source largely in the ministry, and is by them being consciously or unconsciously disseminated.

"The mere mention of these recognized facts should, at least, make us as ministers more thoughtful and watchful and if possible more earnest and faithful in the proclamation of a clear, strong, and convincing gospei.

"To remedy these eviis and to lead our church into a deeper and more effective spirituality, we know nothing to recommend save the universally recognized need of a new, widespread endowment of power from on high; a rebaptism of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is as accessible to-day as he was to the early church. And Christ himself said: 'Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.'"

PEGGY AND RUTHIE GIVE A PARTY.

Peggy and Ruthie were blowing bubbles on Peggy's back piazza. Peggy watched a particularly lovely one float up in the crisp air—float, float, float—burst!

"Oh, dear," she sighed, dipping her bubbler into the glass of water, "bubbles are just like vacations—perfectly lovely, but they don't last long enough."

"I was going to have a party last vacation," sighed Ruthie, "but it went so quick—before I knew it almost—that I didn't have the party after all."

"I wish we could have one now," said Peggy.

"Have one what?" asked mother, coming out to shake her duster.

"A party," explained Peggy. "Ruthie was going to have one, but she didn't, and I was wishing—"

"Well, why don't you?" asked mother, her eyes twinkling. "Why don't you have a bubble party? That would be easy to get ready for, and you could have it some time this month."

"Oh, mother!" spuealed Peggy. "May I, really? And may Ruthie give half of it?"

"That's just what I meant," said mother. "And this minute isn't a bit too soon to make your plans. You may have it here, and I think six guests will about fill our little house. Now, first of all you will want to make—"

"The invitations," cried Ruthie. "And let's make them out of watercolor paper, round like bubbles, you know, and—and—"

"Oh, mother, will you paint them for us?" interrupted Peggy. "You paint so beautifully."

"No," replied mother, "I won't paint them for you." Then as she saw the hurt look in Peggy's eyes, she added with a smile, "But I'll show you how to paint them for yourselves—first, with a light wash, and then with a daintiest of rainbow colors, as if the sun were shining on them."

"And will there be a verse?" asked Ruthie anxiously.

"There surely ought to be," answered mother, "and while I am dusting the parlor you and Peggy might put your heads together and think of one."

So Peggy and Ruthie got the paper and the pencils and soon it was very still on the back piazza.

"I've thought of a line," said Ruthie at last. "'Come to our party on Saturday next.'"

"Fine!" said Peggy. "Here's another, 'Forget that you ever were troubled or vexed.'"

"'You can do it so easy by blowing a bubble,'" finished Peggy, seizing her bubbler and blowing a perfectly 'normous one.

"We'll need more bubblers," said Ruthie. "Now for the guests."

At last they decided on the six playmates they thought would most enjoy a bubble party—Edith, Gean, Paul, Robert, Belle and Albert.

"Now what shall we play?" asked Peggy. "Let's not give prizes for every game. Let's have score cards, with each game counting so many points, and give the prizes to whoever gets the highest score and the lowest when the scores are added up. We can make score cards like the invitations."

"Let's play repeaters. That is, blow a small bubble, float it, then catch it again on the end of the bubbler. A point to whoever can repeat the most times with the same bubble before it breaks. That's one game," said Ruthie.

"And we can have roller bubbles," added Peggy. "We'll get some strips, of woolen cloth or carpet. We'll need woolen or felt, because bubbles break easily on cotton. We'll choose partners. One blows the bubble, and the other catches it on the middle of the strip of cloth, and then moves the cloth up and down so that the bubble will roll on it. The score would be for whosever bubble would roll the longest. Of course, everybody would have to start at the same time."

"I have another. We'll call it surprise bubbles. It is really more of a trick than a game. It is to stick a hat-pin through a bubble or cut it with a knife, and still not break it. You can, you know, if your pin or knife is perfectly clean and you cover it with a soapy substance first."

"Monster bubbles would be fun. It needs partners. Two children stand so that the bubblers are but a few inches apart, then start to blow. You have to blow very carefully and steadily to get a big bubble."

"Why, we could have a triangular bubble by letting three persons blow at the same time," said Ruthie, thoughtfully.

"I wonder, if four blew, if we'd get a square bubble," giggled Peggy.

"We can have a lung tester," continued Ruthie, laughing at the idea of a square bubble, "just to see who could blow the largest bubble with one breath."

"Boxers you play in pairs," Peggy went on. "As soon as your bubble is blown, you put the end of your finger over the end of the bubbler to keep the air in. You don't toss your bubble off the bubbler, but try to hit your opponent's bubble with your own, and either knock it off his bubbler or break it, while yours is left whole. If you can do that you score a point."

"That's fine, Peggy. And why not choose sides, and have a point for every winner and an extra point for every one on the winning side?"

"Splendid, Ruthie! Aren't we going to have a good time, though? And wasn't it just like mother to think of something like this?"

"Yes, indeed, it was. And oh, Peggy, have you ever seen smoke bubbles? They're so pretty—the smaller ones look like pearls."

"We'll coax grandpa to make us some. He can blow the smoke in after the bubbles are well started, just by taking his pipe out of his mouth and smoking the stem of the bubbler instead."

"Let's have some circus bubbles. We blow them through hoops, you know."

"Bouncing bubbles are fun. You float your bubble, and then use a hat covered with flannel, or a woolen mitten on your hand, or even a felt hat to toss the bubble up again and again."

"Then there are supported bubbles. You put several tumblers side by side, upside down, and put a bubble on the bottom of each glass. You moisten the bottom of each tumbler with the soapy substance to keep the bubbles from breaking. A point to everybody who can put the last one on the tumblers before any of the others break."

"And we could have some toboggan bubbles. Cover an ironing board with a woolen strip, and let the bubble roll down. A point to whoever could roll the most in five minutes, and not have any break before they reach the end of the board. If you think that is too hard, give a point to whoever can roll the most down in a given length of time and have the fewest break."

"My, what a lot of games we are going to have. I never dreamed there were so many things you could do with bubbles," said Peggy. "And there are still more. We can make our bubbles dance on a tight-rope, and we can blow a chain of bubbles, and blow one bubble inside of another, and—"

"Come, girls," called mother. "Time for luncheon, and then we'll make the invitations."

"What fun it's going to be!" laughed Peggy, giving Ruthie a big hug.

You can have a bubble party, too. Ask your mother to help you.—Christian Observer.

MAKING FRIENDS WITH THE WIND.

By Kate W. Hamilton.

"Oh, dear, what a wind!" said Jean, stepping outside the door and then drawing back a little. "I don't like to go to school in such a wind."

"Oh, yes you do!" laughed mother. "Brave-hearted boys and courageous girls like things that are hard. Any one can do easy things. Do you know what this March wind is saying?"

"No, what does it say?" asked Jean.

"It sounds to me as if it were laughing and saying: 'Now, I will make all weak, easily-troubled people stay indoors to-day, but the brave folks will come out and run a race with me. I will make their cheeks rosy, I will tumble their hair, and I will try to run away with their hats, then we shall see which is the stronger.'"

"I'm not afraid to race with the wind," said Jean, and bidding a hasty good-by, she was off. "I won't go down the road, but I'll go down the hill; then it will be a sure-enough race," she told herself.

Whe-ew! went the wind, catching at her coat and sending around her a cloud of dry leaves that had held fast to the trees all winter. Whew!

"Blow away, Mr. March, I'm not afraid of you," laughed Jean, catching up a pretty little broken branch from the grass, and waving it as if it were a banner. "Why, I am one of your brave-hearted soldiers."

The spelling lesson was pretty hard that day, and Jean was almost ready to think she never could learn all those long words, and then as she heard the window near her rattle, she thought: "Hear that old wind! He is working as hard as ever, and I won't give up, either. I'll keep on belonging to his brave-hearted army."

But the hardest thing to do came a little later. The teacher thought that Jean had given a right answer in some number work, but a moment later Jean knew that she had not. Should she tell? If she said nothing the lesson would be marked perfect. "But brave hearts must be honest hearts," thought Jean, and she told the truth.

"Thank you, Jean. An honorable girl is better than a perfect lesson," said the teacher.

"I think that March wind helped me all day long," said Jean to her mother that night.—The Sunbeam.

"Now here's somethin' big—an' when I say big, what I mean is big! You there! You! Yes, you in the green necktie! C'mon up here, I'm gonna let you have it. It's a manuscript an' I know it's good because I did it myself. You pay ten cents a word for that stuff; I've seen you do it. So I'm gonna let you have this. Here' take it an' look it over. Take all the time you want, that's all right with me. Go ahead, look it over good—Ten cents a word! Lemme see. Ten cents a word by four thousand word is four hundred bucks, ain't it? Four hundred bucks! Hm! O boy what a holiday I'm gonna have on that dough this summer! Go to Europe, I guess! Get me a —— What's that? What's that? You don't want it! Five cents a word! Five times four thousand is—— what's the idea, handin' that back so soon? Ain't you gonna take it? How can you tell you don't want it? PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Eighteen conferences, schools, and camps are scheduled for this summer at Lake Junaluska, N. C.

Rev. J. R. Murff, our pastor at Kilmichael, Miss., writes that he serves a fine people and that he is happy in the work with such loyal fellow-laborers.

Rev. J. F. McClellan recently underwent an operation at the Baptist Hospital, Jackson, Miss. He stood the operation well and expects soon to he strong.

We know a preacher in the Louisiana Conference who has received as salary for the first six months of the Conference year the sum of $506.33. He has a family of seven minor children.

Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, presiding elder of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call while in the city last week on church business.

Rev. L. L. Pickett, well known throughout the church for his evangelistic work, died while attending the Middlehoro District Conference, Kentucky, on May 9, following a stroke of paralysis.

Rev. J. H. Felts, our pastor at Greenwood, Miss., was in demand for commencement sermons this year, being called upon to preach at the commencements at North Carrollton, Winona, and Jonestown.

An old-fashioned camp meeting will he held at Lake Junaluska this year, Aug. 29-Sept. 9. The preaching will he done hy Bishop Warren A. Candler and Dr. Arthur J. Moore, two services a day heing held.

We were happy to run across Rev. John L. Sutton, Jackson, Miss., on the streets of New Orleans a few days ago. Brother Sutton was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference—and Louisiana still thinks of him as "home folks."

Rev. W. P. Bailey, McCool, Miss., writes that he and his people are now worshiping in a new brick veneer church, and that all the work of the charge moves along well. We thank Brother Bailey for his co-operation in circulating the Advocate.

Lander College, Greenwood, S. C., had thirty-seven graduates this year. Dr. R. H. Bennett, the president, has had a successful administration. The sum of $150,000 has been secured on the present campaign to raise $500,000 to maintain Lander as an A-grade Institution.

Something new under the sun—the minutes of a district conference brought out in the most approved pamphlet form, well printed and well bound! So we may read the proceedings of the Baton Rouge District Conference, Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder, and Rev. J. H. Bowdon, secretary.

Dr. N. E. Joyner, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Education, was in New Orleans one day last week. He is giving his strength unreservedly to the great task in connection with the educational interests of the Conference to which he has been called.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of Scarritt College for Christian Workers, Nashville, Tenn., June 9-11. The commencement sermon will be preached by Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, and the address will be delivered by Dr. J. H. Dillard.

The Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board has engaged Miss Lois Hammett as a special worker for the French mission field this summer. Miss Hammett is a consecrated and trained teacher, a product of the Methodist Orphanage at Ruston.

A "Historical Tablet," placed on the front of the First Methodist Church, Memphis, Tenn., was unveiled on the last Sunday in May, the address being delivered hy Mr. John R. Pepper, who was largely instrumental in securing the tablet, he and Mr. John C. Ottinger having conceived and worked out the idea.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation from the trustees and faculty of Duke University to attend the laying of the first corner stone on the new campus, on Tuesday evening, June 5, at 6 o'clock. When its building program is completed, Duke will have one of the greatest educational plants in the world.

Rev. M. L. McCormick is happy in the work as pastor of the Carthage charge, Mississippi Conference, as he well may he. He has received forty-five members this year, thirty-nine of them on profession of faith, and the work generally is in good shape. Carthage is a fast-growing town, and the church is keeping pace.

The Emory University Glee Club will sail from New York on June 8 for its second summer tour of Europe. This club is said to be the finest college singing organization in America. Lawrence Chaffee, of New Orleans, and James Pollard, of Greenwood, Miss., are members of the club and will make the trip abroad.

Prof. W. A. Hearn has been appointed by Bishop Boaz to a professorship in the Bible College of Missouri, at Columbia, Mo., which is affiliated with the University of Missouri. Prof. Hearn is a member of the Little Rock Conference, to which he was transferred from the China Mission Conference.

Rev. E. L. Cargill, the pastor, announces that a revival meeting will hegin at Cotton Valley, La., on June 10, conducted by Evangelist Jimmie Smith, assisted by his wife and his singer. The services will he held in a tent, which has a seating capacity for a thousand people. Brother Cargill asks that prayer he made for a gracious revival.

Harmon L. Smith, song evangelist and young people's worker, has some open dates in July and August that he would he glad to have taken. His address is Box 62, Ellisville, Miss. He recently was with Rev. J. H. Jolly and Rev. J. B. Cain in a meeting at Fayette, Miss., and will begin a meeting with Rev. T. A. Ferguson at Ovett, Miss., next Sunday.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation from Miss Doris Hoffpauir to attend the graduating exercises of her class at the Lafayette High School on Friday evening, June 1. Miss Hoffpauir is the daughter of Rev. Louis Hoffpaulr, our pastor at Lafayette. We extend congratulations and good wishes.

Rev. Don E. Dulaney, our pastor at Bossier City, La., writes: "We have had a fine revival at Bossier City. The church has been stimulated as a result of the strong gospel preaching of Rev. W. C. Scott, of Noel Memorial. A large number of reconsecrations and ten new members on profession of faith mark some of the visible results."

We are glad to learn that John Gorton Rickey, son of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Rickey, Tallulah, La., is rapidly recovering from a recent operation for appendicitis. Miss Octavia, a daughter in this gifted family, recently won the Epworth League "Better Missions" contest in the Alexandria District, the prize heing a trip to the Mansfield Assembly.

Rev. J. L. Neill, pastor of Crawford Street Methodist Church, Vicksburg, Miss., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Moday of this week. He was en route to Southwestern University, Georgetown, Tex., where he will teach two courses in the Pastors' School. The work at Crawford Street continues to go forward under Brother Neill's leadership.

Dr. R. H. Wynn, pastor of the Broad Street Methodist Church, Lake Charles, La., was in New Orleans on Friday of last week to attend a meeting of the Legal Conference, and while here paid an appreciated call at the Advocate office. He stated that the beautiful new church at Lake Charles would probably he ready for occupancy some time this summer.

The Advocate office enjoyed a call on Monday of this week by Mr. R. S. Satterfield, Jr., and his friend, Mr. Lee. Mr. Satterfield is a son of Dr. R. S. Satterfield, Missionary Secretary of the East Oklahoma Conference, who is well known throughout the church. Young Mr. Satterfield, with his companion, is spending a few months "seeing the world."

The sub-committee to complete details in connection with extending an invitation to the General Conference to hold its next session in New Orleans, held a meeting last week to work out details. The sub-committee is composed of Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, as chairman; Rev. J. B. Peters, Rev. H. T. Carley, Mr. Charles O. Chalmers, and Mr. J. W. Relly.

Mrs. A. P. Holt, who was so active in the work of the church in Louisiana, hut who has been living in Colorado Springs for several years for the sake of her health, will spend part of the summer in Ardmore, Okla. In asking that the Advocate be sent to her new address, she speaks of her interest in the work in Louisiana, and incidentally adds that she has heen a reader of the Advocate for twenty-four years.

Official announcement has been made that Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe, Book Editor and editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, will fill the chair of Christian Doctrine, in the School of Religion, at Duke University, hegInning with the fall term this year. Dr. Rowe's work as editor of the Review has brought him recognition throughout the religious world. We predict that he will make a great teacher at Duke.

We defy anybody to beat this for tantalization:

Fish are beginning to bite. Think of a four-foot string of beautiful breem caught in one morning. White perch beginning to take nourishment. Minnows available. Gas only 21 cents and car in good running order. Quit sweating in New Orleans and come with us in a boat and feel the tug of war." Sounds just like Jim Felts—and it is. One of these days!

The editor had the privilege of preaching at Picayune, Miss., last Sunday morning. In spite of the torrential rain, there was a good congregation, which gave helpful attention to the message of the hour. The pastor, Rev. J. E. Williams, was with Rev. D. E. Vickers in a meeting at Montrose, Miss. We greatly enjoyed the hospitality of the parsonage. The work goes well at Picayune. We heard talk of a new brick church, which will greatly help the situation in this fine town.

We thank Rev. J. H. Morrow, Roxie, Miss., for three subscriptions recently sent in. The Claude Jones evangelistic party has recently held a gracious revival at Roxie, in which much good was accomplished. Brother Morrow is serving his second year in this charge, and there has been marked progress. A good amount has been paid on the Superannuate cause, about $2,000 has been raised for repairing churches and parsonage, the mission special paid in full, and the pastor's salary increased $200.

In recognition of his having prevented the lynching of two of his prisoners, Sheriff Joseph V. Bontemps, Bay St. Louis, Miss., was presented a handsome bronze medal on June 4. The medal was supplied by the Southern Commission on Inter-racial Co-operation, and was awarded by a committee composed of Governor John W. Martin, of Florida; Hon. Hugh M. Dorsey, of Georgia; Mrs. J. H. McCoy, of Alabama; Mashall Ballard, editor of the New Orleans Item, and George B. Dealey, editor of the Dallas News.

President D. B. Raulins, of Mansfield College, Mansfield, La., writes: "We have just closed the most nearly perfect commencement it has ever been my privilege to see. Beginning with the May Fete, which elicited the highest praise, it was a triumphal march all the way through to the meeting of the Board of Trustees. It would be very difficult to point out the event of highest excellence. Three of our teachers will take special training in Paris this summer. We are now getting ready for the seventy-fifth year in the work of the Mansfield College." President Raulins has done a remarkably fine piece of work at Mansfield.

The corner stone of the new Methodist church at Louise, Miss., was laid on May 23, Rev. J. T. Leggett, presiding elder of the Vicksburg District, officiating, with an address delivered by Rev. J. L. Neill. This is said to be one of the most beautiful small churches in the Mississippi Conference, and much credit is due the pastor, Rev. I. H. Sells, and his faithful and loyal people for its erection. With a membership of about 120, the church at Louise has raised over $8,000 since the overflow—and it was well overflowed. The church will be paid for on practically a cash basis. We recall the old saying, "Where there's a will, there's a way."

Rev. E. C. Driskell recently held a fine meeting at Calhoun City, Miss., where he is pastor. The Calhoun City Monitor-Herald, reporting the meeting, says: "The revival meeting at the local Methodist church, held by Rev. E. C. Driskell, pastor, during the ten days period ending last Sunday, proved a blessing to the town and awakened the interest of the people of this entire section. Large congregations gathered at each service, the attention and interest were exceptional, the music was fine, and hundreds of individuals obtained much pleasure in the fine series of sermons. Mr. Driskell is an exceptionally fine preacher. His sermons are practical, thought-provoking, and stimulating."

We again express our thanks to all the brethren who co-operated with the Publishing Committee and the Business Manager of the Advocate in their efforts to put the church paper into the homes of our people. We believe the work thus done will help materially in carrying forward all the work of the church. We do not know of a more important thing a pastor can do in building interest in the program of the church and loyalty to its work than getting his people to take and read the church organ. It will be a great day when the church paper will be found in the homes of all our people. We must continue our efforts until that goal is at least approximated.

Mangham and Faulk.

Little Creek, Mangham, and Union compose the Mangham charge. Rev. J. W. Faulk, assigned to this work by the bishop at the last Annual Conference, has taken hold in his usual capable and energetic way and is helping the whole charge forward.

At Mangham the contract has been let for a new church, which will be sufficient to meet the needs of that growing community for years to come. As is generally known, we have been without a building there for a number of years, having been making use of the Masonic Hall for all our services. In early March, plans were finally adopted and the contract let for the new building, and work is to begin on it the first day of June. The church will be a brick structure such as will furnish all needed accommodation for the Sunday school, the social functions, and the church services proper. Brother Faulk deserves special mention for bringing to pass this great achievement. Mangham will grow by leaps and bounds when the new church is opened.

Little Creek has some splendid workers, especially among the young people, and is in the heart of the Alto gas fields.

Union is one of the best churches in the district, and keeps always well up with the great program of our church.

Methodism on the Mangham charge in the capable hands and consecrated heart of Brother Faulk may well be expected to do great things.

A JUBILEE SONG.

By Mrs. Geo. S. Brown.

Glorious things of thee are spoken,
  Pioneer women of pure gold;
A half century still unbroken,
  Mission work they still unfold.—
On God's Word their work was founded,
  His command they did obey,
Far and near their voices sounded
  To the nations gone astray.

'Twas their hands the seed did sow,
  'Twas their feet the way hath trod.
'Twas their courage bid us go
  In the service of our God.
'Twas their hearts' desire to win
  All the nations o'er the sea,
And to rescue them from sin
  That brings to us this Jubilee.

Halleiujah! Praise we sing
  To our God who reigns above,
And our tribute, gladly bring
  To these women that we love.
For the influence that they wield,
  For their work from sea to sea.
For their vision and their zeal,
  We offer thanks this Jubilee.

The English Bible classes in Changchow, China, conducted by the Rev. J. H. H. Berckman, are composed of students from our Methodist schools and from government and private institutions. The members are boys and girls, young men and young women. All the work is voluntary, the students attending because they wish to do so. The Chinese workers have these Bible classes in Chinese.

MRS. G. E. CARTLEDGE was born Jan. 25, 1861, in Montgomery County, and died in Kilmichael, Miss., May 6, 1928, where she was then liviug. She was 67 years of age. She had been in poor health for several months, but was conscious of the end that was coming. She was submissive to God's plan, and resigned to his will. Mrs. Cartledge united with the Methodist church when she was a girl, and was always true to its teaching and loyal to its doctrine. She was a friend to all who would allow her to be. Her life was fully consecrated to God and was given in unselfish service to others. She was devoted to her hushand and loved her family. To know her hest was to love her. She leaves behind a hushand, two brothers, one son, a number of grandchildren, and a host of friends. She has gone from among us to a hetter world. She had finished the work that God wanted her to do. May God's richest hlessings dwell upon and ever keep those loved ones who are left behind.

Her former pastor,
G. W. ROBERTSON.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon of April 24, God called the spirit of MRS. MATTIE THOMPSON home to live with Jesus. She was the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Billie Bruner, who went to their heavenly home some years ago. Mrs. Thompson was a sweet Christian lady. She united with the Methodist church while young. She loved her church, family, and neighhors. While her suffering was great and of long duration, she bore it with patience. She called her loved ones to her bedside, and talked to them at different times, instructing them to live right. A few hours before death she had them help her sing, "In the Sweet Bye and Bye." She was ahout 46 years of age, and leaves four bright, sweet children, two of whom are small, while two are grown; a husband; three sisters—Mrs. A. B. Spradling, Mrs. Joe Ragland, and Mrs. John Morris; three hrothers—Mr. John, Mr. Jim, and Rev. W. W. Bruner, and a host of friends. To know her was to love her. Dear children, remember her last words, and live the sweet Christian life she did, and some day you will meet her around the throne of God, to part no more. Written by a neighbor who loved her.

ANDREW L. ELDER.

Andrew L. Elder, born Dec. 30, 1846, died Jan. 18, 1928, was the son of Jeremiah and Elmira Herring Elder, of Fayette County, Tenn., near where the town of Raleigh station now stands. At the age of fiften he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was ever a loyal member of the church, in doctrine aud polity, to the day of his death. On Dec. 18, 1866, he was happily married to Miss Anna Elizabeth Mims, of Cockrum, Miss. Eleven children were born to bless this union, of whom eight are living, and most of them reside in and around Cockrum, near the old parental home. His friends and loved ones laid him to rest beside his wife, who preceded him to her heavenly home by about seventeen years, in the church cemetery where many of the loved and "lost a while" sleep in Jesus—waiting for the morning to hreak in full glory when the dead in Christ shall arise and enter with him into the home where there will be no sickness, no sorrow, no heartaches, no sad farewells, no tears. May there be no hroken arc in the home circle of my old friend and hrother, in that day when the Lord shall make up his jewels!

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of respect from the second quarterly conference of the Millsaps and Ridgeland charge:

Whereas, God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call home our esteemed brother and friend, D. H. HILL; and,

Whereas, Mr. Hill was a loyal member of the quarterly conference and has endeared himself to the memhers of this charge: therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the second quarterly conference of the Millsaps Memorial and Ridgeland chrage, express our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family, relatives and frlends.

2. That we offer thanks to Almighty God for his life, which was lived in service to his fellow-man; and for our assoclation with him.

3. That a copy of this expression of sympathy he sent to Mrs. Olive Hill and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed: Mrs. F. P. Henderson, J. E. Richardson, Esther Tucker.

"That this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying,

What mean ye by these stones?

Then ye shall answer them, these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel forever." Joshua 4:6-7.

JUST as Joshua commanded the twelve men, one from each tribe of Israel, to take from the bed of the river Jordan, where the feet of the Priests stood firm, each man a stone and with these stones build a monument to commemorate the passing over Jordan—So, as our loved ones pass from our immediate presence over Jordan, should we select the most perfect, the most beautiful and the most lasting stone for the monuments we erect to commemorate their beautiful virtues and accomplishments.

"The Silk of the Trade"

Its flawless beauty, stalwart strength, and great durability, combined with its adaptability to design make it the ideal monumental stone with which to perpetuate the memory of life's greatest virtues.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

HISTORY OF CEDAR BLUFF MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

On Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1923, nine women met at the Methodist church in Cedar Bluff, and organized a Ladies' Aid Society, with Mrs. O. A. Clark, the pastor's wife, as president. Dues were fixed at ten cents a month, while meetings were to be held twice a month.

At the regular meeting on Feb. 28, a decision was reached to organize a Missionary Society as soon as the assistance of the district secretary could be secured. As she was unable to come at this time, she appointed Mrs. Thomas H. Lipscomb as her representative to meet with us and assist in the proper organization.

On April 6, with the aid and assistance of Mrs. Lipscomb, the organization was perfected. The following were chosen as officers for the first year: Mrs. O. A. Clark, president; Mrs. W. H. Stephens, vice president; Miss Thelma Stephens, corresponding secretary and treasurer; Mrs. W. R. Crouch, assistant treasurer and recording secretary.

During the five years since our organization we have lost only one member by death. Even though we have lost several members by removal, each year has shown a net gain in membership, inspiration and enthusiasm. We have sent to the Conference treasurer during this time a total of $395.25; to the Orphans' Home at Jackson, boxes valued at $104.50, and spent for local work in our church and community $456. Without a single exception we have served dinners for our quarterly conferences and zone meetings. All obligations have been met annually to district parsonage, hospital, rural work and Scarritt fund. We have also paid $12.50 on the Belle Bennett Memorial fund. All expenses of delegates to the district and annual meetings have been defrayed by the Society.

In our five years of existence we have failed to meet only three times, and then on account of sickness and inclement weather. We have one member who is an inspiration to each of us, by her eagerness for the work and her faithfulness in attendance, having missed but five meetings during the five years. The Society has had but three presidents. Mrs. O. A. Clark served for one year, Mrs. R. S. Lawson for two years, and Mrs. W. E. Caldwell for three years.

The year 1928 finds us with twenty-one members, all with a greater love for others because of our work together. Our communion with the Master has given us an insight into the spiritual needs of the people of our own land as well as the countless thousands beyond the sea, and has aroused us to our responsibility in filling that need by giving of our time, talent and money that they might get a clear vision of "the lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world" and that we might serve better him who died for all.

DISTRICT MEETING, ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

The Woman's Missionary Societies of the Alexandria District held their annual meeting at Natchitoches in the latter part of April. The churches of Alexandria, Boyce, Eunice, Lecompte, Marthaville, Natchitoches, and Pleasant Hill were represented at this gathering, and an interesting and inspirational program was rendered, while some important business was transacted.

The first session of the meeting was called to order on the morning of April 24, Mrs. O. E. Grant, district secretary, presiding. Rev. H. N. Brown led in prayer, and a welcome address was given by his wife, to which Mrs. Grant responded. Mrs. J. C. Brown was elected secretary of the conference. The quiet hour was conducted by Mrs. Z. T. Gallion. Following the closing prayer by Rev. D. F. Anders, a delicious lunch was served by the Natchitoches ladies.

The afternoon session was a very interesting one, beginning promptly at 1 o'clock. An interesting message was brought by Mrs. V. G. Hyams, taken from Miss Conde's spiritual messages at Council. The roll call followed, and some very interesting reports from various organizations throughout the district were made. The Montrose ladies were present and told of the work being done by their union organization, while similar reports came from the Alexandria Gleaners and the Oakdale Auxiliary, the last two being written reports, with no delegates present. Mrs. Grant outlined the work for the year, and then Mrs. W. D. Boznoe, of Alexandria, was introduced as the leader of zone two. Mrs. E. L. Griffin, of Boyce, gave a very nice report on the Annual Conference. Other proceedings consisted of a special prayer for Brother H. B. Thomason, of Leesville, who was very ill, and a report by Mrs. H. G. Stater, superintendent of children's work. Brother Richardson, who had just recently returned from the Orient, made an enjoyable talk, which was followed by a decision to organize the zone leaders and the secretary into a committee to make surveys as to the needs of the district.

The evening session was given to the young people and children. Miss Kate Whitman, of the Alexandria Young People's Auxiliary, gave a splendid report, while Mrs. Allen, of Shreveport, made a very pleasing talk on the Jubilee Council held at Nashville.

The meeting on Wednesday was called to order by the secretary at 9 o'clock. After prayer by Rev. D. F. Anders, the minutes of the previous meeting were read. The ladies of the Alco church, who were present only for the second day of the conference, reported that all departments of the organization were properly functioning. Mrs. Powers, of Alexandria, reported on the wonderful work done by the hospital committee and the training of colored girls at Peabody Colored School. Mrs. Brown told of the work done by Miss Ora Hooper, a rural worker of the Baton Rouge District. The round table discussion was then conducted by Mrs. T. L. Owen, of Alexandria. Resolutions for the following year were adopted to the effect that we were to organize the children and young people in every auxiliary; that every auxiliary support a whole or part of a Houma scholarship; that every auxiliary plan to work with the Negroes for their welfare; auxiliaries were urged to make use of the litera-

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Dnring the month of April, 312 credits in the Standard Training Conres and 47 in the Cokesbury course were issued to the workers in the North Mississippi Conference. Most of these credits were for Grenada College students.

The Sardis District Standard Training School had an enrollment of 56 and issued 42 credits. Three others are dne to receive office credit. There were 11 schools represented, 11 preachers attended, and one superintendent. The work was of a high type.

So far, nine schools from the Aberdeen District have sent in offerings for Sunday School Day; nine from the Columbus District, six from the Corinth District, six from the Grenada District, four from the Greenville District, five from the Greenwood District, and seven from the Sardis District. A number of schools have observed the day, but have failed to send the offering. Five Standard schools are schednled and a large number of Cokesbury schools are waiting for the small amount of money that comes from this fund. Come on, men, and help us do your work.

We have held a sufficient number of schools and have shown that it is essential to give sound religious education to make strong Christians and thus establish the kingdom of God. Our next forward step is to have something like one hundred classes tanght in th Sunday school one of these courses, preferably the Bible. These courses should be taught for credit. We have had a lot of light study, but we must urge the young people to do some real study. The school that is earnest enough to do this type of work will be sure to attract a number of people who do not respect what we are doing in many places. A number of schools are doing this kind of work already, but we should have classes taught in all the large schools and many of the small ones. It will be a great day when we abolish quarterlies and use textbooks instead.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Mr. C. M. Danneliy, Conference Superintendent of Sunday School Work in Alabama, had a fine class in "Sunday School Organization and Administration" in the recent Standard Training School at Minden. During his visit in North Louisiana he was a welcomed visitor at the preachers' meeting in Shreveport, speaking in the interest of the coming Pastors' School at Centenary College.

Commencement at Mansfield Female College in 1928 was one of the best. There were thirty-odd graduates. The meeting of the Board of Trustees was one of the best the writer has attended. The many forward recommendations from the president, Prof. D. B. Raulins, were approved. "Harmony and Co-operation" will be the slogan for Mansfield during the coming year.

Wednesday, May 30, found me at Winnfield in conference with the District Secretary, Dr. F. C. Wren, of the Minden District, and Rev. C. C. Wier, our pastor at Winnfield. There will be a South Minden District Sunday School Rally on June 22. The leaders postponed their Standard Training School until the fall, Sept. 9-14, at Winnfield.

The Natchitoches Standard Training School for 1928 will open Sunday night, June 24, with the following courses and instructors: "The Pupil," Prof. D. B. Raulins; "The Bible," Dr. A. S. Lutz; "Worship," Miss Ruth Nuttal; "Spirit and Genius of Methodism," Rev. Cleanth Brooks. The Educational Director, Rev. H. N. Brown, is hard at work to make this one of the best schools ever held.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, writes: "I am glad to know that you have made the trip to Leesville in the interest of a school there or at De Ridder. I trust that we may be able to have one that will accomplish much good."

A recent sub-district meeting in the Lake Charles District at Sulphur is reported through the press as a great occasion. We congratulate Mr. O. B. Crosier, president of the sub-district, on his first meeting.

Mr. J. H. Carter, Secretary of the New Orleans District, has called a meeting of the Board of Managers for the eighth session of the Standard Training School in New Orleans for June 3, at Carrollton Avenue Church, at 3 p. m. He writes: "Will be glad for you to be with us."

Rev. W. H. Giles, pastor at St. Mark's and Secretary of the Conference Sunday School Board, writes: "Guess you have heard that in spite of very inclement weather on the third Sunday, the Sunday School Day offerings amounted to near $400 for the city. If you have any figures on the returns from over the State, kindly let me know about it when you write me."

Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, writes: "Your card announcing the teachers for our Amite School is received. We are greatly pleased and hope to make the school a big success."

Conference Superintendent.

FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: I'm just wondering whether or not I wrote you last week. If I didn't, you will have to excuse me this time. A number of interesting events have taken place during the past few weeks. In spite of the terrible rains last Sunday, I learn that several of the district rallies were held very successfully. I am indeed sorry that it was impossible for us to hold the Ruston District rally, as our new secretary had worked so enthusiastically on it, but the inclement weather prevented the chapters in the district making the trip. Although the attendance at the Monroe District meeting was small, I hear that their meeting at Mangham was very successful.

On last Sunday night I made a trip to Nashville, Tenn., to attend a called meeting of the Field Secretaries of the different Conferences. The meeting was most helpful, and I delighted in my visit to our Central Office. The office force was most cordial to each of the Field Secretaries, and I feel greatly benefited in my State work after having had such splendid associations at headquarters. I am now anxious to give to the Leaguers the knowledge I gained in the changes made by the General Board concerning our Epworth League program, but I think you will have to be at Mansfield Assembly if you wish to benefit most in gaining information for the new year.

We are still receiving anniversary gifts. The treasurer reported $18.12 from Ruston, and $1.85 from Davis Springs. I'm anxious to know just which League will be the last to report. By the way, the nicest anniversary gifts of all were two checks of $5 each from the Hi and Senior Leagues at the Ruston Orphansge. If these dear Leaguers feel that they can observe our birthday with such a gift, I'm sure that every chapter, large or small, has the same opportunity. We are proud of our Leagues at the Orphanage, and our prayers are for their success.

We are glad to report that our Sunday school worker, Kim of Korea, who will be in Louisiana en route to the World Suuday School Convention, will be with us at our Assembly on Sunday morning.

By the time you have received this letter I trust that your registration for Assembly will have gone in to your District Secretary, so that we may give you a good room assignment. We are just so anxious to know which district will be the winner of the J. B. Grambling loving cup. Will it be your district?

The readers of the Advocate will be glad to know that the North Mississippi Conference has secured the services of Miss Katherine Bryson, of Tupelo, Miss., as Field Secretary. We welcome Miss Bryson into her new association with us.

Well, good-bye until the happy time when we shall meet at Mansfield Assembly, June 12-19.

ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Field Secretary.

A CALL TO PRAYER HAS BEEN ISSUED BY NATIONAL TEMPERANCE UNION.

As representative of the Mississippi Woman's Christian Temperance Union, we ask that all who are in sympathy with the Eighteenth Amendment, comply with the request of the national W. C. T. U. officers as embodied in the following "Call to Prayer."

Signed, Mrs. Nellie N. Somerville, State president W. C. T. U.

Mrs. R. B. Gunter, superintendent evangelistic department.

A Call to Prayer.

We are approaching a national election and political parties will assemble in national convention to adopt platforms and to name candidates for President and Vice President of the United States.

Because we believe in God's guidance and because we believe that he answers prayer, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union calls upon all Christian people to unite in prayer that these great conventions may make a positive, clear-cut declaration, pledging the support of the party and nominees to a program of vigorous and efficient enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and necessary supporting legislation; and may nominate candidates for President and Vice President who are positively and openly committed to this policy of effective prohibition law enforcement by their utterance, acts and records.

The demand for dry planks and dry candidates is supported by thirty-one temperance organizations and by Christian men and women all over the land. In purusance of this demand the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union hereby issues a Call to prayer.

First, we call upon Christian people all over the nation to pray daily until the decisions are reached that the conventions may hear this appeal and grant the request.

Second, we call upon ministers to pray on the Sunday preceding the conventions at one or both church services for this definite purpose.

Third, we call upon each local W. C. T. U. to invite all Christian people to united prayer on the next day, at least an hour being devoted to earnest, devoted prayer for God's guidance throughout the political conventions.

Our nation was begun in prayer.

The coming presidential election is vitally important. The election of a President opposed to prohibition would be a blow to prohibition in this country and throughout the world; the election of a President who observes the law himself, who really believes in prohibition and wants to make a success will help law enforcement and will help the United States to secure full benefit of a great and good law.

United prayer will avail much.

Ella A. Boole, President.

Ida B. Wise Smith, Vice President at large.

Anna Marden DeYo, Corresponding Secretary.

Sara H. Hoge, Recording Secretary.

Nellie G. Burger, Assistant Recording Secretary.

Margaret C. Munns, Treasurer, National General Office.

Mary Harris Armour, National Evangelistic Director.

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby
~Babies Have Nerves~

By RUTH BRITTAIN

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

Oklahoma Lady Gives Interesting Account of Long Use of Black-Draught In Her Home.

Sequoyah, Okla.—"I have taken Black-Draught ever since I was a child, and can recommend it as a splendid medicine for family use," says Mrs. Cora Maberry, of this place. "My mother used it, in bringing up her family, and after I had a home of my own, I continued to use it, as I thought it was especially good to give the children.

"My children did not mind taking Black-Draught, and so when they got upset with stomach spells, or were constipated, I gave them Black-Draught tea.

"If I found that they were taking cold, I was quick to start giving them Black-Draught, as it helped them to throw off the impurities which caused the trouble.

"My children are all grown now and have homes of their own, but I still keep Black-Draught in the house and use it myself when I wake up in the morning feeling dull and 'headachey', and have a bad taste in my mouth.

"Black-Draught is a simple remedy for constipation, and I prefer it to others because it is purely vegetable. I always feel better after I have taken a course of it." In use over 87 years. NC-191

after which the ladies of the Nettleton Auxillary served a splendid lunch. Their fine hosptailty and their gracious words of welcome made us all feel at home, and the meal and the social hour added much to the pleasure of the day.

The afternoon session began with the singing of the Doxology, after which our presiding elder, Rev. E. Nash Broyles, conducted the devotionals, closing with the Lord's prayer in unison.

Mrs. R. P. Nebiett, of Tupelo, Conference Superintendent of Children's Work, made a strong appeal for work among the children of our church—"the men and women of to-morrow."

The next number on the program was a round table discussion of zone work, led by Mrs. Muillns, of Amory.

We were truly fortunate to have with us Miss Julia Wasson, a returned missionary from China, home on furlough, who made a stirring appeal for her adopted country, speaking of the customs and habits of the Chinese.

Mrs. Carter, of Strong, expressed our appreciation of the hospitality extended us.

An invitation came to us from Amory to meet with them next year, was accepted, and a beautiful, touching service by four pioneer women brought the program to a close.

This part of the program was led by Mrs. Sheli, of Houstou, who spoke of her fifty years of labor in the cause of missions; Mrs. Sage followed, speaking of a still longer service; Mrs. Spratt, of Amory, told us of her love for the work, and Miss Martha Rye closed the service with an earnest prayer.

Rev. W. M. Young, of Shannon, then pronounced the benedictiou, bringing to a close a very busy, profitable and inspirational day.

A GREAT MEETING AT LAKE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We began our revival meeting here on May 6, having secured the services of Brother W. C. Swope, of Charleston, Mo., the meetlng continuing through the 20th.

Brother Swope preaches the old-time preaching. The people say it is the best meetlug ever heid here. Large crowds came to hear him and continued to come to the end.

Nine persons united with the church—persons of sterling character—and we are sure that they will be a valuable additlon to the church. But the greatest results are the huilding up and strengthening of the membership In the doctrines of the Bihle and of our church. Brother Swope is a flue expositor of the Bible—many persons had troublesome questions settled satisfactorlly.

The interest continues. At the midweek prayer meetiug and on the following Sunday talk of the meeting was heard on every side. A large congregatlon took communion Sunday.

Unlike many evangelists, Brother Swope does not make auy stipulated demands for remuneration and says nothing about it when he comes—hut he delivers the goods and takes what they are willing to give; and the people contribute gladly. M. L. WHITE.

OBITUARY.

MRS. M. T. NICHOLSON, Arizona, La., daughter of Mr. Joshua and Mrs. Barbara Winston Willis, was born in Troupe County, Ga., July 18, 1839, and died April 24, 1928, aged 89 years. She was the youngest and the last to pass away of a family of ten children. She had two brothers, Tom Willis and John Willis; a sister, Mrs. Patsy Ann Thomason, all of Arizona, La. Her father moved his family from Georgia to "Corry Place," in Arizonia, when she was nine years old. Her early school days were spent in Homer, and her college days in Minden. She left several paintings which were painted in Minden College as a mark of her talent. She united with the Methodist church at Arizonia in early girlhood, which membership she kept about seventy-five years. Her life was faithful, devout, and true. At twenty she married Mr. J. M. Malone, of Junction City, at the "Corry Place." Their children were Mrs. Eula Monk, Antioch; Mr. J. M. Malone, Arizonia. In 1865, after Mr. Malone's death, she married Mr. M. T. Nicholson, Arizonia, a brother of Colonel Jim Nicholson, one of the three greatest mathematicians in the world. Their children were Mrs. John H. Baker, Arizonia; Mr. T. B. Wilkinson, Homer; Mr. A. B. Nicholson, Dubberly. She attended her church regularly as long as she was physically able. She found it easy to practice the Scripture, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." When she was old and her steps were too feeble to visit, she greeted her many friends and relatives with a smile when they called to see "Aunt Dink," as she was called in the community. She has gone to meet her Saviour, where she never feared to tread. She is not dead, hut sleeping. We placed her in the Forest Grove cemetery, where many of her relatives lie, to sleep, but not forever.

KENDALL AND MOON AT BAY SPRINGS, MISS.

From May 9 to May 27, General Evangelist J. B. Kendall, of Lexington, Ky., and Mr. Rex J. Moon, of Terre Haute, Ind., member of the faculty of the Winona Lake, Ind., Bible Conference, were engaged in an evangelistic campaign in the Methodist church at Bay Springs, Miss.

It's a practical impossibility to write down the results of this campaign. I knew Kendall over twenty years ago. He is the truest to our particular doctrines, sticks closer to the Bible all the way through, evidences the greatest passion for souls, is the hardest worker, depends on the Holy Ghost more, and is the most earnest evangelist I have ever known. He digs and digs—and digs—and shows the people their dirty, filthy, ugly, sinful lives; yet they love him, believe in him, and he gets them to God. The first altar call he made, seventy people of all ages and classes knelt down before God, and some were definitely saved. Oh, what a sight to see such a crowd—practically all members of the church—penitently kneeling at the mercy seat! I am unable to recall now when I ever witnessed such a service. At every service after, when the call was made, penitents came forward. It was, indeed, a church revival. Out of a congregation of between four and five hundred, seven people were not members of some church; three of these came into our church.

Brother Moon is, by far, the most wonderful young people's worker and choir leader I've ever known. He works the hardest, organizes the most perfectly, gets closer to the hearts of the young people, holds up the highest religious standards, is the clearest exponent of the evils of the day, and gets more young people to commit themselves to Jesus Christ than any such worker that has ever been amnog us. He is a "wonder Christian!" And what a choir leader and singer!

Twenty-five years ago next July, God used Brother Kendall in getting the writer lined up for the gospel ministry. The last night of our services here at Bay Springs, Brother Moon called for all who would give themselves to "full-time" ministry. Our oldest son, Morelle, accepted the call. He, his mother, and I had known the secret for four or five years, but this was his first public confession of his life's work. Glad Kendall had to do with his call as well as mine. At least, thirty other young people came forward dedicating themselves to God's service in any specific field he might call them.

It's too early to speak definitely as the results of the meeting to the churches and community; but there were seventy-five professed to be definitely blessed either in conversion or reclamation, and a few are definitely seeking the baptism with the Holy Ghost. Every church in town was represented in the seventy-five professions. There was beautiful co-operation and harmony among all the churches during the revival.

Considering the seeming financial stringency just now, the finances of the meeting were highly satisfactory to the evangelists and the people. And they came very easily. We are undertaking to conserve the results of the meeting by having extra services the two weeks (three services at night each week) immediately following the close. We hope to report some gracious and happy after-effects later.

Greatly encouraged,

J. A. WELLS.

P. S. Let me say, that Rev. W. W. Nelson was able to attend most all the services and rendered much substantial aid in prayer, especially. The people of Bay Springs are coming to love and appreciate Brother Nelson and family more and more. He made no mistake in coming to Bay Springs.—J. A. W.

On our way rejoicing gladly let us go;
Conquered hath our Leader, vanquished is our foe!
Christ without, our safety! Christ within, our joy!
Who, if we be faithful, can our hope destroy?
On our way rejoicing as we homeward move,
Hearken to our praises, O thou God of Love!

—J. B. S. Monsell.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE CENTENARY COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement exercises of the one hundred and third session of Centenary College were held at Shreveport last week. It was our privilege to attend only the meeting of the Board of Trustees on Tuesday morning, the presentation of the play, "She Stoops to Conquer," in the outdoor theatre on Tuesday evening, and the graduating exercises on Wednesday morning; but we heard fine reports of the commencement sermon on Sunday morning by Dr. Paul B. Kern, and of the sermon Sunday evening by Dr. Walt Holcomb, as well as of the other features of the program.

We have been acquainted with Centenary College for a good many years, both as student and teacher, and we have attended a good many of its commencement occasions, both at its old site, Jackson, La., and at its present location, Shreveport; in our opinion, the commencement just closed was one of the greatest in recent times.

There is no question as to the interest of the people of Shreveport in Centenary. This interest is shown both by the local patronage and financial support, and by the attendance upon the public exercises of the college. At the play on Tuesday evening, the estimate of the crowd ran all the way from one thousand to two thousand—it is difficult to estimate accurately an open-air audience. We think the estimate of a thousand is very conservative. The graduating exercises Wednseday morning were held in the Strand Theatre, due to lack of space in the college auditorium. We were informed that the seating capacity of the theatre is fifteen hundred—and it was crowded from front to back.

The play given by the Senior class on Tuesday evening was splendidly presented, the stage settings being excellent and the players being well trained and unusually proficient. The production was thoroughly enjoyable in every way.

The commencement address Wednesday was delivered by Mr. Walter D. Cline, of Wichita Falls, Tex., a former student of Centenary, who has achieved great success in the business world and who is a leader in movements for civic welfare and social betterment. As vice president of International Rotary, he has achieved distinction in Europe, having received a high decoration from the King of Belgium. His address was highly appropriate and it was heard with unabated interest by the great audience—the sure test of a good speech. The college honored Mr. Cline by conferring upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Forty-nine graduates received their diplomas Wednesday morning; in addition, thirty-three others will be granted degrees upon the completion of a few hours of work during the summer session. This is one of the largest classes ever to go out from Centenary.

In addition to the honorary degree conferred upon Mr. Cline, the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Rev. Walt Holcomb, of Florida, well known throughout the church, and Rev. Frederic Arthur Culmer, assistant to the president (Bishop W. F. McMurry) of Central College, Missouri. The honorary degree of Doctor of Music was also conferred upon Mr. Henry W. Stopher, head of the department of music in Louisiana State University.

Dr. George S. Sexton, president of Centenary College, has invested the full strength of a remarkable personality in the task of making Centenary one of the great institutions of the church. The strain of the work shows in his face; but his spirit is indomitable, and he presses on to the completion of a noble undertaking. The building up of an adequate endowment, already well under way, and the provision of additional buildings and equipment are the present urgent needs. The academic standing of Centenary is established and recognized according to the best standards, and the student body is as large as can be accommodated.

A great day for Centenary has arrived—but a greater is to come.

NOW!

On July 1, another payment on the interest of the educational bonds of the Louisiana Conference will be due; and it must be met. There will be no difficulty in meeting the payment if the preachers and laymen of the Coneference will at once pay the pledges they have made to the educational cause.

These pledges are practically all past due. They were made to the Christian Education Movement, to the Centenary Centennial Fund, and to the Mansfield College State Campaign. We know personally of only one pledge to these funds that is not past due—and the preacher who made it says that he will borrow the money and make the payment by July 1 in order to help meet the obligation due at that time.

The present critical situation in the educational affairs of the Louisana Conference is due solely to the fact that these pledges, made by preachers and laymen, individually signed and on record with the treasurer of the Board, remain unpaid simply because those who made them have not given the attention to them that should have been given.

If the makers of these pledges intend to pay them at all, we earnestly hope they will pay all or part before July 1. The bonds of the Conference are based upon the credit and good faith of the Conference as a whole. Back of the legal obligation to pay the interest and principal of these bonds is the moral obligation of the Methodist Church in Louisiana; and back of that is the moral obligation of those who made pledges to the cause of education in Louisiana. A pledge ought to be kept.

PASTORS' SCHOOLS.

The value of Pastors' Schools has been demonstrated throughout the church. Their purpose, as is stated in the literature concerning them, is to afford to the pastors and other Christian workers of the church an agency which will help them to grow in knowledge and understanding and wisdom and grace and efficiency. The increasing number and growing popularity of these schools prove that they serve their purpose.

The preachers and other Christian workers of Louisiana and Mississippi have the opportunity of receiving the benefit of such schools this year. Simultaneously with the Seashore Divinity School, there will be held a Pastors' School at Seashoré Camp Ground this year, June 18-29; and at Centenary College, Shreveport, the Pastors' School will be held July 9-20. Courses of study suited to all have been provided, to be taught by some of the outstanding leaders of Methodism. The expense of attending these schools is small, and the benefit to be derived is great. They ought to have a large attendance.

WHAT BOOKS TO READ.

We wish we knew just exactly how to select the books we ought to read and reject those we ought not to read—but we don't. We have read a good many volumes that were wonderfully helpful, we have read some that were not worth much, one way or another; and we have read some that we didn't like at all. And we suppose every other reader has had the same experience.

We have never been willing to accept wholly the judgment of another man or group of men as to what we should read and what we should not read. That would be a very simple way to solve the problem—but it would infringe somewhat upon what we conceive to be an inalienable right to do a little selecting of our own; just as we, for example, feel that we have an inalienable right to choose the kind of toothpaste we shall use or the kind of razor we shall carry in our traveling bag. We have great respect for the opinions of good and learned men—but we don't always agree with them.

Our own reading is determined largely by the purpose we have in mind in reading at all. Sometimes we want to know what other people are thinking; sometimes we want intellectual stimulation; sometimes we want the confirmation of our own views; sometimes we want to know what the arguments are against the views we may hold; sometimes we want to gain information; sometimes we want to be entertained; sometimes we want spiritual strengthening; and so forth.

When we get hold of a new book, we want to know its general theme; if we are interested in the subject at all, then we want to know more about it. Then we want to know who wrote the book—who he is, where he lives, what he does. Then—but this doesn't amount to much—we want to know who the publisher is. We always like, too, to know what other people have to say about the book—if they have read it.

So, with such things in mind, we read or don't read a given book. We don't know any better way to select.

AN INTERPRETATION.

By Marie Ainslie Cavanaugh.

Thy will be done, thus do we pray
To God, the Father, day by day;
Thy will for good, for peace and love,
That earth may be as Heaven above.

Thy will for all things, fine, and true,
Courage, justice, mercy, too;
Let all fulfill Thy Law of Love,
As angels do in Heaven above.

Give us this day our daily bread,
Power and strength Thy paths to tread;
Be ours to aid souls in distress,
Bring rest to those in weariness.

Forgive our sins, we pray Thee, Lord,
As we forgive, tho' it be hard,
A brother who in love has failed,
May we with such be reconciled.

Keep us from sin, from Satan's charms,
Thy people free from war's alarms,
In all men's hearts be peace and love,
Like that that reigns in Heaven above.

"THE UNSPEAKABLE GIFT."

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

Paul devoted the whole of chapter nine of his Second Epistle to the Corinthians to the matter of the collection for the needy saints of Judea. He commends their benevolence, and exhorts to still further and larger exercise of the grace of giving. He tells them that "God loveth a cheerful giver." Naturally, in speaking of the motives for such giving, his thought reverts to what God has given us; and he breaks forth into this rhapsody: "Thanks be unto God for this unspeakable gift!"

They need not to be told what "the unspeakable gift" is; nor do we. The very years as they strike off their numbers on the dial of time tell of that glad night so long ago when heaven touched earth on a hilltop in Judea, and God's "unspeakable gift" was incarnate in a manger-cradled Babe, who lived and grew and died, touching earth more deeply than have all the babes or men or women that were ever born, and lived and died.

Let us distinctly understand that Jesus Christ, the world's Redeemer, is God's Gift to us men of earth. His coming to our help, and his sacrifice for us was in no sense the payment of a debt due us. "God so loved the world," i. e., the human inhabitants of the world, "that he gave"—to the world—"his only begotten Son"—so said the Christ himself. Paul wrote to the Romans: "The free gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ, our Lord."

John wrote: "God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." John would make it clear that God owed us nothing but condemnation. We are "justified"—i. e., pardoned—"freely by his grace," i. e., his free unmerited gift—so wrote Paul; and again wrote it down as an axiom, again and again: "By grace, ye are saved." Jesus Christ is God's "unspeakable gift to us."

"'O World God, give me wealth,' the Egyptian cried.
His prayer was granted. High as heaven, behold
Palace and pyramid; the brimming tide
Of lavish Nile washed all his land with gold.
Armies of slaves toiled ant-wise at his feet—
World-circling traffic roared through mart and street.
His priests were gods, his spice-balmed kings enshrined,
Set death at naught in rock-ribbed channels deep.
Where's Pharoah's race to-day? Ah, you may find
But rust and moth, silence and dusty sleep: and nothing more.

"'O world-God give me beauty,' cried the Greek.
His prayer was granted. All the earth became Plastic and vocal to his sense; each peak,
Each grove, each stream quick with Promethean flame,
Peopled the world with imaged grace and light.
The lyre was his, and his the breathing might
Of the immortal marble, his the play
Of diamond-pointed thought and golden tongue.
Where is that Grecian race? You see
A broken column and a lute unstrung—and nothing more.

"'O World God, give me power,' the Roman cried.
His prayer was granted. The vast world was chained
To the chariot of his pride, a captive.
The blood of a myriad princes was drained
To feed his fierce, insatiable, hot heart.
Invulnerably bulwarked in every part
With serried legions and close-meshed code—
And yet the worm of vice had gnawed a home—
A roofless ruin stands where once abode
The imperial race of everlasting Rome, and nothing more.

"'O Father, give us peace and purity
And light and life,' ten million sinners cried.
And God gave Christ in love;
Lfited to lordly heights, and lo, we see the race world-wide
And men have found a wealth that far transcends
Old Egypt's treasures, and never ends;
And Christ has brought a beauty Greece ne'er knew,
A power Rome ne'er dreamed;
Till earth is changed to heaven through and through;
And every kingdom into Christ's has passed."

This gift of God to us, this Christ, means infinitely more to this world and its human race than all other gifts that ever came to earth and man.

He is the loveliest being that ever came to earth—the only ideal man ever born. As Dr. George Dana Boardman says: "After nearly two millenniums of fiery criticism, the character of Jesus of Nazareth still shines as earth's purest diamond. Even unbelief itself assigns to the Man of Nazareth the supreme post of honor among earth's heroes, crowning him the King of the kingliest."

Christ is vastly more to the world than an infinitely glorious examplar; he is the world's Savior. All that sin has done for the world, the Christ came to undo: to roll back the tide of world-wide ruin, to light the curse of sin, to stay the hand of death, to banish sorrow, to bring eternal life to a death-scourged world, to shed the light of a deathless love where the gloom of hate had reigned, to pour the living, glowing beauty of holiness and so transform an earthly pandemonium into an earthly paradise. "Thanks be unto God for this unspeakable gift!"

THE UNPARDONABLE SIN. MAT 12:31,32.

By Rev. W. D. Bass.

In all sincerity I believe that more souls have been led to surrender to Christ under my ministry by preaching this text than perhaps any other. This is regarded by many Bible students as a difficult question. I think it is easily understood when considered as written. I am sure the Holy Spirit would not have allowed a portion of Scripture upon the understanding of which so much depends in the salvation of souls, to have been written in such an obscure and complicated a manner that people could not comprehend its meaning. Nothing destroys the psychological effect of a gospel message quicker than for the preacher to preface his sermon with a lot of apologies. If that is necessary, then it's a foregone conclusion in the mind of the speaker that part of his message will be out of place. If he makes that impression on the minds of his hearers at the beginning or the conclusion of his discourse, much of its good effect is lost. Since the gospel is for the souls of men, it needs no apologies when preached as written. And that kind of preliminaries does much more harm than good. What I shall say on this important subject I am absolutely sure of its correct Biblical interpretation. In preaching this text we must stay by the simple words of our Lord, and we cannot go wrong.

First. Our Lord says: "Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Why spend time searching commentaries for its meaning when the greatest of all teachers tells us in plainest words possible that the unpardonable sin is to "speak against the Holy Ghost." How may one thus speak and commit this capital crime? We must not substitute the definition of some man, however learned, for the words of our Lord. This speaking against the Holy Ghost may be done in more than one way. In a theological sense, it means to ascribe the works of the Holy Ghost wrought in the hearts of trusting sinners in regeneration to Beelzebub or the devil. This is blasphemy. This is identically the accusation the Pharisees brought against Christ just before the birth of our text. Jesus said: "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils (as they claimed he did), by whom do your children cast them out? But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." Thus we see that the unpardonable sin may be committed by those who were never regenerated or born of God, as described by Jesus to the Pharisees. He was the embodiment of the Holy Ghost. To accuse him of having an unclean spirit is blasphemy.

Second. Next, we notice what Paul says in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. This is the finest description in the most perfect phraseology in all the Bible of genuine conversions. That Paul here makes a clear statement of fact about truly converted people, there cannot be any doubt. Neither can there be a particle of doubt as to their apostasy or falling away into a life of willful sin, and the loss of their faith and love. Then he says: "It is impossible to renew them again unto repentance." This does not apply to the ordinary backslider. All sins are pardonable upon proper repentance and faith, except one, and that is the one mentioned by the Lord in our text, and that is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, therefore, Paul here refers to blasphemy. In preaching on this subject we have no authority to make excuses through fear the inspired Word might offend. I was once holding a meeting in a Texas town, and had announced that I would preach on the unpardonable sin. A minister came to me and said, "I hope you will not refer to the sixth chapter of Hebrews, it might offend some people here." I said, "Brother, I love those people, but I am engaged in preaching the Bible." I added a part of the tenth chapter of Hebrews, and especially noticed, "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses."

And at the close those folks who it was thought would be offended did not know that passage was in the Bible. Any gospel message that does not contain truth enough to reach the conscience of transgressors fails in doing the work God intends for it to do. There never has been a time when people needed Bible preaching baptized with the Holy Ghost as they do now.

Third. See Acts 5:1-11. "Satan filled the hearts of Ananias and Sapphira his wife, who agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord, to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land." Hence, what was the nature of their sins? It was a lie to deceive, and to keep back part of what belonged to God. The consecration of the price of his own land to God made it as truly the Lord's as if it had been given by any other man. Concerning this lie the apostle said: "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." Both Ananias and his wife fell down and expired immediately, within three hours of each other. The record does not show that they were pardoned; therefore, it is an indisputable fact they committed the unpardonable sin. Death has always been the penalty of blaspheming God. Job's wife understood it when she told him to "curse God and die." This does not mean that all who commit sin are at once cut off by physical death. Those were outward illustrations at that time of the awful consequences of the sin against the Holy Ghost, in the inner spirit or real man. The Spirit was in the apostles who received the offerings of the people made to the church, as he is in the ministers of the church now. The wealth of the people brought in and laid at the feet of the apostles was the moving power of the Spirit.

"Nadab and Abihu, whom Aaron anointed and consecrated to minister in the priests' office, died before the Lord, when they offered strange fire before the Lord in the wilderness, in Sinai." Num. 3:3, 4. A false oath before a court of justice comes under the same head. God says: "A false witness shall not be unpunished" (Prov. 19:5). John Wesley says: "Those guilty of these sins shall not escape punishment here nor hereafter." The Apostle John says, "There is a sin unto death for which prayer does no good." (1 John 5:16). Some overlook the psychological effect of preaching our text. They think the sinner might be discouraged. He ought to be discouraged in sin. The writer has had them come to him next morning after hearing this subject and say, "I didn't sleep any last night—I am afraid I have committed the unpardonable sin." I most always smile and say, "It may be you have; let's pray awhile and seen if the Lord will have mercy and save you." Usually during prayer the trembling sinner is converted. Preachers should study how to be "fishers of men." When I was a boy my father was an expert buffalo fisherman with hook and line. He knew just where to strike the pole with his hand. Later my Heavenly Father said to me, if I would follow him he would make me "a fisher of men." I thank God for the thousands I have caught with the grand old gospel hook and line.

Finally. The most pitiable cases among men are those who were once converted but have lost their faith in God by this awful sin. "Holding faith and good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith, having made shipwreck. Of whom is Hymenens and Alexander, whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme" (1 Tim. 1:20). Judas also was a good man until he betrayed innocent blood for thirty pieces of silver, and his guilt became so heavy he went out and hanged himself. Solomon was right when he said, "The love of money is the root of all evil." If all the money that belongs to God which is being kept back was paid into the church, mission fields, schools, literature, superannuate endowments, hospitals and the poor there would be the grandest revival the world ever saw. Nations would shout the praise of God around the globe, millions would be saved, and the kingdoms of this world would become the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

P. S. My only millionaire conversion of whom I have personal knowledge, and one of the finest fish I ever caught on the gospel hook, as referred to above, was my beloved brother and friend, Mr. T. M. Gadis, of Morton, Miss., one of Mississippi's foremost merchants. He was, and is yet, one of the most popular wealthy men among both rich and poor in his home community, I ever knew. When in Morton don't fail to shake his hand, and you will discover a captivating smile not easily forgotten. Thank God for good men.

CHURCH CELEBRATES ITS CENTENNIAL.

Dear Dr. Carley: Please announce in the Advocate that Piney Grove church, on the Caledonia charge, Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference, organized in the early part of the year 1828, will celebrate its centennial, beginning with the evening service on Aug. 15, and continuing through Sunday, Aug. 19. All former pastors and presiding elders are cordially invited to come and be with us through these few days.

We hope to have many of those who have gone out from this church and community to come and join us in this anniversary.

We trust and pray that it may be a spiritual feast to all who attend.

SIGNIFICANT ACTION OF THE GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD.

By Dr. John W. Shackford, Secretary, General Sunday School Board.

At its recent annual session in Nashville, May 2 and 3, the General Sunday School Board took formal action regarding two matters of far-reaching significance at the present time.

The first has to do with the co-operation of our Sunday schools in a more fundamental work of education in temperance and law enforcement. In regard to this the following recommendation was adopted:

"In view of the urgent necessity that the church shall give increasing co-operation to the effort to make this a dry nation in fact, as well as in theory, and, further, in order that the membership of our Sunday schools may be informed and encouraged as to their responsibility in effecting this vital reform, we recommend that the Board designate the Sunday preceding Jan. 16 as National Prohibition Day and call on all our Sunday schools to observe it fittingly and informatively."

National Prohibition Day is thus set for the Sunday preceding Jan. 16, the date of the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment. The results of the efforts at temperance reform are being jeopardized through lack of adequate temperance education. We are having to-day many reminders that all legislation in a democracy is dependent for its effectiveness upon public sentiment. No more important question in education in citizenship and social righteousness is before the nation at the present time than that of developing intelligent fundamental convictions and attitudes regarding temperance and law-enforcement. Now, as in every time of moral crisis, the church must accept her full responsibility for creating a right public sentiment in these matters. No agency of the church has so large a responsibility in this matter as the Sunday school because of the size of its constituency and the opportunties at its command. The thought of the Sunday School Board is that a day set apart and specifically designated will serve the purpose of lifting up the question of temperance and law enforcement into greater prominence, thus stimulating the Sunday schools throughout the church to make the proper contribution to the development of right attitudes and sentiments on this subject.

The other recommendation adopted by the Board touches the matter of education in world peace. The action is as follows:

"War destroys all that is finest and best in the world. It is an unspeakable contradiction of the spirit of Jesus. Because of this fact, thoughtful followers of Jesus throughout the nation view with deep concern the strong tendencies and growing influence toward militarism so evident in many aspects of our national life to-day. While the church continues to pray, 'Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth,' it must use all its splendid resources to foster and promote international peace and good will. To this end we recommend that the Board set aside the Sunday preceding Armitice Day, Nov. 11, to be appropriately observed by all our Sunday schools as World Peace Day."

This, of course, is not in reality to add a new day, but to undertake to give a Christian interpretation to a day that has been forever fixed in the calendar of the world by history itself. Nothing concerns the future of civilization and of the world more than the right education of the people, and of the young in particular, in regard to international justice and good will. The church must face its responsibility for teaching Christian attitudes toward war and peace. This is no time for the followers of Jesus to let up on the Christian doctrine of World Brotherhood. The Christian people cannot consent to leave the interpretation of this great day in world history to those who continue to glorify war in itself and look to material force as the chief means of resolving the differences among mankind. If the church is to face its responsibility, as indeed it must, in this particular, there is no point at which its opportunity and responsibility are greater than in its Sunday schools.

REMINISCENT.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

The Old Ironside Baptists are all but a memory. Their membership was composed of "middle class folk." Little of wealth or place was known among them. Dreams and visions were a part of their "experience." Most of the men were moderate drinkers. Seldom was drunkenness found among them. They stood for honesty, debt-paying, something of the "Golden Rule," opposition to missions, and a limited atonement. This was certainly true of those who composed the membership of "Old Sandy Branch," one of their strongholds in west Tennessee—"where I was brought up."

"Foot-washing Day" was the event of the year. Not even a barbecue and barn-dance, watermelons, hard cider and ginger cakes on the side, to say nothing of corn-whisky and forty drunks, brought together so many people. They came from distances that required an early start on the part of many. From three to five hundred would be "packed" in the house, while other hundreds were milling around like contented cattle in an inviting pasture. Lunches were in evidence by 11 o'clock. From that hour to about 1 by the clock, groups varying materially in size were seated in shady places eating and banterling good-naturedly. No little courting was done on this occasion. Occasionally a fight. Often a real dog fight. More often a "yellow jackets' nest" poured its inhabitants out with intent to defend their ancient heritage, a home undisturbed by man or beast. The effect was magical. Horses "broke loose," plunged wildly through the crowd, kicking and bucking and "cavorting." Dogs forgot their "manners," taking sudden refuge under skirts, to the great discomfiture of the "inhabitant thereof." (A skirt is a long loose garment worn by the yesterday ladies.) Confusion was piled on confusion—babies crying, women screaming, dogs yelping, men running like mad, every fellow for himself, the "jackets" taking the hindermost. Then comparative quiet, laughter, and gingerly displayed evidence of the fray. It was rich as cream a foot thick.

One John Vincent, farmer, politician, occasional orator, leader in his church, went to town and got ingloriously drunk. He was brought before the church for trial. The crowd equalled that of "Foot-washing Day." A jury of twelve men, presided over by the pastor, "Uncle" Ruben Ross, frowned at the "culprit." He pleaded guilty. He asked to be heard. It was granted. Facing the jury he spoke as follows: "Brethren, I am guilty as charged. I plead mitigating circumstances, and deny any intent to get drunk." Then singling out members of the jury and calling their names one by one, he said, "Brother Nix, you remember we met that day in front of the Little Tennessee Saloon, went in and took a drink together." "Yes," said Brother Nix. When five of the jury had been thus interrogated, each giving a like answer, he addressed the Moderator: "Brother Moderator, you remember that we met that day in the grocery store of Dunlap Murphy on Lake Street and had a drink together." "Yes," said the preacher. "Well, I bought a quart and headed for home. The next thing I knew friends were ministering to me in my own bed. I am heartily and greatly shamed. I hereby give you my sacred word of honor that if you will excuse me I will never get drunk again." They excused Brother Vincent. Nor did I ever know him to get drunk again. He continued to drink moderately. And he was elected to the Tennessee Legislature on the "Yellow Dog Democratic ticket." I heard him speak often while he was seeking votes. The gist of his speeches might all but be summed up in the following words: "More whisky, better whisky, every spring branch running whisky, and a tin cup on every limb to drink from."

And We Have Men Who Sigh for the Good Old Days!

Chigger days, fine-comb days, itch days, shinny day, stink-base days, hugging days that even the "neckers" can't duplicate, hug-me-tight buggy days, all-day preaching days. I can hear "Uncle Ruben" now. The sing-song nasal twang going good. "Yes, my brethren, these Methodist preachers are going to hell—ah, riding in top buggies—ah, wearing beaver hats—ah, and sprinkling babies—ah. Ah, my brethren—ah, they are good neighbors—ah, but the last one of them—ah, are going to hell—ah, like a greased pig—ah, on a soaped toboggan—slide—ah."

I like the present days better.

FROM LAS EBANOS.

By Ben. P. Jaco.

There now! What has the editor done? He has been all over the North Mississippi Conference and has told us about so many good things, folks and places, but failed to visit the most important place of all when he was right at it.

You were nearly in sight of See's Chapel. That is a noted church, founded by a great preacher, Andrew J. Lee, and served later by John W. Boswell, who left one of his books at our home and I now have it.

This church was started in a log cabin on my father's land, and I had the good fortune to be born there. There is much fortune or misfortune in one's birthplace. This notion touches the question of heredity or environment. I am now supporting the doctrine of environment. Crenshaw is a fine town of fine folks, and fine Methodist pastor, and no doubt had a fine district conference. But See's Chapel nearby is very great, for many reasons, to me. That church gave me a religious father and mother, who, when I was born, dedicated me to the Lord and asked him to let me be a preacher. Then, as they were taught by the Bible, they followed their prayers with constant training of their boy. They had the baby baptized by Jesse W. Luter, then taught the child that he belonged to the church and to God. They took the child to Sunday school and stayed for preaching, too.

I can describe preachers and services of that church now, and nearly sixty years have elapsed. They impressed me. First impressions are the ones that last. What could be greater to me than a church which gave me such help? Fortunate indeed is any child who is born near God's house where godly parents are made. The influence of that church kept strong drink, cards, bad books, evil associations out of my home. That church supported Bible study, family prayer, and pastoral visitation in my home. One time the elder came to our log cabin and had to stoop to enter the door. Churches are great when they make godly parents and take care of the children.

At See's Chapel they held Experience Meetings regularly, and I can now, sixty years later, quote some of those talks that told God's dealings in the lives and souls of those men and women. Later, that church had regular class meetings, conducted by Charles McBeth, my father, and others. They continued years after I joined the Conference. I one attained the holy place of class leader. God never gave Samuel, David, nor Timothy better environment for spiritual safety than I had. Of course See's Chapel church was great, and the editor may enjoy a visit there some day.

That church had revivals, usually held under the direction of the pastor by the folks. One time the revival meeting came on, but the pastor, who lived some distance away, failed to come. The members went to work holding the services, and finally got Rev. Mr. Mothershed, a primitive Baptist preacher, to preach, and had a fine revival. We cannot excel that now. The church that can furnish such spiritual workers now is the one that we ought to live near. The church that makes a community sufficiently strong in evangelistic work to handle its population is one to be sought to rear a family. That is why I am glad I was born near See's Chapel.

We ought to be very careful to arrange good birthplaces. Make church and spiritual conditions such that our children may be born with wholesome environment. If we are wise, we will make such churches or go where they are. No parents have the right to give their children birthplaces whose environment predisposes the child to error, sin, and misery.

Then, too, we should honor our birthplaces. No man has the right to bring shame upon those who have honored him with a good name. "This man was born there," says the Bible, and we see that a good man may add to the good name of the place from which he springs. Judas forever shadowed his home town, while Paul added glory to Tarsus, and made old Antioch shine through the dark ages. Bethlehem has been and will be embowered in flowers of speech, and sung in the verse of all languages because One was born there.

Are you proud of your birthplace? Have you houored it?

THE MEANEST MAN.

By Rev. Arthur Madison Shaw.

There is a widespread conviction that the preacher ought to be the best person in the community. As a matter of fact, he rarely is, even when he is a particularly true and devoted man. Some outstanding lay worker or some obscure saint will often excel him in simple, guileless faith and love. When he is austere, censorious, egotistical, professional, indolent, insincere, or given to gossip, no matter what brilliancy or culture he may have, he deserves to rank with the half-hearted and backslidden of his people. When he flatters and smirks and acts a part, "that thrift may follow fawning," he is no better than any other two-faced politician who runs with the fox and hunts with the hounds.

But it sometimes happens that the preacher is the very meanest man in the community. I do not mean the most wicked or the most immoral, but the meanest, smallest, most despicable and unworthy. While we have reason to thank God that such preachers are not very numerous, they are numerous a-plenty. We are not here thinking of those exceptional reprobates who lie or cheat or betray a trust or despoil innocence; but of a class who manage, in a way, to "get by," and have always a certain following.

The ideal (?) specimen of this type is the man who, from envy, jealousy, selfishness, or self-righteousness, deliberately goes about to destroy the influence or good name of a brother preacher, whether of some other denomination, or of his own. There are men who can, perhaps, be justly charged with no other crime, who, in this one thing, are lower than the slime on the bottom of the sea. Lowest of all is he who thus assails the man who preceded him in a given field, or the man who follows him. In this connection, I often think of my third grade teacher, Miss Kate Jones. Sometimes a boy who thought that things had been better managed in the second grade, would say, "Miss Kate Brown used to do differently." Miss Kate Jones would smile and say, "Miss Kate Brown knows best"—and then quietly do the thing her own way. What a princess Miss Kate Jones was!

On leaving a pastorate, a preacher will often be succeeded by a man who will make some changes in organization and plans of operation; or perhaps, in doctrinal emphasis in the pulpit. If one is true and wise, he will commend whatever good there is in these changes; and if he thinks he sees evil in them, he will keep silent. Also, one may often find occasion to make changes, and in a measure, reconstruct what his predecessor has built up, whether in organization or teaching. But if he is a true and brotherly man, a Christian gentleman, he will do all this so quietly and unobtrusively that no noticeable disruption of the life of the church takes place. For instance, one may follow a man who did not use the order of worship in the public services. Shall he berate such looseness of method, or introduce the Methodist order with a blare of trumpets? Not if he is a real man. He will speak no word that is designed to reflect unfavorably on the work of his predecessor. Or, he may follow one who stressed the "second blessing," which theory he does not hold. Will he unmask his guns and turn them loose on the "second blessing crowd?" If he is a spectacular egotist, or an inconsiderate "smart Alec," he doubtless will. But if he is a gentleman and a Christian, he will not. If he is especially tactful and religious, he may well begin by emphasizing holiness of heart, and gently, lovingly, lead his people into what he regards as the saner view.

Here is the finest touchstone by which to test the manliness and worth of a preacher. If he seeks opportunity to discount his brother, tear down his work and destroy his influence, he is the cheapest, meanest man in the community. If he is a man—much more if he is a genuinely godly man—he will speak no word that can harm the influence or reflect upon the Christian character of his predecessor. He will not "blow up" the existing order with dynamite, and proceed de novo to build his own pattern; but he will put in a stronger timber here, and take out the weak one; he will prune away a bunch of mistletoe there, and graft in a fruitful bough. The foundation of the building will not be shaken; the vitality of the tree will not be lowered.

He who regards a fellow-minister as a competitor, and takes toward his predecessor or successor an attitude that means, "He must decrease, that I may increase," has the spirit of the Pharisee, or Judas—or the devil! He who treats his fellow-ministers with love and respect, corrects their mistakes without intentionally weakening their influence, and brings to perfection what they have left poorly developed or incomplete, shows the spirit of the Master. When Jesus had finished his work, the Law and the Prophets had been superseded by his glorious gospel; yet he had consistently carried through his purpose announced at the beginning: "I came not to destroy, but to fulfill."

CORRECTION—SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

I have just received my copy of Seashore Divinity School Year Book and I find I did some blundering on the third page.

Dr. R. H. Harper was elected Dean to succeed Dr. McNeill, who had occupied the position so long, and Brother C. C. Miller was chosen Vice President.

All the old members of the Board from Alabama had resigned at their Conference session, and I should have given the names of the newly elected members in their stead, namely: Rev. H. B. McGehee and Rev. W. M. Cox. Mr. E. L. Colebeck was also elected but, being a layman, is ineligible to the place.

I hereby make my apology to all the brethren involved.

Another interesting matter: Brother Leggett informed me that Dr. Tally found he was unable to be with us, so he has secured the services of Dr. Leander S. Keyser, one of the truly great men of America, for that period.

But don't forget the date, June 18 to 29, and be sure not to miss the opportunity of the year offered in Seashore Divinity and Pastors' Schools on the Camp Ground, Biloxi, Miss.

It is for all ages of preachers and laymen.

THANKS—AND A FURTHER REQUEST.

Dear Dr. Carley: The request you published for me on May 16 brought fine results. Some have sent photographs directly to me; others have sent the names of relatives, to whom I have written and received pictures. So I beg to tresspass on your valued space asking any relation or friends of the following please to write to me the names of some one to whom I may apply for a photograph to place in the pastor's office in our new church: Roht. R. Gill, who served here, 1844-47; P. H. Difflnworth, 1850-51; Robert Parvin, 1857; Robert T. Parish, 1858; J. M. Monroe, 1869; J. B. Denton, 1871; James G. Worley, 1872; J. E. Cobh, 1874-76; Silas H. Cooper, 1880-82; Lewis A. Reed, 1883; John A. Miller, 1889-92.

Thanking you again, I am,

Yours most truly,

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

The Alfords and Rayville.

Rayville is forging rapidly to the front among the little cities of North Louisiana. The tremendious reaches of the recently discovered gas fields have brought this section to the attention of great business interests over the country, and the result, naturally, is that all the towns in the territory, and especially Rayville, are growing by leaps and bounds.

Our church is keeping pace with the business. Brother and Sister Alford (for all mention of Methodistic activity in Rayville must include Sister Alford), have done great things for us. A new church building is being projected, and while not yet actually under construction, there is every reason to believe that before Conference it will be begun. It is fortunate that a new church has not been erected before this, as it would doubtless prove entirely inadequate for the needs of the present and immediate future. As conditions now are, we can build a church of which we may well be proud, and with its completion Rayville will take her place among the leading churches of the district.

With the rapid growth of Rayville, our church is keeping pace in numbers and effectiveness. Brother and Sister Alford have endeared themselves to the people. We believe that our continued prosperity in things spiritual is assured.

PROGRESS OF MILLSAPS COLLEGE CAMPAIGN.

The first week of the second stage of the Millsaps College program of development is marked by announcement from W. L. Solomon, chairman of Belzoni Methodist church, that his church had raised its quota of $2,100; also advice from H. L. Clark and R. R. Norquist, of Yazoo City, that the Yazoo City church accepted its quota of $2,800 and placed it in the church budget.

Rev. J. V. Bennett is pastor of Belzoni church. H. L. Clark is chairman of the Yazoo City group, and R. R. Norquist is chairman of the Yazoo City church. Rev. G. H. Thompson is pastor of Yazoo City church.

Bishop Candler called a meeting in Jackson last Tuesday of all presiding elders in Mississippi in connection with the program of development. Word is being received from charges in both Conferences daily that they are putting on their campaign this month.

The alumni and former students of the college are renewing their efforts. In Jackson a special committee of former students are pushing the alumni campaign among those not seen during the general civic drive in Jackson.

Tylertown will put on their campaign on June 17. Dr. D. M. Key, president of the college, will speak there. Requests are coming in from many charges for speakers, and every effort is being made to provide them.

"This is our great day of opportunity among the Mexican people in the United States. I have never seen them more responsive to the gospel than to-day," declares the Rev. R. J. Parker, missionary evangelist, who has been conducting a series of services among the Mexicans in the Southwest. At the close of a meeting held by Mr. Parker in El Paso recently, thirty-five were enrolled as candidates and many others came forward to renew their vows and make a new start.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ROBERT ANDREWS DAVIS.

(Rev. Robert A. Davis, an honored superannuate member of the Louisiana Annual Conference, passed to his reward on March 9, 1926. He served the Church faithfully and efficiently in the days when the itinerancy involved hardships of the severest kind; yet, as was common with those men of God in pioneer days, Brother Davis found joy and happiness in the midst of hardships and trials as he went about doing good. We are glad to be able to publish in the Advocate the brief sketch of his life written by himself, and we do so with the hope that the reading of it will comfort the hearts and inspire the zeal of those today who have entered into the work of those who have gone before.—Editor.)

Birth, Babyhood, Education, Call to Preach.

On Sunday, the 24th day of August, 1842, I, R. A. Davis, first saw the light of this world, born in the town of Franklin, Williamson County, Tenn.

I am told I was so insignificant that the family doctor threw me aside and gave his attention to my mother, saying I could not live anyway. This so enraged my great-grandmother that she took charge of me and dressed me in baby clothes, and I was grandma's little man. I was quite attractive in my smallness, so that a lady took her wedding ring, placed it over my little fist and ran it above my elbow to the shoulder.

I lived and prospered, was beautiful; so a preacher one time speaking of me to his congregation said, "Brother Robert A. Davis was the prettiest baby I ever saw."

I was carried around with my parents in a basket under the buggy seat, being most too small to be carried in the lap. My father was an itinerant Methodist preacher, so I commenced my itinerant career quite early. Father and mother have often told me of the splendid pair of lungs I possessed, and I would prove it to them whenever the buggy would stop. I would sleep snugly while the buggy was moving, but let it stop and I would let them know I was there.

If father and mother were not itinerating, they taught school. Until I was fourteen years old, I was in my parents' school, so my early religious instruction was almost perfect.

I felt called to preach quite early. On being asked what I was going to be, I would say a preacher. "What are you going to he a preacher for, Bobby?" I would answer, so I could get chicken to eat.

Father and mother lived on Mr. Nimph Cowden's place, and I remember some children came to our house to play, and while we were playing I told them we would have church and I would preach, and they must do as I told them; so I preached away and all at once I told them they must shout, so we all shouted and sung and closed our meeting. I was between three and four years of age then.

I remember we were living in the Gibson neighborhood on Uncle Albert Gibson's place when I had quite a sore toe. The nail was hanging but would not come off; I was fretting over it, and Uncle Albert was at our house and asked me to let him see it; he looked at it quite intently, and all at once he jerked the nail off my toe. Of course I screamed and thought it was all up with me, for there was blood running from my toe; but mamma petted me and told me not to cry, and it would get well now and a new nail would come on my toe.

While we were living in that neighborhood my parents taught on Cane Creek. I was in school and learned to read in the First Reader, McGuffy's series.

Moving from there we went to Rock Creek, opening up a school there. My mother and grandmother took a goodly number of boarders, young ladies. I fell in love with a very pretty one, Miss Susan Dance, of Lynchburg, Tenn., and always loved to be kissed by the young ladies. School was out and the girls were going home; Miss Susan said to me, "Good-by, Bobbie," and kissed me. Uncle Joe White was near and commenced teasing me. I cried and I hated Uncle Joe after that.

A school was given my parents in the Dance and Enochs neighborhood, near Lynchburg, Tenn., and we boarded at Brother Dance's.

Often I would be led by my mother in her room to secret prayer. On one occasion while kneeling beside my mother, I seemed to fall in a trance and beheld two long web-like pieces, about as wide as a saddlegirth, or two inches wide, seemingly suspended from heaven like a ladder, for the two pieces seemed connected by short pieces of the same material, and I was sitting on the lower rung and angels were swinging me.

In this neighborhood, I formed the acquaintance of Lafayette Enochs, and we became attached to each other. I loved that boy as I loved myself. I hear he is a practicing physician now.

From here we again moved to Rock Creek, and papa engaged in the mill business, while mamma taught school. I was again her pupil.

Father's health becoming bad, we moved to Bedford County in the Holt neighborhood, and rented a house from Uncle Herod Holt. Papa had a long spell of rheumatism and I had to do the chores, and quite an amount of work I did for a boy between ten and eleven years of age. I hauled wood on the slide, cut it up for the fireplace and stove for cooking, and various other jobs to be found about a place.

Mamma taught first at the church, then at the new school house. I used to have to run along the side of the young ladies as they rode two on horseback to school, bring the horse back until all of them got to school, return after the last relay, and eat my breakfast and go to school with my mother. I did this only in bad weather, however.

During this school a great revival broke out among the pupils. It was in this wise: There was a show in the town of Shelbyville, the county seat, about six miles from Holt's Camp Ground, where the school was. School was not dismissed, but quite a number of the scholars went. One girl named Sallie Chandler expected to go, but did not. That night mamma dreamed Sallie died, and when she met her at school next morning told her of the dream. The young lady became so convicted that she was reported down in the woods nearby weeping. My mother, going down where she was, found her as stated above. Mamma told her of the loving Jesus, and very soon she was converted. From that time one service was held every noon, or general recess, until the entire school was aroused. The revival went on from time to time until about thirty or forty of the scholars were converted. I was profoundly convicted at these meetings. I was converted and joined the church at the Holt's camp meeting soon after this school revival.

A few months before my conversion, Old Satan seemed to take possession of me. I, while my father was so sick and confined to his room, was left in charge of the wood pile, and a heavy axe weighing five or six pounds was given me to cut with. A load of cedar limbs was hauled up and thrown over in the yard, and it fell to my lot to break them up. I would lift the heavy axe and let it fall down on the brittle cedar limbs and they would fly in almost every direction—some of them would hit me on the head and on the shins, hurting me severely; then I would stand up and curse like a sailor—bang would go the axe on the limbs, and out would come the curses; after I was converted, though, I never cursed any more. I was doing all I could to influence my schoolmates to become religious.

I was very fond of playing marbles. One of my schoolmates offered to bet me a marble against a marble that he could beat me playing. I had a very small marble that I did not think much of, and I had always been successful in winning games from him, so I yielded to temptation. In the play I became so excited that I lost every game, and of course lost the little marble, but it was a great lesson for me—then and there I decided against betting or gambling.

We remained at Holt's until I was thirteen years of age; getting into the teens almost made a man of me, I thought.

A second little sister came to our home at Uncle Herod Holt's. I was passionately fond of my older sister Ella. She was my constant companion, and through her influence I was led to Christ my Savior.

From Uncle Herod Holt's we moved to another Holt house a few miles distant, where the neighborhood built a schoolhouse and mamma named it "Amacitia."

At this school I was associated with two schoolmates named Clay Dwiggins and Rigs Dixon, two boys I greatly loved.

While living at Uncle Joshua Holt's place, I came near killing my little sister Mollie three times. The first time I was riding her in her little willow carriage and running around a tree, with some one after me, I turned her over and it threw her against the tree. I picked her up from the ground, carried her to mamma; by the time I reached the door mamma met me and received the child, still breathless and almost black in the face. I tell you, I was awfully frightened.

Another time we were chasing one another and I came so close she turned suddenly, stepping into a pan of hot lye. She carried the scar on her foot to her grave.

Again I was rolling her in her carriage. Papa told me not to cross a little branch with her, but I said I thought I could do so without injury to the child. Papa told me if I turned her over and hurt her, he would whip me. I went as carefully as I could. She had her kitten in her arms. All at once one of the wheels slipped in a crevice between the rocks, for it was a rocky-bottom creek, and over the carriage went, throwing the child, cat and all, into the water on the rocks. I grabbed her up and ran to mamma. I told papa it was an accident I could not help, but he gave me an awful whipping, and for a time I almost hated my little sister.

During our stay here papa concluded to send me to the college in Shelbyville. I had the pleasure of riding a fine horse every morning and evening—the distance was about six miles on a macadamized road, a regular turnpike. While at this college, I finished Algebra, Philosophy, and the class went into Astronomy; but I was taken sick and did not go on with it.

Part of the time I was in school here I boarded with that excellent man, Brother Moody, and family. About this time I became disgusted with Latin, but was not allowed to drop it.

Father moved from the Holt and Scoggins neighborhood to Richmond, Tenn., where a fine school was given them. I, becoming sick at Brother Moody's, was taken by my father to Richmond. While there I witnessed a fine revival in the Campbellite church, where I saw the Campbellites shouting like Methodists.

We boarded at first, then rented a house and moved some distance in the country, where we stayed for some time. While here my grandfather, John Davis, a veteran of the battle of New Orleans, died. I was fifteen years old at the time of his death.

Papa now bought a house in Shelbyville. I again went to the college, kept store for my father, and was janitor for the church, which was just across the street from our house.

Next papa moved to Lynchburg, where we rented. The first year we were here, my health being bad, I was taken out of school and placed in a wagon-maker's shop to learn a trade. Here I remained the better part of the year. I learned to use and sharpen the tools and then I built a six-horse wagon—made every piece of it myself.

We organized a young men and boys' prayer meeting while at Lynchburg. Although I had to ride four or five miles from my work to church, we had good times together. Every boy had to pray, so we all learned to pray.

(To be continued.)

The Home Circle.

"TALKING IN THEIR SLEEP."

"You think I'm dead,"
The apple tree said,
"Because I have never a leaf to show,
Because I stoop,
And my branches droop,
And the dull, gray mosses over me grow;
But I'm alive in trunk and shoot,
The buds of next May
I fold away,
But I pity the withered grass at my root."

"You think I am dead,"
The quick grass said,
"Because I have parted with stem and blade;
But under the ground
I'm safe and sound,
With the snow's thick blanket over me laid.
I'm all alive and ready to shoot,
Should the spring of the year
Come dancing here,
But I pity the flowers without branches or root."

"You think I'm dead,"
A soft voice said,
"Because not a branch or root I own;
I never have died,
But close I hide
In a plump seed that the wind has sown.
Patient I wait through the long winter hours,
You will see me again;
I shall laugh at you then
Out of the eyes of a hundred flowers."

HIS FIRST BUFFALO.

"Tell us a story, Aunt Nan!" cried the children, crowding around my knee.

"An adventure story," begged Billy.

"No, an animal story," pleaded Ruth.

"Ruth and Billy always want them about boys having adventures or about animals," said Peggy. "Tell us one about a girl, Aunt Nan, do!"

"Well, well," said I, "so you each want something different. Still, I think I know one that will please you all. It has a boy, a buffalo, and a little girl in it. How's that?"

"Oh, tell us it!" exclaimed all three.

"Years ago," I began, "pioneers who lived on the Western plains saw buffaloes in plenty—Indians, too, and outlaws. A very hard time they had of it. When traveling from the East or from place to place in the West on the lookout for a good spot on which to build a new home, they journeyed in wagon trains. Each wagon was of the prairie schooner kind, covered with canvas and drawn by several teams of horses or oxen. The men traveled on horseback or sat on the high seat in the front of the wagons and drove the horses while the women and children rode inside."

"I know; I've seen them in picture books," put in Billy wisely.

"So you have," I answered. "Well, one day a band of three wagons going to Kansas joined a caravan, or wagon train, going to the same place in order to have greater protection if they should be attacked by Indians. There were signs of them lurking about; and as for the buffaloes, immense herds of them thundered away a few miles in the distance every day or so. One night when the wagon train made camp on the bank of the Platte River and everybody was busy, some unharnessing and caring for the horses, some bathing in the stream, some cutting wood, some making fires, and some cooking food or preparing to eat, little Mamie Perkins' brother began crying for a drink.

"'Bring up a bucketful from the river,' said the mother.

"Mamie had just time to reach the water and fill her wooden pail when a monster buffalo came charging into camp. He was bellowing and snorting with rage and upset everything that stood in his path. The men fired at the huge, swiftly moving body, but the shots went wild. Little Mamie was on her way back just as he tore through the camp and, swerving to one side, rushed down the trail leading to the river. She knew nothing of the terrible visitor till he had swept through the astonished camp and was coming straight at her. She dropped her bucket and stood still, too frightened to move. With head down, tail high in the air, and hoofs pounding out a terrible tattoo on the hard earth of the plains, the buffalo came toward her at furious speed. Not one of the men knew little Mamie was at the river, for they had neither seen her go nor missed her from the camp, so none of them tried to follow and save her from the maddened creature."

"Oh, don't let him get her, Aunt Nan!" begged kind-hearted Ruth.

"He didn't get her dear. A boy saved her, a boy who happened to be riding as an extra hand to help with the freight. He had heard Mrs. Perkins send Mamie for the water as he lay tired and half asleep under a wagon behind her. His name was William Cody—"

"Buffalo Bill!" cried my wee Billy.

"That's who it was," said I, "though he wasn't called by that name yet. He ran out, rifle in hand, and, sure shot that he was, steadied his gun coolly, aimed, fired, and the great buffalo lurched, staggered, and fell to the earth not ten feet away from the little girl, who broke out sobbing in relief.

"Goody!" cried the children.

"Didn't every one think Buffalo Bill was very brave?" asked Peggy.

"Yes, dear, they did. I suspect he feared he might be thanked quite a bit for what he he had done, because he picked up Mamie's pail and went back to the river to fill it with water again, while some men who had run down carried Mamie to camp. When he came back with the water, men and women were loud in his praises (you may be sure Mamie's mother was); so he just set the bucket down and went away to his tent, where he stayed till morning. That was his first buffalo, and of course he must have been proud of his skill; but though he was brave and manly, he was modest, too, and no one that day or ever afterwards heard the great scout of the plains boast."—Greta Gaskin Bidlake, in the Presbyterian.

RESUSCITATION IN DROWNING.

By Dr. Oscar Dowling, President, Louisiana State Board of Health.

The season is open for sport in the streams and lakes, bathing beaches and pools. It is the lure of the water and it is perfectly legitimate and healthful indulgence. But there are dangers. Not every one can swim, even imperfectly. There are body cramps, undertows and trick currents that entrap the amateur and sometimes the expert, and before one knows it, a person goes down, once, twice and sometimes for the last time.

Many bathing beaches and pools are provided with life guards who are instructed in the methods of resuscitation; other places are not so fortunate. Usually there are people around who can help, and in no other common emergency is so much co-operation between mind and body necessary as in the rescue of a person who has apparently been drowned. Every moment is precious and every action must have and accomplish its object with the least amount of confusion and lost motion.

The following method has been generally accepted as the one most efficacious in restoring consciousness to a person asphyxiated by drowning, overcome by gas, or shocked into insensibility by an electric current.

In drowning, the first thing to do after removing the body from the water is to clear the mouth and throat of grass, mud or false teeth with the fingers or a handkerchief. The victim is then placed on the ground face downward with a roll of cloth under the forehead and the head resting on the forearm and turned to the side. The operator kneels over the body, one knee pressing against each thigh, with both hands over the lower part of the back so that the thumbs rest on the last ribs on either side. By leaning forward with the weight of the body on the arms and hands, the operator raises the ribs and allows air to enter. On relaxation they are released and the air is expelled.

The process is repeated slowly and regularly until respiration is restored. This may be as long as two hours, and several persons may be required to change places with the operator before the result is accomplished. This can be done without altering the rhythm, which should be about sixteen times per minute.

Efforts should also be directed toward inducing circulation and warmth. This can be done by briskly slapping and rubbing the limbs and by the application of hot water bottles to thighs, armpits, and soles of the feet.

Measures for resuscitation should not cease until circulation and respiration have been definitely restored. It may happen that all labor will have been in vain if the struggle is given up after a few spasmodic breaths have been taken. The breathing only partially restored will cease, and this time for good.

Nutriment should be given with care and only when the person has been restored to consciousness can swallow easily and all danger of a relapse seems to have passed. Hot coffee when readily swallowed is the best restorative; drugs should be administered only by a physician.

This procedure for resuscitation of asphyxiated persons is known as the Schaefer method. It has many advantages over others in that it is easy to carry out, gives a larger lung ventilation, is exteremely simple, there is no danger of the tongue falling back into the throat, and, finally, there is no risk of injury to the liver when proper care is maintained.

Remember: Don't give up hope until there is absolutely none left. It is claimed that persons have been rescued after they have been submerged twenty to thirty minutes, and even as long as two hours. It may be necessary to work for two more hours before respiration is restored.

DESRIBES A COW.

One day last week we asked County Treasurer George H. Farrar to write an essay on the cow. Here it is—it can't be beat:

"The cow is a female quadruped with an alto voice and a countenance in which there is no guile. She collaborates with the pump in the production of a liquid called milk, provides the filler for hash, and at last is skinned by those she has benefited, as mortals commonly are.

"The young cow is raised a calf, and is used in the manufacture of chicken salad.

"The cow's tail is mounted aft and has a universal joint. It is used to disturb marauding flies, and the tassel on the end has unique educational value. Persons who milk cows and come in contact with the tassel have vocabularies of peculiar and impressive force.

"The cow has two stomachs. The one on the ground floor is used as a warehouse and has no other function. When this one is filled the cow retires to a quiet place where her ill manners will occasion no comment and devotes herself to rumination. The raw material thus conveyed for the second time to the interior of her face is pulverized and delivered to the auxiliary stomach where it is converted into cow.

"The cow has no upper plate. All of her teeth are parked in the lower part of her face. The arrangement was perfected by an efficiency expert to keep her from gumming things up. As a result she bates up and gums down.

"The male cow is called a bull and is lassoed along the Colorado frontier south of the Rio Grande and shot in the vicinity of the Potomac.

"A box of cow's wrath, eight cents in the cow bonbon cent, on the back of the packet and [illegible] Cocoa that [illegible] at [illegible] Midland Virginian.

DEATH OF DR. STONEWALL ANDERSON.

Press dispatches announced the death in Nashville, Tenn., on Friday of last week, of Dr. Stonewall Anderson, General Secretary of the Board of Education. According to the newspaper account, he was stricken suddenly with heart failure and passed away in a very short time.

Dr. Anderson was one of the most widely known men in the church. As Secretary of the Board of Education he kept closely in touch with all the educational affairs of the church, being a regular visitor to Annual Conferences and being in frequent demand for special addresses. He had a clear vision of the educational problems of the day and had given much study to the relation of the church to these problems. He stood for the maintenance of the highest standards in academic requirements, physical resources and equipment, and moral character in our educational institutions, and the church will always owe much to him for his work in its department of education. We are bereft of one of our best and strongest men.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We thank Dr. Cleanth Brooks, Alexandria, La., for two subscriptions recently sent in.

Rev. L. W. Smart, pastor of the Waterproof charge, Louisiana Conference, has received forty-two members since Conference and has baptized eight infants.

Rev. Charles F. Smith, now a loyal Texan, but formerly a Mississippian, keeps in touch with affairs in the old home State by maintaining his subscription to the Advocate.

Dr. John Paul, president of Taylor University, Upland, Ind., has just brought from the press a volume, "The Soul Digger—the Life and Times of Bishop William Taylor." The book sells for $2 a copy.

We thank Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook, Bogue Chitto, Miss., for two subscriptions recently sent in. The work at Bogue Chitto prospers under Brother Westbrook's administration, the interest of the people being encouraging.

Dr. William I. Haven, for more than twenty-nine years General Secretary of the American Bible Society and one of the founders of the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at his home in Summit, N. J., on June 5.

The editor of the Advocate had the privilege of preaching Sunday morning at the Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. H. L. Johns, who is teaching a course in the Standard Training School at Homer, La., this week.

This note from Rev. B. P. Jaco, Raymondville, Tex.: "Lots of roasting ears, tomatoes, onions, and chickens to eat—come to see me." From the sound of that, Raymondville would be a good place for President Coolidge to spend his vacation—he won't get any better eating in Wisconsin.

The building program of the Second Methodist Church, Gulfport, Miss., is about to get under way, and it is expected that the new church will be ready for occupancy sometime in August. This church is under the pastoral care of Rev. Geo. H. Jones, our pastor at Long Beach, Miss.

Rev. A. G. Shankle, formerly pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, this city, but now pastor at Cedartown, in the North Georgia Conference, is spending a few days in New Orleans visiting his sons, in business here. He paid an appreciated call at the Advocate office one day last week.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, general evangelist, who was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference and who has held many good meetings in this State, is now engaged in a tent meeting at Silsbee, Tex., with Rev. George J. Evans, the music being in charge of Mr. Virgil P. Cassaday. Brother Thomas' home address is Westminster Apartment, Nashville, Tenn.

Robert E. Johnson, of Kentwood, was the winner of the $25 prize in the forestry essay contest sponsored by the Louisiana Federation of Women's Clubs. Dorothy Dicks, of Mandeville, and Fremont Hofmesiter, Minden, were winners, respectively, of the second and third prizes. Billy Schuhle, son of Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Schuhle, Kentwood, was among those receiving honorable mention.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan, of Millsaps College, Jackson, Miss., honored the Advocate office with a call on Tuesday of last week. He had been spending a few days at Biloxi visiting friends and relatives. He was scheduled to fill the pulpit at Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, last Sunday, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. L. Neill. While in New Orleans, Dr. Sullivan inspected the science building at Tulane University.

Rev. C. S. Moody, our pastor at De Soto, Miss., writes: "I have just closed a real good meeting at Crandall, Miss. The preaching was done by Rev. D. E. Keily, and the singing was led by Rev. Otis Spinks. There were forty-five additions to the church, and forty-two people pledged themselves to lead in prayer meeting. We had seventy-three in prayer meeting Thursday night. Many testified, and said they were greatly blessed in the meeting."

We record with great sorrow the tragic accident that befell Rev. Malcolm C. Walden, en route from Asbury College, Wilmore, Ky., to Louisiana in an automobile to take charge of the Pine Grove circuit, Baton Rouge District. North of Grenada, Miss., the car overturned and Brother Walden received injuries that were expected to prove fatal. With him in the car were two other young men, one of whom was seriously injured, the other being only slightly hurt.

The Western Methodist Assembly, Mount Sequoyah, Ark., will open its season on June 21. A fine program has been arranged for the summer. The Western Assembly is the meeting place for many of our official gatherings, and is maintained under the auspices of twelve Conferences west of the Mississippi River. It is a delightful place for study, rest, and recreation. The superintendent, Sam M. Yancey, will be glad to furnish any information desired concerning program and boarding facilities.

While in Shreveport last week attending the commencement exercises of Centenary College, the editor of the Advocate shared the hospitality of the district parsonage, Dr. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder, with Dr. R. H. Wynn and Rev. Wm. Schuhle. Returning to New Orleans by way of Monroe, the editor enjoyed the company of Rev. M. S. Monk, pastor of the First Methodist Church at Monroe; Dr. S. L. White, the beloved physician of Ruston, and Mr. De Lee, the courteous conductor (and good fisherman) of the Illinois Central train.

Rev. George H. Thompson, our pastor at Yazoo City, Miss., writes: "Miss Mollie Stockard, Meridian, Tex., who has done revival meeting work with Gipsy Smith, Jr., L. D. Patterson, and other leading evangelists, will be available for engagements in meetings in Mississippi during July and August. I have worked with Miss Stockard, and I have not found her superior in the combination of song leader and worker with young people. She assisted Gipsy Smith in a meeting at Tuscaloosa, Ala., where she did a marvelous work among the students of the University of Alabama. She will do a fine work in any church."

"The revival services at the Norfield Methodist church, Norfield, Miss., closed Friday evening, June 1, with nine accessions to the membership of the church. The preaching was well and faithfully done by the Rev. Jasper L. Smith, of Meridian, Miss. He brought a series of inspirational and helpful messages to our people. Brother 'Jack' is a fine help in a revival, and he is above the average as an exponent of the Holy Scriptures. You can readily see that he loves to preach, and best of all, he loves the men to whom he preaches. Large crowds attended the evening services, and the church members were greatly strengthened and revived." So writes Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook, the faithful pastor.

Dr. William Paxton Parker, of Nashville, Tenn., and Miss Marion Markie, of Jonesboro, Ark., were united in marriage on May 29, at the home of the bride's father, Mr. Minor M. Markie, in Jonesboro. The groom was attended by his brother, Mr. Fitzgerald Parker, Jr., and the bride by her sisters, Mrs. Jones and Miss Lucy. Dr. Parker is a son of Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker, editor of the Epworth Era, and Mrs. Luck Paxton Parker, of Nashville. After concluding his engagement with the Tuberculosis Central Bureau of the Tennessee Health Department Dr. Parker will practice his profession in Hope, Ark. The Advocate extends all good wishes to this fine young couple.

Rev. H. W. F. Vaughan and Miss Fay Constance Grayson were married at the home of the bride in Moselle, Miss., on Tuesday, June 5, the ceremony being performed by Dr. H. Walter Featherstun, grandfather of the groom. Brother Vaughan is a son of Rev. and Mrs. Percy Vaughan, of Ellisville, Miss., and is himself pastor of the Yazoo City circuit. He is a graduate of Millsaps College and of Emory University, and is a promising young member of the Mississippi Conference. His bride is a graduate of the Mississippi State College for Women, who has been teaching in the city schools of Birmingham, Ala. The Advocate extends all good wishes to the happy young couple.

WHAT HAVE YOU FOR THE YEARBOOK?

Plans are on foot to make the next Official Yearbook of our church more complete and fuller of interest than any Yearbook that has heretofore come from the press. In order to accomplish this purpose we are requesting certain information from our preachers and also from members of the church at large. We desire the names of preachers and laymen (both men and women) who were born in or before 1849. If any reader who belongs in this class or has friends or acquaintances who are eligible for listing under this heading will furnish me the names, giving also date and place of birth and present address. I shall be greatly obliged.

We desire also the names of preachers in any of our Conferences who are fathers and sons or brothers; also preachers who have married the daughters of preachers.

We also contemplate a department devoted to Southern Methodist couples who are to celebrate their Golden Weddings during the year 1929, For use in this department we desire the full names of both husband and wife and also the exact date of the wedding.

I shall be very grateful for any information sent in response to this appeal. Please address all letters to me at 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

THE VALUE OF A PASTORS' SCHOOL.

A request has come to me from Dr. Goodrich to give through the New Orleans Christian Advocate some expression concerning the Pasotrs's School beginning on July 9, at Centenary College, Shreveport.

I wish to say that it has been my privilege to attend such schools held in other places, and I believe these schools to be of great value to all of our preachers. This is true of the men who have had opportunity for scholastic preparation as well as of those who have not had the privilege of such opportunities. There are different new movements and ideas constantly arising. No man can keep abreast with the times who does not take note of these new methods and ideas. The men who are to be teachers and lecturers are leaders in their several fields. It is a source of satisfaction to myself that we are to have the advantages of one of these schools in Louisiana. I trust that it may be possible for a large number of our men to attend this school.

"THE MISSING LINK."

By J. R. Pepper.

Not the missing link that the scientists discussed so fully a few years ago—really a much more important link than the hazy, unknown species of the human race, the scholars were so disturbed and uncertain about.

For about two decades the teacher training work of the Sunday school has been going on, more or less well; but the name has been rather misleading, and the present Leadership Training School is a far happier title, as we are not only trying to train Sunday school workers, and especially those in the places of leadership.

In the initial steps of this work, and for quite a while, the elementary grades received most attention, and particularly the Primary Department. Later the Beginners secured much care, and still later special adult classes of both men and women came in for a large part of general and special attention.

The Real Missing Link.

In the midst of the multitudinous labors for the elementary grades and the adults, the mainspring of the whole Sunday school machinery seemed to have been almost entirely overlooked, namely, the superintendent.

The position of the superintendent is analagous to the manner of a great department store, since the graded lessons came into vogue.

Suppose salesmen and others working under direction of the manager knew their business thoroughly well, but the manager had only a limited knowledge of the business. How could he command the respect of his subordinates? And could he wisely direct his co-laborers?

Again, the superintendent of a great manufacturing plant holds a similar relation to his operatives that the Sunday school superintendent bears to his under officers and teachers. Suppose the plant superintendent has less knowledge of the details of the industry than the operatives under his command. How can he wisely guide the business so that it will produce the best results?

Now, these comparisons are not meant in any way to disparage the Sunday school superintendent (because he has been sadly neglected), but simply to picture a true situation.

The missing link in all of our splendid training work is the superintendent.

Hence it is actually a fact that many of our Sunday school teachers know far more about how a modern, down-to-date Sunday school should be conducted than the average superintendent. The teacher has been trained, but the superintendent has not, in most cases.

This last statement being true, good, faithful, intelligent teachers are often greatly handicapped by a superintendent who is not in sympathy with the most approved modern methods—not because he doesn't want to do right, but simply for the reason that he is not informed on how methods and plans have changed since he was elected superintendent twenty, thirty or forty years ago.

One superintendent said: "He just knew that he had a first-class program, for he bad used it twenty-five years, without a single change."

This writer, as chairman of one Annual Conference Sunday School Board for forty-one years, with general oversight of about six hundred Sunday schools during these years, many of which he has visited during this long period, is speaking from actual knowledge, born of contact with the situation here described.

As goes the superintendent, so goes the Sunday school very largely.

Now the Remedy.

Not less schools for training teachers, and other operatives in the school work, but also special courses and schools for superintendents only.

One of the greatest blessings that could come to our Sunday school work would be to have annually in every presiding elder's district a school for superintendents only, and discuss the superintendent's office and work in minutest detail in view of the latest developments.

Then at Junaluska and Mount Sequoyah for 1929 provide a special course or courses for superintendents only, and have an exhibit of plans and devices used by superintendents over the church to reach varied results, closing such discussion always with a free and easy round table talk in which every superintendent present would be urged to participate.

With such provision as here indicated for culturing superintendents, I am sure the general level of efficiency of our superintendents will be greatly raised within a comparatively brief time, and the missing link will be connected with the ordained chain of general Sunday school training.

THE PASTORS' SCHOOL AT SHREVEPORT.

Dr. Carley: Permit me a word.

Do the Methodist preachers and laymen of this State, especially those of North Louisiana, realize the wonderful opportunity which the Pastors' School at Centenary College in Shreveport affords them? This school, which is to be in session from July 9 to July 20, while intended primarily for the pastors, Sunday school and Epworth League workers, presents courses which will be of interest and benefit to the laymen as well. The instructors include some of "the greatest teaching minds in all Methodism." It most certainly is a rare opportunity. Let's go.

Any information regarding this school may be had from Dr. Robert E. Goodrich, of Shreveport First Methodist Church. He is the Dean of the school.

We stop the press to insert the following telegram, received Tuesday morning:

"Rev. J. A. Randolph, member of the North Mississippi Conference, retired Chaplain of the U. S. Army, is very low at his home in Nashville and is expected to die at any time. Ask his brethren to pray for him and family."

Signed, J. H. SHUMAKER.

"PRESENT."

Carolyn had been in a state of excitement for days, for at last her mother had consented to let her attend school.

When the morning came, the little maid trotted off with eyes shining. When she came home at noon, her mother said: "Well, dearest, how do you like going to school?"

"I like it, mother," was the reply in doubtful tones; "but I haven't my present yet."

"Your present? Why, what do you mean, Carolyn?"

"Why, this morning teacher said, 'You may sit here for the present, little girl;' but I sat there all morning and didn't get it. P-r-aps, though"—and she brightened up—"I'll get it this afternoon."—New York Times.

MRS. C. H. FENSTERMAKER passed into her beautiful reward on Monday, May 21. Just as a bright day was dawning upon the life of our town, the spirit of Sister Fenstermaker passed with the glory of the morning into her rich reward in the "Home of the Soul." Hers was a rich life here, and more beautifully rich is it ln God's Paradise of Glory. She was gifted in music, and faithful to her responsibilities as church organist. Sbe was a scientific grower of flowers, in abundance, and she was a leading factor in causing our church to be known as "The Church Beautiful." Through both voice and instrument she gave expression to the music of God's harmonies. Through an artistic blending of the dellcate shades of rare flowers in tbeir tints of rich beauty she brought before our eyes the aestbetic value of God's love expressed in nature. We shall mlss her in tbe realm of God's beautiful servlce. And her family, how they wlll miss her! Home was made beautiful and hearts were made glad from the fountain of that soul so rich in its expression of the beauty of nature and the glory of God. But the dear loved ones know that she awaits them in that abiding home "Over there." Sister Fenstermaker lingered for several months before going, and she, after being confined to her bed, had the baby boy baptized, a service which she had intended having done before getting sick. We enjoyed with her and her family a very sweet Mothers' Day service in the afternoon of Mothers' Day, just a week and a day before she entered heaven. Sister Fenstermaker was forty years old, being born on Oct. 28, 1887, and had been married twenty-two years and one day when she came to the transfiguring of life. God blessed her home with five children. Warren, the oldest, preceded her into heaven's home nearly a year. Her husband, Mr. C. H. Fenstermaker; four children, Kathryn, Howard, Elizabeth and Robert, together with her mother, Mrs. L. K. Andrews, of this place; a brother, Mr. Artbur Andrews, of Jacksonville, Fla., and a sister, Mrs. Blonkuiest, of Houston, Tex., are left to cherish her memory and look forward to the sweeter joys of heaven.

Her pastor,

H. B. HINES.

MRS. ZILPHA COX was born at Spring Hill, Ala., 1840, and died at Elkhart, Tex., May 16, 1928, aged 87 years. She was the daughter of Chrlstopher and Emily Collins. She came with her parents to Harrison County, Miss., where she married Michael Cox, a Methodist preacher, in 1861. To tbis union were born eight children, three of whom preceded her to the grave. Two sons, J. W. Cox, of Elkhart, Tex.; T. M. Cox, of Carriere, Miss.; and two daughters, Mrs. S. P. Terrell, of Elkhart, Tex.; Mrs. H. A. Beverly, of Jacksonville, Tex., are living still. One son, Alfred, died four days after his mother. Besides the four children, sbe is survived by one brother, Christopher Collins, of Gulfport, Miss.; twenty grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. Her husband died at McHenry, Miss., in January, 1912, thus preceding her to the glory world by sixteen year. After the death of her husband she made her home for some time with her daughter, Mrs. Elvenia Beverly, and later with Mrs. Catherine Terrell, where she died. Her memory is a precious inheritance to ber descendants. Grandmother Cox was for seventy years a loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Though she knew much of tbe hardships of living under pioneer conditions for a great part of her life, yet she, as a faithful companion and mother, helped her husband to make tbeir home a Christian home. Her influence has gone out for good and many will be those who rise up to call her blessed. Righteousness and godliness were manifest characteristics of her life. Though the last years of her life were spent in great suffering, yet it was a benediction to be in her presence. Her exhortation to tbose around her was to die out to the world, trust and obey God. Her thoughts and conversation were on heavenly things. We thank God for her life. Though we will miss her more than words can express, yet we take comfort in the assurance that she is at rest with her Saviour. Her last words were, "All is well." The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Rev. T. D. McCrary, at Elkbart, Tex.

MURRAY COX.

MRS. BELLE POPE LIVINGSTON.

Martha Belle Pope Livingston, born Oct. 25, 1854; married to James B. Livingston, Jan. 24, 1912; died April 22, 1928. Sbe gave her heart to God in her early teens, united with the Methodist church and was a consistent and loyal member until the Master called her home. We know that God's hand was in it all, so we do not questlon why our dear sister was summoned so suddenly to take her place ln the white-robed throng above. She was a devoted wife, faithful, true and loyal friend. Those who knew her best loved her most. She left to mourn her going a devoted husband; two brothers, T. J. Pope, of Blytheville, Ark; W. A. Pope. of Oxford, Miss.; two sisters, Mrs. M. A. Eubank, of Shannon, Miss.; Mrs. J. E. Watts, of Ruleville, Miss., and a host of otber relatives and friends. "Blessed are the dear which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Her work on earth is finished, she hath done what she could. She lives among the souls of light. Her body was laid to rest in the Ebenezer cemetery, near Pontotoc, Miss., in the presence of many relatives and frlends, beneath beautiful flowers, given in token of love and sympathy, to awalt the resurrection of the flesh. She was in failing health for a long time. She bore her sufferlng without complaining. Her place and home is now vacant, but our loss will be her gain, for when Jesus comes again to clalm his own all who knew and loved her who are faithful to God shall find her in tbat land where there will be no more sorrow or sad partings.

JACKSON DISTRICT WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

One of the best missionary conferences ever held in the Jackson District was held at Pelahatchie, Miss., May 9, 1928. More than one hundred delegates, representing about eighty-five per cent of the auxiliaries in the district, were registered.

Among the notable guests were five Conference officers; one deaconess; a Presbyterian missionary to China, Dr. J. Y. McGinnis, who has given eighteen years of service in China and is now in the United States on a furlough; the presiding elder of the district, and seven ministers.

Our recently elected District Secretary, Mrs. C. H. Phillips, of Eden, was introduced to the convention by Mrs. Berry, president of the Pelatatchie Auxiliary, and presided over the meeting. Her youth, sweetness, sincerity and zeal won the hearts of all.

The Pelahatchie Auxiliary, a small band of big workers, had every detail in perfect readiness for the convention, a cordial welcome, a beautifully decorated church, carrying out in the decorations the Jubilee motif of gold and white, and a delicious plate luncheon faultlessly served at the noon hour to about two hundred guests.

Dr. Rolfe Hunt, local pastor, led the devotional services of the morning. His theme was "Through Ignorance Ye Have Erred," stressing the importance of missionary information.

Rev. J. H. Foreman, one of our superannuate ministers residing in Pelahatchie, gave the address of welcome, recounting some of the great things attempted and achieved by the Woman's Missionary Society, saying the women had lived up to the slogan "Whatever is impossible, go and do it."

Mrs. W. E. Phillips, a former district secretary, responded to the address of welcome, "Sacrifice and Service" being her message, a message which she practices as well as preaches.

Then followed a wonderful address on "Council Notes," given by our State president, Mrs. L. W. Alford. So graphic were the details of this great Council meeting given by Mrs. Alford that we almost felt that we were really listening in on the Council meeting. She gave us the goal for 1928 as given by Mrs Stevens, our Council president: "The winning of every woman to missionary service and finding our individual place in the work under God's leadership." She reminded us of the great Jubilee thank offering, which will be given at the close of the week of prayer. Pelahatchie has the distinction of being the place where the first Jubilee thank offering in the district was made.

Mrs. Alford also reminded us of the necessity of a ten per cent increase in our pledge, to be used for the better equipment of our missionary workers, and prayed that the opening words of Miss Daisy Davies' dedicatory prayer at Council might be our prayer, "We adore thee, we praise thee, we bring thee the best that we have." She brought us a burning message from Mrs. Henry W. Peabody on law enforcement and prohibition and the sacred privilege of the ballot. Mrs. Peabody suggested this toast to our husbands in case a difference of political opinion should ever arise: "My heart is yours, my soul is God's, my vote is mine."

The Children's and Young People's work was interestingly and instructively presented by Mrs. Stanley Wilson and Mrs. C. W. Cochran, both of Meridian. The saddest note of the conference was the lack of organized Children's and Young People's work in the Jackson District, unorganized for lack of leaders. There is only one Young People's Auxiliary in the Jackson District. Mrs. G. T. Everett, of D'Lo, moved by the Spirit, volunteered for service as District Superintendent of Young People's work in the Jackson District. The office of superintendent of Epworth Juniors of the Jackson District is as yet unfilled.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis, our State Historian, gave a splendid talk on "Our Fathers," meaning our superannuates. Mrs. Lewis, wife of a minister from whose family forty-five ministers of the gospel have come, was certainly well chosen to present this sacred claim.

The day was all too short, the program had to be cut, leaving off a talk on "Stewardship" by Mrs. Rolfe Hunt, of Brandon, and a message from Dr. J. L. Decell, presiding elder of the Jackson District.

Most encouraging reports were given from the auxiliaries having delegates present.

Mrs. Phillips, after thanking the Pelahatchie Auxiliary for their generous hospitality, asked that Rev. E. M. Allen dismiss the assembly with prayer.

SUDIE McLAURIN, Secretary.

REVIVAL AT KREOLE, MISS.

We have just closed two revivals on the Kreole charge. Mr. O. C. Hull, our Dual Extension Secretary, was with us at the Kreole church the first two Sundays in May. He brought, as usual, strong gospel messages. Brother Hull was already known to our people, since he had recently taught two Cokesbury Training Schools on this charge. The people enjoyed his ministry to a very great extent. Brother Hull looks out for the interests of the pastor, and his genial, brotherly manner helps to bring out the best there is in a fellow. Our association together was very pleasant.

Rev. G. A. Broadus, pastor at Escatawpa, led the singing. His good work and consecrated character won for him many friends. He is to hold the meeting for us at Orange Grove later in the season.

The weather was ideal for our meeting at Kreole. The attendance was fully up to our expectation and the interest was sustained throughout the eight days. The meeting resulted in eight additons by profession of faith and one by certificate. The whole church was given a spiritual uplift, and a new impetus was imparted to the work.

Rev. Charles Assaf, Home Missionary, was with us at Pecan the last two Sundays in May. There is no organized church at Pecan. In fact, we had no members living there at all, but I have been preaching in the school house one Sunday afternoon each month for a year. I felt led to call Brother Assaf for a meeting at that place. We began under many handicaps. The excessive rain on Sunday prevented any service at all till Monday night, and toward the close of the meeting the mosquitoes were extremely bad. But in spite of these and many other hindrances the Lord was with us. The congregation kept steadily increasing from night to night. We spent the days visiting in the homes and doing personal work. Brother Assaf is almost as good at personal work as he is at preaching. He is undoubtedly called of the Lord to the work he is doing. Our prayer for him is that his usefulness may increase more and more.

The meeting resulted in fifty-one additions to the church, twelve infants baptized, and a Sunday school to be organized at Pecan. We thought best not to organize a church at present, but placed the membership of those who joined there on the roll at Orange Grove. Some of those who joined came from the Baptist, Lutheran, and Catholic churches, because they had no churches of these denominations in or near that community; but the greater portion were never members of any church. One man 65 years old gave his heart to Christ and joined the church. It was a beautiful sight to see whole families, including father, mother, boys and girls, come into the fold, and even the babies were brought forward for baptism. Influences have been started in motion which we trust will increase as long as time lasts and bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

Waterloo, S. C.—"I took Cardui at intervals for three years, and have been in good health since last fall," says Mrs. Noble J. Hayes, who lives near here. "My improvement after taking a course of this medicine was really remarkable.

"I am much stronger and can accomplish so much more work now. My weight increased twenty pounds, and my color is fresh and good.

"For a long time I had been feeling poorly. Some days I dragged around the house and had not enough energy to do my housework.

"I worried a lot about myself. I did not seem like myself, and my nerves were all on edge. I did not sleep well, and my appetite left me.

"I found Cardui to be an excellent tonic. After I had taken it a few weeks, I began to pick up and to gain in weight and strength.

"Now I am in fine health. I have recommended Cardui to many of my friends, and shall continue to do so."

Cute in a Baby—Awful at Three —and it's Dangerous

by Ruth Brittain

Thumb sucking does look sweet in a baby, but it is disgusting in the three-year-old and sometimes it hangs on until fifteen or sixteen! The habit may cause an ill-formed mouth or induce adenoids; and it always interferes with digestion. Pinning the sleeve over the hand; attaching mittens, or putting on cardboard cuffs, which prevent bending the arms at the elbows, are some of the ways to stop the habit.

Another bad habit—irregularity in bowel action—is responsible for weak bowels and constipation in babies. Give the tiny bowels an opportunity to act at regular periods each day. If they don't act at first, a little Fletcher's Castoria will soon regulate them. Every mother should keep a bottle of it handy to use in case of colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, loss of sleep, or when baby is cross and feverish. Its gentle influence over baby's system enables him to get full nourishment from his food, helps him gain, strengthens his bowels.

Castoria is purely vegetable and harmless—the recipe is on the wrapper. Physicians have prescribed it for over 30 years. With each package, you get a valuable book on Motherhood. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper so you'll get the genuine.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The ninth session of the Conference Standard Training School is heing held at Grenada College this week. A downpour of rain Sunday and Monday had a bad effect on our attendance. The select group that gathers here each year for study and fellowship constantly experience an ever-deepening work of grace and a larger vision of the purposes of God. The students not only do honest study, but this study leads them into worship. The programs of worship have been prayerfully and skillfuliy prepared by Miss Helen E. Swisher, professor of Religious Education in Grenada College. All of the young people have taken part in these services heartily. An atmosphere of the kingdom of Heaven hovers over the entire student hody. The class work is as good as one will find in our hest colleges. One of our prominent high schooi superintendents who is taking the course, "The Home in Society," remarked that it was too much school for him, that he needed to study a year in advance to he prepared for the type of work given hy the instructor. A young woman impressed with the abiiity of her teacher asked, "What does this woman do?" The reply was, "She gives her entire time to the work of Religious Education." The young woman replied, "Why, she ought to he in some big college." Under such influences our young people are compelled to respect and honor their church.

The messages from the platform each day have heen practical and heipful. Rev. J. H. Hoider, Dr. J. R. Countiss, Rev. E. S. Lewis, Rev. J. E. Stephens, Miss Julia Wasson, Miss Margaret Patterson, Mrs C. T. Court, Rev. A. W. Martin, Rev. E. G. Mohler, Rev. W. M. Hammontree, and Mr. E. M. Sharp were the speakers.

The most enthusiastic class in the school is the one sponsored hy the Conference Board of Missions, taught by Rev. A. W. Martin, and composed of the mission preachers. Dr. R. A. Tucker, president of the Board of Missions; Rev. R. G. Moore, Rev. E. G. Mohler, and Miss Julia Wasson are taking this work for credit and entering into the discussions that come up from day to day.

Miss Helen Swisher has given instruction to a group of workers in the methods of holding Daiiy Vacation Church Schools, and has led in the recreational activities every afternoon.

Workers from every district in the Conference are in attendance. These workers will be as leaven to touch and transform others until the whole lump is leavened. The childhood and youth under their care wiii he guided more skiiifully hy those who have attended this schooi. There is no way to estimate the amount of sin and sorrow that must come to those children who are neglected and misled hy untrained teachers. These standard schools are leading to higher levels of thinking and of hoiy iiving.

We are indehted to Dr. Countiss and his most gracious assistants for the hest of entertainment. The school is the hest we have held.

Schools at Corinth, Houston, Ripley, and Kosciusko foiiow this one. H. D. Suydam hrought tweive of his workers to the school at Grenada from Swiftown and Isola. Men like Suydam furnish the key to success in building the kingdom.

Out of our hearts, we call upon our feiiow-workers to pray for us and to remember we cannot go forward any faster than they help us in the observance of Missionary Instruction and Sunday Schooi Day. We heg the men to loose us and let us go forward.

FROM ELLISVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: This is just to iet you know we are striving to do everything the church asks of us, and believe we will make a fairly good showing at Conference time. We are making some showing on every call that is made, and in some respects are in better shape than for the past two years.

We were called on to preach the sermon for the closing of the Pleasant Ridge Consolidated School near Hattiesburg, which we did to a splendid and appreciative congregation; also preached the commencement sermon for the Junior College of Ellisville. This was heid in their new auditorium, which will seat one thousand people, and this school is to he complimented for this most splendid huilding. This was a most inspiring occasion, and we were recipients of expressions of many kind and helpful words, hoth hy the faculty and the patrons of the school.

For the benefit of all our preacher friends and others who may read our good paper, will advise you that Mrs. Vaughan has been very iii for the past few weeks, but is now with her sister, Mrs. J. A LETTER FROM MONROE DISTRICT SECRETARY.

My Dear Dr. Carley: It gives me pleasure to report to you for publication in the League department, the results of the organization of two new Epworth Leagues in Rev. David Tarvers' Crew Lake charge. The first, at Fondale, was a Hi League, with ten charter members, Mrs. McCoy and Mrs. Woods being appointed superintendents; Miss Harriet Knight was elected president; Miss Elaine Riser, secretary-treasurer; and Mr. Victor David, Era agent. These young people manifest a great interest in the new work, and immediately upon organization planned their devotional program for the next Sunday evening, and promised to make a great effort to reach 100 per cent on the Standard of Efficiency by the time of our next State Assembly.

The second League, organized Sunday through the splendid help of Bro. Tarver, was a Senior one, at Fairbanks. Though the weather was unfavorable, a splendid group of eleven young people were present after preaching for the organization. Several of them had been in League work before, and therefore great things are expected of them by their pastor, their district secretary and the community. The following officers were elected: Miss Willie Mae Baldwin, president; Mr. Gutteridge, vice president; Miss Jacey Valentine, secretary-treasurer; and Mr. Burnie Porter, Era agent. They, too, are planning to qualify for 100 per cent on the Standard of Efficiency by the time of next State Assembly. Our prayers and thoughts are with them in this great work for their development in the service of our Maker.

W. L. McDUFF,
District Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The annual Epworth League Assembly for the Mississippi Conference Epworth League will be held at the State Teachers' College, Hattiesburg, opening Aug. 20, running through Friday evening, Aug. 24.

The Deau is working up a very fine program, and we feel that in many respects this is going to be our best Assembly up to this time.

The rates for board will be one dollar per day, including Monday and Friday, and the accommodations are almost ideal, with room for practically an unlimited delegation, with two to three persons to a room, one to a bed.

The first meal on the campus will be served at noon Monday of the opening day, and while there will be no program of work until the evening hour, we urge all those who can do so to reach the campus in time to register for the noon meal; the rate will be the same, and this will give the delegates ample time to get room assignments and have an opporounity for rest before the eveuing activities.

Those Who Can Attend.

Any Epworth Leaguer between the ages of thirteen and over (taking in both the Hi League and Senior groups), who has been elected by the local chapter, and approved by the pastor, will be eligible to attend; provided that where there be no Epworth League chapters organized, young people may attend simply by securing the approval of the pastor.

The college will require each delegate to pay board for the entire time when entering, with no claim for refund in case the delegate leaves before the Assembly has adjourned.

The Assembly requires one dollar registration fee, to assist in defraying the expense of the Assembly. All pastors and their wives are welcome, and we hope a large number will find it possible to attend.

The church-wide oratorical contest, using the subject, "Know Missions," was held at Ellisville Wednesday evening, May 30. There were only two entrants in this district, one from the Broad Street Epworth League, Hattiesburg, the other from the Epworth League of the State Teachers' College. Miss Bobby Lee Leggett was entered by the State Teachers's College, and Miss Francis Harrell was entered by the Broad Street chapter. Miss Harrell being the daughter of the District Secretary, it became necessary, by his request, that the contest be conducted by others; hence it was held in Ellisville, where Mr. Grover Jordan, a member of the League Board, had selected judges and made arrangements for the contest. Miss Harrell was given the decision and will represent the Hattiesburg District in the Conference contest to be held probably the fourth Sunday in June. We withhold any comment on these speeches, pending the Conference contest, except to say that we should like to have both of them printed in our column.

We notice the following item in the June Epworth Era:

"An Epworth League in a Baptist College."

"It seems like a contradiction of terms, and yet the fact is vouched for by the Rev. W. V. Pierce, president of the Alabama Conference Epworth League, and the statement may be verified by those who care to visit Judson College, Marion, Ala., where there is an Epworth League which was organized by Miss Rosalind Howell, of Marion, Ala., District Secretary for the Selma District. This remarkable organization is thriving and doing well."

Boy, page B. F. Harrell: "They ain't got nothin' on us." We have a very fine Epworth League chapter in the Mississippi Woman's College, Hattiesburg, and last fall, when the B. Y. P. U. organizations of that college had their school of methods, this Epworth League engaged Mr. Harrell, and had their own school. They receive every possible consideration from the school authorities, and have been doing very fine work.

Advertisement for the Epworth League Assembly will be mailed out in the next few days; pastors and others concerned kindly watch for this matter and see that it is handled in the desired manner.

The Conference President,
J. H. WEEMS.

THE HOWARD WILLIAMS MEETING AT VAIDEN, MISS.

A two-weeks' revival was held in Vaiden in May by that "chosen vessel" of God, Howard S. Williams, and his party. The four churches of our town united their efforts and prayers, and God gave us results that were pleasing, and we believe will be lasting. Christians were strengthened, the indifferent stirred, and sinners were brought to know Jesus as their Savior.

Our beloved pastor, W. O. Hunt, a faithful man of God, shouldered his part of the responsibility of this meeting and contributed much to its success.

Some of God's children have prayed long for just such an awakening, and the hearts of Christian people were made to rejoice when two hundred and eighty men, women and children reconsecrated their lives at the altar, and thirty presented themselves for membership in the churches of Vaiden and community.

Vaiden is indeed a new place. Each Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock business men, visitors, and workmen assemble at some designated place and spend fifteen minutes in prayer, and at 5 o'clock the same day the ladies hold their cottage prayer meeting. The attendance is surprisingly large at both services. Men and women are leading in prayer who never attempted it before.

God has richly blessed us and we want our Advocate friends to rejoice with us. May God bless Mr. Williams wherever he goes, is our prayer.

WORK DONE BY SUB-DEPOSITORY, AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY, NEW ORLEANS.

My report from the Sub-Depository of the Southwestern Agency of the American Bible Society, located at 900 St. Charles Street, New Orleans, La., for the months of March and April is as follows:

The distribution has been 208 Bibles, 599 Testaments, 12,401 Gospels; total, 13,148 volumes.

The four weeks that I was out in the flooded district we sent in orders to the agency headquarters at Dallas, Tex., for 2,175 Bibles, 14,940 Testaments, 33,050 Gospels; a total of 50,165 volumes, to be sent free of charge to the flood sufferers.

During this time I think I traveled one thousand miles where the water had been from one to fifteen feet deep at the time of the flood. We first started out in this work in the southern part of the State among the Arcadians.

These people are a hospitable, God-fearing, home-loving, tender-hearted people. I shall not attempt to tell you what this flood has meant to these people, or of the great suffering of men, women and children, or of the heroic deeds of the rescue workers.

The eight-foot water mark on these homes tells a sad, sad story. I have been upon battle fields in Mexico, but I have never seen anything so pathetic or tragic as this flood; no one will ever be able by tongue or pen to draw a true picture of this great disaster. It is more tragic to me than a youth blown to fragments on the battle field.

All the theologians in the State could not have done more to waken a fraternal feeling among the different churches and the different races than the American Bible Society has done in the distribution of the Scriptures in the flood district. The pastors of the different churches are co-operating in this work.

Yours in His service,

G. A. PERKINS.

Your Church Needs This Bulletin to announce church events to increase attendance to create new life and interest

Winters' DeLuxe Church Bulletins have demonstrated their value to hundreds of churches in communities all over the United States. More than 20,000 are in daily use, many over a period of several years—their spar varnished oak cases retaining original beauty and letters their oroginal legibility.

Old-style card and "slide-in" bulletins can be brought up-to-date with a Winters' grooved steel sign panel and lithographed steel letters, which we offer separately.

Churches who wish to build their own bulletins may buy grooved panel and letters, and build from complete blue prints and instruction sheet which we furnish free.

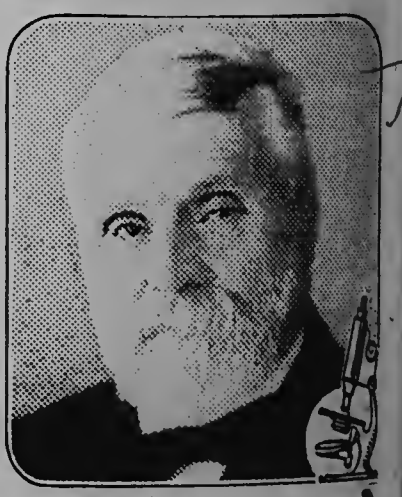
Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies.



W. B. Caldwell M.D.
AT AGE 83

It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

GOOD NEWS FROM BRANDON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: On June 1, I closed a six-days' meeting at Brandon. A large per cent of those in attendance testify to benefits received. Ten were added to the membership—six by baptism and four by certificate. Three infants were baptized. I think we are in better position and condition for further advance.

In the recent campaign for Millsaps, Pelahatchie, R. F. Brown, director, promptly went beyond their allotment; Brandon, H. H. Bullock, director, is still behind, but I hope will come out in full in the near future. Accumulated arrearage on the Superannuate Endowment fund has increased our difficulty on the charge; but a consecrated people overcome many difficulties—oftentimes difficulties that seem insurmountable. There are three small congregations, struggling for existence on the charge; but there are individuals in these whose outlook and zeal lead them to help in the causes of the church at large.

FROM VIVIAN, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: The year is half gone and I am sending in my first "item" from this part of the field.

Vivian has the best financial system in its history. It is a workable plan, and is being "worked."All the interests of the church are taken care of with the budget system. The pastor is usually paid semi-monthly, and the presiding elder is paid monthly.

We paid our Special for Missions with a neat sum above the quota, and had congratulations from Dr. Holmes to the effect that we were the first charge in the Shreveport District to pay out ahead of time.

We had our revivai during the Easter season. Brother P. B. McCullen, our pastor at Hali Summit, was with us two weeks and did us excellent work. He is a success both in the pulpit and out. A fine personality; a good delivery; an unusual command of choice language; carefully chosen subjects; a wonderful poise in the pulpit; a pleasing address; a brotherly, sympathetic spirit; and an uncompromising attitude toward sin, are some of the commendable things about McCullen.

Notwithstanding an epidemic of measles, prevailing "flu," and rain, and mud, sleet and snow, we had an increasing interest and congregations to the last service. At the final service large numbers were turned away who could not enter the church.

We recommend P. B. McCullen to any pastor who wants a safe, sane, conservative man to hold his revival.

We did not measure up to our two former years in putting over the Advocate proposition, but have sent in twenty-seven names for renewal.

We have three Missionary Societies, three Epworth Leagues, a good Wesley Brotherhood and a fine Sunday school.

We have received twenty new members since Conference.

WHIPPET FOUR RUNS WITHOUT MOTOR STOP FOR 1,005 HOURS.

Stamina of Whippet Demonstrated in Gruelling Test With Hood Locked and Sealed.

With hood locked and sealed by the Warden of Davenport, a strictly stock Whippet Four recently established what is believed to be a new world's endurance record when it ran continuously without a motor stop for 1,005 hours, or just three hours less than forty-two days and nights. This eclipses the former Whippet non-stop engine run of 973 hours.

This non-stop mark was made in Tasmania, during which time the Whippet covered a total of 10,613 miles. During the many stops made at various points by the Whippet, the engine continued to sing along smoothly but was never permitted to stop.

In addition to sealing the Whippet's hood, an official observer was with the car from the start of the test until the end.

Throughout the remarkable stamina test the Whippet engine functioned perfectly despite the fact that it was put to numerous severe tests as it piled up mile after mile over good roads and almost impassable highways. In the final week of the test the Whippet Four made three trips between Smithton and Hobart, covering 1,800 miles and running most of the time at high speed.

An examination of the Whippet engine after the test was completed showed it to be performing with the same smoothness and quietness that characterized its first day's run. Those who examined the engine said that its ability to run continuously for such a length of time without showing any ill effects, is a distinct tribute to the inbuilt stamina of the Whippet Four, a product of the Willys-Overland Company, of Toledo.—Adv.

Puts An End To Bunion Pains

No Need to Suffer Another Day

There is one simple yet inexpensive way to reduce inflammation of swollen toe joints and help get them down to normal and that is to apply Moone's Emerald Oil night and morning.

Ask any first class druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and refuse to accept anything in its place. It is such a highly concentrated preparation that two ounces lasts a long time and furthermore if one bottle of Emerald Oil does not give you complete satisfaction you can have your money refunded.

Special note: People who want to reduce swollen or varicose veins should get a bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at once. Applied night and morning as directed they will quickly notice an improvement which will continue until the veins and bunches are reduced to normal

A BETTER FINANCIAL SYSTEM.

If there is anybody that does not think the church needs a better financial system than the one now in use, we do not know who it is. We have heard many people—preachers and laymen—express themselves concerning this matter, and they have agreed unanimously in the opinion that a better system is needed.

When we analyze the present system, it is easy to see why there is such general dissatisfaction. The analysis shows that we are trying to raise money in too many ways. First of all, we have the assessments—for Conference Work and General Work; then we have the local budget—ministerial support, local expenses, etc.; then we have church-wide campaigns for special causes—missions, education, superannuate endowment; then we have the special for missions; then we have the annual Golden Cross Enrollment; in addition to these, we have the annual collections for special causes, such as our orphanages; in addition, in nearly every Annual Conference there are special Conference-wide campaigns for needy causes—educational institutions, etc.; in addition to all these, there is always going on special solicitation of individuals in behalf of particular institutions and special interests; in addition to these, practically every local church has some financial problem that requires extra funds; and in addition to all these, the church is frequently appealed to for funds to assist worthy causes in general—Near East Relief, Chinese Famine Relief, etc. The result is that it has become very difficult to get through a Sunday without some direct appeal for money, or the announcement that such an appeal is soon to be made.

We do not think the church as a whole is giving more than it ought to give; and we do not know many individuals that are giving beyond their means. Why, then, is there such general dissatisfaction with our present system and such insistent demand for a better one?

We think the answer is plain: The necessity, under our present system, for taking one collection after another, of putting on one campaign after another, of carrying on intensive periods for collections year after year, has done two things: it has made of the ministry largely an agency of propaganda for financial activities, and it has produced a state of mind in the laity that borders very closely upon resentment when a "special" or a "campaign" is even so much as mentioned. It is evident, too, that the financial returns under the present system are growing less all the time, while more and more intensive methods have to be used to produce even these diminishing returns.

We surely cannot be understood to mean by what we have written above that any of the causes for which the church makes its appeals are not important, or that they do not need every dollar that is asked. We believe they are tremendously important, and that they ought to have even more than is asked for.

But we are face to face with a situation that, in our opinion, is highly critical and that threatens disaster unless a better financial system can be found. Can such a system be devised? We believe it can be, and we make the following suggestions in that direction:

1. Let the next General Conference declare all church-wide campaigns, including the special for missions, closed. And when we say "closed," we mean just exactly that. In declaring all these campaigns closed, let the collecting agencies be instructed to cancel all pledges that have been made in these campaigns except those whose makers themselves ask to be kept alive. Wipe the slate clean.

2. Let the next General Conference declare that for the ensuing quadrennium there shall be no church-wide campaign for any cause. The effect of this will be to give Annual Conferences and local churches an opportunity to meet their own pressing financial needs. At the same time it would be helpful for the General Conference to declare that in the future there ought not to be more than one church-wide campaign carried on during any quadrennium.

3. Let the Commission on Budget weigh carefully the needs of all our connectional interests and recommend assessments that will provide for those needs under the most economical administration, taking care not to increase the assessments now in force except upon what appears to be a dire necessity; and then let the increase be the smallest possible amount.

4. Let the church, largely through the General, the Conference, and the local Boards of Lay Activities, set about diligently, earnestly, determinedly, to collect these assessments in full, making "a Methodist dollar worth one hundred cents."

5. Let a process of education in Christian stewardship be carried on systematically throughout the church, without reference to any special cause or any approaching or contemplated collection. When our people are really educated to the duty and privilege of giving their money to support and extend the Kingdom of God, they will give cheerfully and liberally.

We believe the foregoing suggestions contain the essentials of a better financial system than we now have. The church needs to balance its budget. We have heard it said that a revival will come when the church begins to give as it ought to give; we believe it is more likely that people will give as they ought to give when a revival comes. We believe in preaching about money as occasion demands; but we believe that this age needs more preaching than it is getting about repentance, faith, punishment of sin, the reward of righteousness, purity of heart and life, and all those things that have to do with the regeneration of the soul by the grace of God made manifest in Jesus Christ. Without a converted membership the church will become formal and mechanical. A beautiful piece of machinery is useless without power enough to operate it. The primary need of the church is spiritual power—and that power will come from more religion, and not from more money. Let us develop the power and the money will take care of itself.

TEN YEARS ON THE TRIPOD

The date of this issue of the Advocate—June 21, 1928—has a special significance to the editor if to nobody else, for just ten years ago he entered upon the work of his present position. The announcement of his election to succeed Dr. R. A. Meek, resigned, appeared in the Advocate of June 13, 1918; but it was with the issue of June 20 that he actually began the active duties of the editorship.

In a kind of reminiscent mood, we turned back to our files to look again at the beginning, to see what our feelings, hopes, purposes were at that time, and to check against them the experiences of the intervening years. In that first issue, under the caption, "By Way of Beginning—Personal," we wrote: "In view of the short length of time for which I have been elected to serve, it would, perhaps, be unbecoming in me to undertake to announce a policy; I shall content myself, therefore, with declaring a purpose and expressing a hope. It is my purpose to devote all the energy I possess to the task of making the paper genuinely useful in promoting the welfare of the church I love, which to me represents the highest form of evangelical Christianity in the world. It is my hope that through this ministry I may be able to develop and strengthen, somewhat at least, the personal religious life of my readers. What a joy it would be to lighten some burden, comfort some heart, clear away the mists from some tear-dimmed eyes! I rely upon the prayers and sympathy of all."

Through ten years our purpose has not changed, nor has our hope varied. We have tried to make the paper useful in promoting the welfare of the church we love; and there has been the ever-present hope that the reading of the paper would minister to the religious life of those into whose homes it goes. If we were to remain editor for ten thousand years, we could have no different purpose, no greater hope.

These ten years have been good years. Mistakes have been made, yes; but as we have labored at our task, striving always to maintain a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men, we have realized the blessed fellowship of kindred minds and have been comforted and sustained by the sympathy and prayers of many friends, both known and unknown. Despite personal bereavement and perplexing hours—not greater, though, than many others have experienced during the same time—the years have passed quickly and happily. We hope it has been thus with our readers.

PROMPT PHILANTHROPY.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Mr. Julius Rosenwald's views of the wisdom of prompt philanthropy have attracted wide and approving attention.

He has given upwards of $20,000,000 for the promotion of the public welfare; and he insists that all of it shall be expended within twenty-five years after his death, and that no part of it shall remain undistributed in the form of invested endowments.

This view is not a recent, or suddenly conceived, notion of Mr. Rosenwald. A good many years ago he was reported to have said: "I believe in seeing the money that is not necessary being used to help others at once."

The idea is in truth as old as the days of King Solomon, who a thousand years before the beginning of the Christian era said: "Withhold not them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it. Say not unto thy neighbor, Go and come again, and to-morrow I will give; when thou hast it by thee" (Proverbs iii:27 and 28).

Postponing to the future benevolences sorely needed and easily possible to-day is a delusion and a snare, although it is often advocated with many specious plausibilities.

In the Parable of the Sower, our Lord warned men aganist "the deceitfulness of riches," and this deceitfulness is manifold in form and ruinous in its consequences. It often deceives and destroys the very elect. Hence, money has been called "saint-seducing gold."

In nothing is it more seducing than its power to procrastinate benevolence.

One man will say in extenuation of his selfish delay to do good with what he has, "I must lay up against a rainy day." Thus he leaves human need in the midst of dreadful storms already blowing to make provision for himself and his family against imaginary tempests in the future that may never come at all.

Another says: "I will acquire all the money I can in order to do good with it; but I will not give now, in order that I may give more largely in the future." He forgets that money when transmuted into human good multiplies in power for blessing the world far more rapidly than when it is held that it may be augmented by profitable investments even when its owner really and truly intends to use it for benevolent ends in the future. Moreover, money, when held with the best intentions for future good, may be lost in efforts to increase it.

If the money which men have intended to give ultimately to Christian education but which has been lost in the meantime, had been given promptly, the educational institutions of our country would have been helped by multiplied millions of dollars, and many thousands of youths who have grown up in tragic ignorance would have been enlightened citizens to-day.

In 1611 Sir Thomas Sutton established the Charter House School in London at a cost of less than $100,000 in our money. During the three hundred years of its existence it has done an immeasurable amount of good, and has justified the claim made for it that "it is the masterpiece of Protestant charity in England." Among the many eminent men blessed by it are Sir William Blackstone in the realm of Law; Bishop Barrow and John Wesley in Theology; and Joseph Addison, Richard Steele and W. M. Thackeray in Literature.

If Sir Thomas Sutton's money had been profitably invested for three hundred years, and not a penny of it lost, the huge sum thus accumulated would not equal in value the monetary, mental, moral and spiritual good which has flowed from the Charter House School since he established it.

What has become of the mercantile investments made by the men of his day, and withheld from philanthropic uses? They all are gone into the oblivion of the fabled wealth of Croesus, and not a trace of them can now be found. So will it be with the selfish wealth of our land and time.

Mr. Julius Rosenwald gives to the wealthy men and women of our day an invaluable lesson by both his counsel and his example, which lesson they will do well to lay to heart.

But he goes further than the commendation of prompt philanthropy by individuals. He wisely advises against the needless hoarding of funds by vain boards and selfish trustees.

The editorial approval given to Mr. Rosenwald by the Chicago Tribune makes this view of the philanthropist plain and praiseworthy. The editor says he "has observed that the trustees of philauthropic foundations often are more concerned with the perpetuation intact of the sums in their care than with increasing the sum of human knowledge and happiness for which the funds were created."

The Tribune adds: "It is to be hoped that his example will be followed by other men of wealth who expect their money to make the world a better place to live in. A study of the great foundations which have been set up by other wealthy men leaves little doubt that Mr. Rosenwald's course is wiser. Money earned by shrewd men, who know the value of a dollar, is being wasted on a host of dust-collecting surveys. Far from honoring the names and memories of the donors, these funds tend to bring them into disrepute."

Endowments for colleges and universities, unhampered by senseless conditions and administered by their own trustees to serve increasing and varying needs as they arise, are indispensable to the cause of education and the cure of human ignorance.

But the establisbment of ponderous boards, enriched by many millions of dollars, which assume the supervision and over-lordship of all the institutions of learning of the nation, and which thereby set up a bureaucratic type of education, is extremely dangerous. By their degrading doles, given on imperious conditions, they repress wholesome philanthropy and impair the freedom of educational efforts and enterprises.

Some years ago when one of these super-boards was established, and its alignment with a similar over-lording board was announced, the New York Journal of Commerce discussed the matter quite clearly and cogently as follows:

"A system of giving which has its own rules and customs, which is governed by principles of selection laid down in the beginning, which ramifies throughout the country and embraces especially those smaller institutions that are hampered by narrow means, is an infinitely more powerful force in the shaping of opinion than any single capitalist who makes separate and often uncouditional gifts to be controlled and invested by the institutions themselves could ever be. As a mechanism for controlling academic opinion, there has perhaps never been anything in the history of education that would compare with the board system of subsidizing learning.

"Gifts to education are like campaign contributions in that they are best made in relatively small amounts and from many sources. Under such circumstauces they are likely to leave the recipients in position to choose their own course in matters of opinion and teaching. If they must be large, it requires greater force of character to maintain independence of thought and action. Such freedom has been lacking in too many quarters. The spectacle of a university president preaching the mainteuauce of some of the worst abuses of capitalism and another meekly bowing the knee to receive the money offered by those for whose acts he had but lately suggested social ostracism as penalty is not edifying. Instances can be given in abundance where the mere prospect of an immediate gift has changed the whole current of a college administrator's thought and made him trim his sails on an entirely new tack to catch the favoring breeze of prosperity. The craze and competition for large numbers of students has greatly crippled those who would uphold the older traditions of independent economic thinking. Increasing numbers mean increasing expense in college adminstration and lead to growing dependence on wealth of doubtful origin. This, among other reasons, is ground for thinking the enormous benefactions of the past few years, whether as pensions, endowments or annual gifts to colleges, may put our academic thinkers into a moral straitjacket at the same time that they are freed from the cramping influences of limited means."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat was equally outspoken concerning the sinister influence of these boards on American education, speaking in part as follows:

"The atmosphere of classroom and campus is dangerously subject to taint; the habits of thought of its students may with comparative ease be given a twist not easily corrected. Whether the powerful engine thus created is now put to sinister uses or not, the temptation to employ it is ever present, and must inevitably grow stronger as the system gathers strength and force.

"Here in the South the temptation of the colleges to seek the conditional gratulties is great because the funds available for education are small and the need of more abundant educational facilities is pressing. In struggling schools, where the problem of maintenance is difficult, the offer of aid in philanthropic guise is naturally attractive. But no college that is worthy to live can afford to surrender its independence nor submit its policies to the guidance of any oligarchy which draws its authority and owes its existence to a few excessively rich men who have, after all, a very heavy and very practical stake in the venture."

Concerning the inevitable and demoralizing mendicancy created by depedence upon and subjection to these boards the Springfield (Mass.) Republican said:

"We may expect communities and institutions to develop a mendicant attitude and turn from self-help to help from beyond which flows down as if from some superior source that is to be held in worshipful consideration. How socially demoralizing this must be no one can fail to understand."

Very much of the evil which these able editors predicted twenty years ago has come to pass, and the end is not yet. Colleges have been denatured and universities have been alienated from the purposes of their foundations. Educational enterprises of every class have been wrenched from their rightful owenrship and perverted to purposes positively hostile to the high ends which they were designed to serve.

It would be well for the country if these powerful boards were dissolved; but this can hardly be expected now. But prompt and generous philanthropy upon the part of generous people can soon save all our unperverted institutions from falling under the domination of these dangerous overlords.

Let all those educational enterprises in the South which have not fallen under the control of these boards continue to refuse to barter away their independence and sell their birthrights for a mess of pottage from men which have no regard for the high mission which God has called them to fulfill.

Let them rely upon the support of those who know their worth and care for their future usefulness. And let the prompt philanthropy of our own people supply all their wants.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

The epistle to the Galatians is confessedly the Magna Charta of Christian freedom. In this ancient and age-long classic the church is warned against Judaic legalism, and the preaching of those who would seduce the followers of Christ from the simple gospel of a crucified, risen Lord. At the opening of the fifth chapter the author sounds this clarion note, "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." In another epistle he exhorts, "having done all, stand."

America to-day must heed this warning. Whether by design or merely for sensational purpose, there is undoubtedly a propaganda abroad, which by inuendo or perversion of truth openly or covertly attacks the cardinal principles of our government and its institutions. Many of our people read nothing else than newspapers, and these malign animadversions are flaunted abroad day after day in some of the popular sheets. Our Lord has borne witness to the fact that only the truth can make men free. I sometimes think we are too careful concerning hurting the feelings of the enemies of truth. Too often good men are silent when real vital issues are at stake. Truth is made a martyr to compromise or a false sense of delicacy. We who are witnesses for the Prince of truth must ever be watchful and faithful to our high trust, and show our vital interest in the welfare of our people by boldly and fearlessly bearing true testimony, when momentous and important questions are pending.

My preacher has just assured me that sins of the spirit are more deadly than sins of the flesh. But the latter wreck uncounted souls. A ruined body is bad enough, yet a ruined soul is an infinite tragedy. Lest, however, I lead into a maze of casuistry, I forbear and say that sin in any form is ruinous, and only by the grace of a considerate, merciful God can its fell results be overcome. I will add this: the elder son in that parable of redeeming grace and matchless love, never "came on." His was a sin of the spirit. "Watch, stand fast in faith, quit you like men." There are thieves abroad in the land. They will steal the best and fairest if the good man of the household sleeps at his post.

"Thinketh no evil." As usual, this old preacher knew what he was talking about. For he had wonderful experiences and fearsome trials in the affairs of life and grace. Besides these, he was a genius and exercised his God-given talents for saying things, so striking, so brilliant, so appealing to one's conviction of their lasting fitness, that they live and grow, containing the seed of immortal truth and surpassing beauty. One who lives and thinks in the atmosphere—breathes its very air—of First Corinthians 13 has his habitation mighty near the kingdom of God. In fact, his citizenship is there, for his thoughts, his hopes, his very assurances, find their full fruition in no other country, save the heavenly.

Thinking evil is a dangerous, deadly habit. It is founded in selfishness, suspicion and want of confidence in one's fellow-man or woman, as well as in the grace of God to redeem and save from evil. It darkens all the light and beauty of genuine fellowship, and the sad tragedy of its fell influence is that its possessor is resting under the shadow of his own miserable making. Brotherhood, confidence, trust, are among the fairest graces that bloom in the garden of God's planting, the human soul; and if these are uprooted, a desert place of doubts, suspicion and misery is left. Nothing is surer than "as a man thinketh in his heart so is he," for thought is the giant molder and shaper of character and destiny.

Perhaps in no other way, among the revelations made, has our gracious Heavenly Father shown more wisdom and understanding of our race than in making faith the condition of saving grace. The powers of darkness have perpetrated a theft on his kingdom by making faith in and of evil a means of ruin and to those who are the servants thereof. Believing all things bad, mean, selfish, it is a moral impossibility for such to believe any good, for the light of such a soul is in eclipse and darkness covers its seeing face. So, beloved, let us who profess to be the children of light think aright, think merciful, considerate, charitable thoughts, for these are basic and all-pervading to the fuller joys of Christian living.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Tarver and Crew Lake.

Crew Lake is rallying splendidly under the energetic leadership of David Tarver. He is a tireless worker, an exceptionally good preacher, and he looks carefully after every phase of the program of our church. The salary on this charge was given a forty per cent increase at the beginning of the year, and while it is not fully paid up to date, there are reasons for expecting that it will all be finally paid.

A Sunday school, Woman's Missionary Society and church have been organized at Swartz, which is a large center of carbon industry. We have a good beginning among the people of that place, and the future holds bright promise for our work there. We are handicapped at present for lack of a church building, but plans are being made looking toward the erection of a small chapel in the near future.

Sterlington is the base of the Louisiana Light and Power Company for this section. This great corporation is headed by one of the strong Methodist laymen of Arkansas, and with the other industries in that little city we are given a good opportunity for service.

Brother Tarver also preaches at Crew Lake, Fairbanks, and Faulk's Chapel, being kept exceedingly busy to look after all these congregations. He has shown marked ability in his efforts, and we may well look for rapid progress Methodistically under his direction in all sections of the Crew Lake charge.

ANNUAL MEETING, BOARD OF TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

The annual meeting of the Board of Temperance and Social Service will be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., July 4 and 5.

In addition to the business meeting of the Board, there will be public meetings and round table discussions on July 4, 5, 6, and 7. The topics discussed will be: "Family, Marriage and the Home," discussion led by Dr. M. J. Exner, the outstanding authority on social hygiene in the United States; "International Relations," discussion led by Dr. Linley Gordon, Secretary of the Church Peace Union, and by the chairman of the Board; "Prohibition and Law Enforcement," probably determined by the resolutions of the two political conventions; "Industrial Relations," emphasizing labor of women and children, limitation of hours and night work, to be conducted by Dr. Broaddus Mitchell, of Johns Hopkins University.

All persons interested in the great social questions of the day will be welcome to the annual meeting of the Board of Temperance and Social Service at Lake Junaluska.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

By Mrs. S. J. Davies.

Our Father, in his kindly providence, has sent to the lives of his children so many blessings and privileges, and we are so accustomed to enjoying them that we forget they are from him, that we are his, "bought with a price," and that while these blessings are ours to use they bring added responsibilities, and that as good stewards we must "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

No nation is more blessed than ours, and perhaps no class enjoys more of life's best things than we women of America. We are keepers, first, of the home, and every question that concerns our homes is very vital to each of us. All reforms interest us as they affect our homes and our children; and the success of any reform measure depends much on the interest taken in it by the Christian women of our land.

The prohibition of the liquor traffic is one of the greatest reforms in the history of the nation. Strong drink and the effects of strong drink have been more destructive of human life and happiness than have all the plagues, famines, and wars of civilization. The late President Eliot, of Harvard, said before one of the great bar associations of America, that if civilization did not destroy strong drink, strong drink would destroy civilization.

Without the prayers and the influence and the vote of our women, we would probably not have the Eighteenth Amendment. Now the responsibility is ours to use our prayers, our influence and our vote for the enforcement of the law. No doubt we women all pray earnestly for God's help in driving from our land the curse of alcohol. We cannot afford to prevent God from answering our prayers by voting for any man who is opposed to prohibition. Woman's influence is destined to be more and more widely recognized.

We of the South find ourselves in a dilemma. We are dry and Democrats. The Democratic party of the North is composed largely of immigrants who do not understand or appreciate our American ideals and of men who control the liquor interests. They are using every method available to discredit the Eighteenth Amendment, and to influence men and women, and even boys and girls, to drink and thus bring the law into disrepute.

Are we good stewards if we allow ourselves to be influenced by them or abide by the decision of presidential electors who were not elected by the people and who are pledged to cast their votes for a wet president, one who is supported by a class that would so cripple our prohibition laws as to render them useless?

What would Jesus do if he were in our place? Let us think seriously of these responsibilities, realizing that as good stewards we must answer for all blessings we enjoy and that not the least of these responsibilities is to vote as we pray.

Shreveport, La.

A CALL TO SERVICE.

By Rev. J. F. Dring.

"What shall I do with Jesus, which is called Christ?" Matt. 27:22.

As I sit in my study this morning, I cannot get myself settled as to all of the rattle I find in the machinery that we preachers have to operate in the form of a church. I am sure there is not a thing wrong with the mechanism of it, or the power that drives it. Yet there is some lost motion somewhere.

I was at a district meeting some time ago, and I was amused, startled, dumbfounded, and puzzled, because of the difference of opinion advanced by every speaker of the day. The Sunday school was declared to be the outstanding organization of the church, because it had to do with the education of the child; the Epworth League was declared to be the outstanding organization of the church because it had to do with the training of the youth; the Woman's Missionary Society was the great propelling force of the church, because it had to do with the training, teaching, and complete development of the women of our church. The prayer meeting, one thing almost obsolete in the church, was almost set aside and left out of the program of the church, because it takes heaven, devotion, sacrifice, love and godly fear to run it.

I am in perfect accord with the program of the church, and I would not have any one to gather from these lines that I am not; but I am afraid that we have lost the compass. It is grieving to my heart, because we seem to have lost sight of the lighthouse, for fear we may be drifting against a rock, or some other obstructive object.

I am sure that the Sunday school is a great force in the church; but it is the child of the church, and I do not believe it is good policy to make the child the ruler of the house. My children should be subject to the parental instruction.

If the time ever comes in the life of the church when the Sunday school will foster the church instead of the church fostering the Sunday school, it will be a dark day in the life of the church. This is true, or at least I believe it is true, of the other organizations of the church, and it seems to me, there is a fault somewhere. It may be, we have left out the Christ.

The only mission the church of God has in this world, as the writer sees it, is "to lead people to a saving knowledge of God, and an acceptance of Jesus Christ as personal Saviour, and to keep them saved," and when we go off in a wild-goose chase after any other motive we are straying from the path of the Master. God has declared that the church is of heaven, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. This I believe with all my heart; but if we try to make the church a social guide, we will have little place for the Christ.

Our Lord did set a new social order, but the church is not a promoter of social functions; it is an institution designed by God himself to save men from hell, and prepare them for heaven. Out of this fact may come the perfect social order, but it will be the direct effect of the transformed heart and mind.

As I try to carry on this great work, I wonder if we are giving, in all the work, first place to the Master. Pilate said, "What shall I do with Jesus?" I have him here, and he must be placed. If I give education the right of way, what will I do with him? If I give the Sunday school the right of way, what shall I do with Jesus? If I give the Epworth League the first place, what shall I do with Jesus? It may seem to the reader a silly question; but, brother, sister, I declare to you, it is hard to find the Christ in many of the programs of the church. I believe the Sunday school is only effective as it leads the pupil to God; a school that has a lesser motive is a disgrace, blot, and shame to any church or community. The same is true of all of the other kindred organizations of the church.

It is a miserable shame, in this enlightened age, to try to fool, or dope an intelligent church into a state of salvation. Bless your heart, dear reader, there never was a time in the history of the church when we needed more of the Christ in the program of the church. What shall I do with the Christ? He has called me to serve him, and I am commanded by the community to foster every political, commercial, civic, and religious organization in the whole country. I am asked to join all the different secret organizations that I may have better access to the men of the church, and when I have joined them, I am compelled to sit and listen to them; name their devices that they are called upon to promote for the betterment of humanity (so-called), and I must subscribe to all of this program because I am a member of that particular organization. Then on Sunday morning, I enter the pulpit, with my hand tied, my feet hobbled, my tongue paralyzed, and my pocket sewed up to all that Jesus said, because he has declared that the church of God is the primary thing I should be interested in. I must not say or do anything to ruffle the feelings of the superintendent or president of the different organizations of the church; if I do, they immediately withdraw. The child is now directing the policies of the home, church, and other kindred work.

In all of this, I ask again, What shall I do with the Christ? I am distressed. God has called me to go, teach, and disciple his people; yet I find I am trammeled with many objects that hinder me. I call out of my distress, and ask, as a drowning man, I am grabbing at everything in reach to make the landing. For heaven's sake, will some one give to me a solution of this grave problem?

No process of education will ever save a man; no school of pedagogy will be able to bring about a solution to the problem. Jesus said, "Marvel not, I say ye must be born again." This whole problem is one that can be solved only by the new birth. The church is of heaven, and no scheme of operation will be successful aside from the spirit of Christ. The church is of God, and it can operate only with spiritual influence. I am well aware of the fact, it takes money to run the church; but I am not convinced that an ungodly set of men can run it because they have put their money in it. God's great church is of heaven, and no ungodly man has a place within its fold, it matters not if every tooth in his head is a gold one, and the very tacks in his shoes are made of the same material, if every button on his coat is studded with diamonds; unless he, or she, has met the Christ, and found him to be the pearl of great price, they have no place in the church.

I long to see the day of old-time religion come back. I say come back; oh I am anxious to hear the shout of new-born souls, when the camp of Israel shall be stirred from center to circumference, when the church shall be able to command its children.

What shall I do with Jesus? I shall place him in the center of every church activity with which I have to do. I will not tolerate any part or parcel of a program that does not make the Christ the center of attraction. I will not sell out to a bunch of ungodly church members who are not zealous for God, heaven, and the Master. I will give Jesus first place in my heart. The church will be the place where we will advertise the jewels of heaven, telling the price that must be paid to obtain them, and the disaster that will come to the individual who will not pay the price.

My time as a Christian is sold to God. I am bought with a price, and the price has been paid. I am not my own, therefore I will give my life, my time, my talent, with whatever else I may possess, that Jesus may be glorified in me and my life.

I think now of the words of the Master, "How oft would I have gathered you as a hen doth gather her brood under her wing, and ye would not." The blessed Lord does not want his children to become unruly. Oh how anxious he is for us to come and shelter under his mighty wing! Great God of heaven, hear us—we desire to make thy church spiritual.

Jonesboro, La.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Dear Dr. Carley: I cannot refrain from registering in the dear old Advocate my admiration of and amazement at the unprecedented achievements wrought at Indianola in the last few months under the splendid leadership of Rev. J. D. Wroten and his official board. When I visited Brother Wroten and his good people something over a year ago, I found only a shell of a house, which was called a church—a house wholly inadequate for any worthwhile program. I found the Sunday school attendance to be from 100 to 140; the church attendance small; the people disorganized and discouraged. But even under those unfavorable conditions one could see a fire of faith, hope and determination in the face and eyes of Brother Wroten and his faithful few for better things.

What does one see now? A beautiful modern church plant with every necessary equipment for the successful prosecution of the church's program. The Sunday school enrollment has reached 305—the average attendance for May was 250. For ten Sundays (from opening day) some one has joined the church each Sunday. Eight are to join next Sunday. The membership is happy, responsive and enthusiastic. Notwithstanding Indianola's being in the flood-stricken area of the delta, in the last twelve months the people there have put in God's hand the magnificent sum of $25,833.30, and during all that time the people were out of a building and disorganized.

And that is not all. Brother Wroten has a peculiar child organization—the Rose Bud Circle, which keeps the children from 8 years and under at church. They have a Junior, Epworth Hi and Senior League—all flourishing. To see all you will have to visit Brother Wroten and his busy army. Great are the people called Methodists in Indianola. All honor and praise to their loyalty, faith, and far-sightedness. With God's help, with a pastor of vision and leadership, the people can do anything God wants them to do.

Rural Extension and Missionary Secretary.

THE BISHOP AND THE PRESIDING ELDERS PUSH MILLSAPS COLLEGE CAMPAIGN.

At the meeting on Tuesday of last week in Jackson of presiding elders of the North Mississippi and the Mississippi Conferences, Bishop Warren A. Candler issued a call to the Methodist host in Mississippi to continue its determined effort to equip properly Millsaps College, which is making such a large and definite contribution of trained leaders to the church. Talks were made by Dr. D. M. Key, Dr. A. F. Watkins, Dr. J. L. Decell, Rev. L. P. Wasson, and Judge J. G. McGowen.

Bishop Candler, in a profound and inspiring address, emphasized the necessity of the church's adequately maintaining its colleges if it is to continue to produce its own leaders. He said, in part: "Any failure of our people in Mississippi to sustain Millsaps College by giving it adequate equipment and generous endowment will mean much damage to both church and State. It is a great thing to build imposing churches, but great churches without great preachers in them will be very disappointing to those who erect and maintain them."

Bishop Candler called special attention to the outstanding challenge of that "splendid Baptist layman," B. B. Jones, who has agreed to give $50,000 to the Millsaps campaign if the Methodist churches will raise their goals.

The presiding elders expressed determination to exert every effort to lead their respective districts to glorious victory.

Barney Eaton, of Gulfport, general chairman of the campaign, is now calling on the charges in the two Conferences to endeavor to complete their goals this month wherever possible.

Following are the resolutions adopted by the Bishop and presiding elders:

"Whereas, the campaign for funds for the enlargement of the physical equipment of Millsaps College has achieved a good measure of success, marked by (1) the wide interest in and realization of the fine service of Millsaps College to the church; (2), the enthusiastic and successful completion of their part of the task by many individual charges; (3), the offer of Mr. B. B. Jones, a generous Baptist layman, of $50,000 towards the goal; and (4), the generous response of the city of Jackson and the completion of its quota, which makes possible the immediate erection of the much needed Science Building; and,

"Whereas, we recognize that conditions in various charges made wise the delaying of the appeal in said charges and made necessary the continuation of the campaign; and,

"Whereas, we feel that never before did a more important crisis face the church and that the need of the full amount of $650,000 is absolutely imperative;

"Therefore, be it resolved by the Bishop in charge of the Conferences in Mississippi, and the presiding elders who labor with him, That we urge each and every pastor in the State to see to it that this campaign is put on in every congregation within our State. To this end we pledge ourselves to present this matter in all our quarterly conferences and to keep the question before our people until we shall have completed the task to which we have set our hands.

"Respectfully submitted,

"WARREN A. CANDLER, Presiding Bishop.

W. C. T. U. ASKS CO-OPERATION.

There can be no douht that the fight against the Eighteenth Amendment will be pushed aggressively. The W. C. T. U. worked for this amendment, and must now work to hold It, and to enforce it. In former years scarcely a town in this State was without a W. C. T. U. organizatlon. It is very important that tbe women who stand for total abstinence and prohiblton shouid agaln take up this work.

The following information is given as to the National and State work during the last few months:

The National W. C. T. U. planned and carried out a nation-wide campaign to arouse public sentiment In support of the Eighteenth Amendment. National officers wili attend the Natioai Republican and Democratlc conventions to ask for strong resoiutions.

Each State W. C. T. U. made its own campaign, following the llnes laid down by the National. The Executive Board of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. met in January, consldered tbe politlcal situation, and made plans for such a campaign as our resources would permit. Tbese plans were carried out. Literature was widely distrihuted. Public meetings were held, our representatlves presented the suhject at State conventions, and other meetings where the courtesy of the platform was extended to ns.

The April numher of "The Mississippl White Ribbon" was a special campaign numher, and was sent to minlsters and presidents of church societies, and many others outslde of the W. C. T. U.

It was the duty of State W. C. T. U. officers to attend the State Democratic convention and ask for strong resolutions. This also was done. Several State officers were present. Our members in general were invited to come to Jackson, and by so doing show their interest in our resolutions. There was a good response to this invitation, and some of our women came from distant parts of the State, and took part in the demonstratlon made. Our resolutlons were entrusted to a member of the Resolutions Committee, and the resolution instructing for dry candldates only, was hrought out on a minority report signed by Mr. Lowry Love and Mr. L. T. Kennedy.

Quite a number of peopie have asked why the W. C. T. U. women attended the convention. The answer is given above. We would have heen recreant to our trust had we failed to present these resoiutions and to show our interest in them by our presence.

There should and must be a W. C. T. U. organization in every county. Ten thousand memhers should be enrolled within the next few months. To accomplish these things I ask the active assistance of those who read this letter. I very earnestly ask that you write to State W. C. T. U. headquarters, 213 Millsaps Building, Jackson, for further Information. We ask you to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty, for surely temperance is the Lord's work.

State President.

SEEING THE WEST WITH THE SUNDAY SCHOOL DELEGATES.

By Van. Carter, General Secretary of the Louisiana Council of Religious Education.

In the six artlcles that havo appeared from time to time In the New Orleans Christlan Advocate describing the tour of the special traln of the Louisiana-Mlssissippi delegates to the World's Sunday School Convention to he held in Los Angeles July 11-18, we have tried to present some of the outstanding places of America so that those going on the trip would know beforehand how worthwhile an itinerary had been planned. We have given details of the places to be visited with the hope that those who were not quite decided might be helped to a decision and join with us in this wonderful twenty-one days' tour of the West. Now In thls closing articie, our heart's desire is that we may all know that this special traln is not merely a pleasure tour, hut It Is a real spiritual advénture, for the week we spend in Los Angeles at the World's Sunday School Convention, will he a great spirituai feast to those of us fortunate to sit at the feet of the Christlan leaders, who come from the four corners of the earth, to tell of the triumphs of the gospei of Jesus Christ.

The general theme of the convention, "Thy Kingdom Come," is In ltseif a most alluring topic, and when we hear tbe four outstanding addresses on "The Mandate for Advancing the Kingdom," hy Dr. Charles R. Watson, President of American University, Cairo, Egypt; "The Motive for Advancing the Kingdom," hy Bisbop Fred Fisber, of the Methodlst Episcipal Church, Calcutta, India; "The Method for Advancing the Kigdom," hy Dr. R. E. Diffendorfer, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, New York City; "The Message for Advancing the Kingdom," by Prof. Rajab B. Manikam, of Madras College, Madras, India, we will have a concrete knowledge of how far the kingdom has advanced throughout the world and how far it may furtber advance within the next few years if the Christians of the world will give themselves earnestly to the task.

Some 7,000 delegates, representing fifty countries, will be present, and one of the remarkahle things of the program is that tbe spirit of nationaiism is so potent throughout the world that the various foreign countrles represented on the program will be represented by their native sons and daughters rather than by the missionaries, as has been the order of previous conventions. Of special significance will be the various national conferences of the convention. These are being arraged in consultation with leaders of the Foreign Mission Boards of America, and as far as possible all Christian work from these areas will be presented, lncluding Africa, China, Japan, Korea, the Near East, Europe, Mexico, South America, India and the Philippines. Religious Education workers are taking a great interest in this program of the tenth World's Sunday School Convention, for out of it they are expecting to bring the nations of the earth to the realization that the kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, can come through the childhood of the world.

Arrangements have been completed with the Missouri Pacific Railway and the special train bearing the Louisiana-Mississippi delegates will leave New Orleans Saturday noon, July 7, and will have other delegates join them at Baton Rouge, Opelousas, Eunice and DeQuincy. The delegates from Monroe and Alexandria will meet the special trnin at Kinder, while those from Homer and Shreveport will connect with the special at Beaumont, Tex. Any one may join this special train party whether Sunday school delegates or not, and the Louisiana Council of Religious Education will gladly give any detailed information upon request.

FROM THE ROLLING FORK AND CARY CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: On the 1st of June our Baptist pastor, Brother Lee, and I held a union meeting at Cary, with very fine results. I held the morning services and he conducted the evening services. There was not a single word mentioned by either of us on our denominational doctrines—we both preached Jesus and bim crucified, and lifted up a high and lofty standard for the Christians.

As a result, I received eleven members into the Methodist church by letter and on profession of faith, and Brother Lee received some twelve or fifteen, mostly by letter, into the Baptist church. As they have no organization at Cary, these members will put tbeir membership at Rolling Fork. The Baptists and Methodists certainly work beautifully together here in this country.

There are some outstanding facts I wish to mention in regard to this charge. The Cary church, with the assistance of the Church Extension Board, has repaired its church building, which cost $900. This is all paid for. They have raised $500 on a note that was due on the church. They have paid their pastor one-half of his year's salary due from them. A good lady from Jackson, Mrs Courts, has made them a present of a beautiful church organ, which will be installed soon. We have a good Sunday school there and the church is in fine spirits.

The good people of Rolling Fork are putting several hundred dollars' worth of repairs on their church now. They do not care to put too much work on the old church building, as they are contemplating building a brick church with modern conveniences some time in tbe near future.

Our Sunday school at Rolling Fork, under the leadership of Brother Parham, is doing a splendid work. They are regular contributors to the Orphans' Home, paying more for that purpose than any other church their size. They are now regular contributors to the dual extension work of our church, and are on the honor roll for their Sunday School Day offering. We haven't yet been able to get them to see the importance of putting on a school of instruction for the training of leaders in the church, hut we hope some day that the "mist will roll away" and they will see clearly the great value of a Cokesbury School in tbeir church. They are a splendid people and have done a remarkable work, considering the awful flood of last year and the bad crop conditions of this year.

Our church schools at both piacs rank well with the schools of other charges their size, and far above some that I know.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY—ROBERT ANDREWS DAVIS.

From Lynchburg we moved to Alexandria, DeKalb County, Tenn. Here papa was elected president of the "Masonic Female Institute," mother, father and sister Ella were the faculty. Sister taught music in the school. I went to the male college in the same town. I went into Geometry, Trigonometry, and Surveying, keeping up my Latin and Greek..

Brother John G. Ray was the pastor of the Methodist church, and during prayer meeting one night a revival broke out. There were six or more converted. The next day we told the boys at college what a time we had, and many expressed themselves as sorry they were not there. We told them there would be service at night. That evening these boys who were converted and myself went to the grove near-by and inaugurated a prayer meeting that lasted as long as I remained in Alexandria.

I was licensed to exhort in March of that year, 1860, and exercising that office I would exhort the boys to Christian work and life. We had glorious times.

The revival above mentioned continued for several days, and about forty or more were converted and joined the church.

The following August I was eighteen years of age, and in September I was licensed to preach. In October I was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Conference and appointed by Bishop Pierce as Junior preacher to the Montgomery circuit.

My father transferred to Louisiana, and was now living at New Iberia, La.

War Experiences.

I traveled my circuit until July, 1861, when I left my work and went to my father's, in New Iberia, La. When I asked for permission to join the army, my bishop refused, so I left my work under the impression that some one else was called to preach and I answered. But I promised the Lord if he let me come out safe from the army, I would know I was called and I would try my best to do it.

So I joined Pinckney's Battalion of heavy artillery, and was with the company and battallion when they fired on the Yankees as they came up the Mississippi River to take New Orleans, our battallion being the last to fire on them. We were situated at Fort Magee, seven miles below New Orleans, on the opposite side from Chalmette.

My grandfather, John Davis, was with General Jackson when the British were defeated at New Orleans, and I was there when New Orleans fell from the Confederates.

Now it was every fellow for himself, so we skeedaddled. Going up the river in the swamp, I came to a place where I could spend the night, so washing the mud off my clothes I lay down to sleep. Early in the morning we were aroused, and away from the Yankee we sped, up the railroad. I was terribly hungry, so I thought I would try an onion, a red hot one. I bit like I would an apple, but that one bite was enough for me. I threw it away.

We were soon overtaken by the cars and taken aboard, where I found our captain and most of our company. We left the cars at Darbone, and marched to Thibodauxville; here we were fed and took passage on a boat to Port Hudson, where we landed and took cars for Clinton, La.

Our captain was taken sick here and detailed his brother-in-law, Alex Levy, and myself to wait on him. But we were soon on our way to the seat of war at Vicksburg. Colonel Hardee, with whom we stopped, sent us in his carriage to Tangipahoa, where we took cars for Jackson, Miss., and there took train for Vicksburg. We, my uncle, Captain White, and myself, went to the residence of Dr. C. K. Marshall. When our company came in, I went to camp, remaining with the boys until our casemated forts were ready.

Uncle Levy and myself were called on to assist in loading the largest cannon they had. It was named "Sallie Marshall," for the daughter of Dr. C. K. Marshall. We, with two others, loaded it with powder and ball; then Captain B. F. White gave the command, and a Mr. Bagley, of either Lake Charles or Opelousas, fired it, this being the first gun fired in the battle of Vicksburg.

As I was sick, I was now discharged from the army and permitted to go, with two others, back home. We procured a boat, a log thirty feet long, dug out twenty inches wide. With two oars and a paddle to steer the boat, we started out at dusk from Vicksburg up the river. When we had gone about eight miles, we tied up in the bushes not very far from the Federal lines. Looking down the river, we witnessed the artillery duel between the fort at Vicksburg and the gunboats below. It was quite a scene. About daylight we pulled our boat across the river and down the river until we struck the V. S. and P. Railroad, for the country was overflowed, a vast sea of water from Vicksburg to St. Landry Parish. Going along the railroad we soon reached the Tensas River country, and this we followed. The first night we camped on the roof of a house. We went on our way the next day. Such a sea of water I never saw before. It was June, and we saw beautiful corn crops ruined, cotton crops destroyed, all by a vast sea of water. We stopped at a house where the chickens, pigs, and all that could get in were housed with the family.

A planter on the Tensas replenished our bread supply. We saw a deer swim the river; we took after it; back and across the river, through the bushes, etc., we went after the deer until we caught it. Being near a gin where a number of Negroes were camped out of the water, we secured the services of a Negro, to whom we gave all the deer but the hind quarter. We had been eating light, or baker's, bread and bacon; now when hungry we would row alongside of a large log, kindle us a fire and cook our meal, adding the fresh venison to the bacon.

We rowed on from the Tensas into Black River, again into Red River, from which we entered Old, or False, River, and then into the Atchafalaya, which was terrible with its boiling and seething swift current. Right down this river to Bayou Rouge we went, landing finally at Big Cane, St. Landry Parish.

Here I obtained a horse and guide and made my way to Opelousas, distributing letters to different ones.

I secured my grandfather's horse and buggy at Opelousas and drove to my father's home in Vermillion Parish, five miles distant from Abbeville, the parish seat.

I remained with them at home awhile, but found it almost impossible for any young man that respected himself to stay at home out of the army. So I soon joined a company near New Iberia, which was attached to Fournet's Battallion. We thought it would be, as the woman of Arkansas said, a "critter" company, but they put us afoot. We went from New Iberia down the Teche to Morgan City, thence to Thibodauxville, thence up Bayou Lafourche to its source and camped in a Negro quarters, where we had regular bunks fixed up for us. We cooked and ate our rations and were called on to support the artillery company a few times. Then all at once we were aroused early in the night to march; on and on we marched until I became so sleepy the man behind me would say, "Hold up your gun, Davis;" then I would bump up against the fellow in front of me. So to make everything pleasant, I asked the man by my side to teach me to count one hundred in French. So we began. I learned to count one hundred that night, and strange to say, I have never forgotten it. At day we were drawn up in line of battle, waiting for the enemy to approach. After working on the breastworks awhile, our army struck the retreat line of battle. It was my first attempt to march under fire and I noticed the command was a zigzag getting straight. We came to a rail fence; just then one of our command was struck by a six-pound ball, and of all the yelling, he did it. "Oh, Captain, I'm shot. I'm killed," etc. We went down the Lafourche to Thibodauxville, and passing through we took position in a pea field. I was hungry, but, trying the peas, could not eat them. Now we were ordered to march double quick, and this we did for about a mile, then boarded some box cars which carried us to Morgan City. There we took a steamboat and went on to New Iberia, but returned to Camp Bisland on, on the Teche below Franklin.

In January, we were attacked by some gunboats coming up the Teche to destroy our boat, "Cotton," that had been made into a sort of gunboat. We, the infantry that were detailed, were placed in the rifle pits; there we poured the shot into the boats until the order was given to retreat, which I did not hear, and on looking around I found our lieutenant commanding retreating. I jumped out of the pits and started; one of my company helped me put on my knapsack, and with my gun, canteen, haversack and knapsack I rushed along the road; a few hundred yards further I heard something whiz by me, zip, and fall to the ground. I looked to the rear and saw the Yankees were shooting at me. I prayed to the Lord to help me, and on I went until I reached some standing sugar cane, into which I leaped and went on until I reached the lake; then I took it more leisurely and finally reached camp.

I was again very hungry, having eaten nothing for a day or so. There was a pile of sweet potatoes, cooked, lying on the ground and the company's cook near-by. I asked, "What regiment is this." "It is Fournet's Battallion and we are company cooks." "Yes? well I am hungry and want something to eat." "Well, help yourself." I found the potatoes good.

After the battle with the gunboats we had no more fighting except when the Twenty-eighth took or captured a gunboat in the Teche, until we were about to be captured.

In the meantime I transferred to the Eighteenth Louisiana Regiment, in which I remained through the war.

The Twenty-eighth Louisiana Regiment, Eighteenth Louisiana Regiment, Clack's Battalion, Crescent and a number of Texans, beside the Second Louisiana Cavalry were there when they tried to capture us; but for the want of generalship, and a little cowardice, they failed to do it and we escaped.

Then we commenced marching. We went to Franklin, New Iberia, Lafayette, and Opelousas. There some of my company captured me a mule, and I fixed up an old saddle and I rode the balance of the retreat up to near Alexandria.

On being dismounted near Alexandria, I was placed on extra duty, and my lot fell with the ordnance wagon, as one of its guards. We were under Banks' orders some said, and continued to retreat up as far as Natchitoches. I was straggling when we came to Natchitoches, my shoes in my hand, for my feet were sore, and I was walking in my sock feet, when a beautiful young lady accosted me with the words, "Don't you want something to eat?" "Indeed I do, for I am quite hungry." She gave me a splendid sandwich of ham and light bread and a little barrel of preserves. I found the baker and got a loaf of bread, and I tell you with my mess we had a nice supper.

When General Banks retreated we followed on to Williams sugar mill, on Bayou Boueff, near Alexandria; now I was on extra duty. From here as we went up clear to Natchitoches and returned, we chased Banks clear to Morgan City again.

We camped at the Vermillion bridge, near Lafayette, where a horse dead in the bayou would pass our camp twice a day, according to the ebb and flow of the tide in the bayou.

From here we marched to the pine woods west of Alexandria, where there was plenty of nice clear water. We now camped for awhile.

The Home Circle.

MRS. KRAMER'S CHOICE.

Zelda was clicking away at her rented typewriter, energetically practicing. At the table her sister, Aline, was transcribing a lengthy assignment in shorthand for her to-morrow's lesson. So busy were they that they did not notice when the door bell rang. But when a minute later, they heard their mother's voice gladly bidding some one welcome, they paused and looked up questioningly. Then, "Why, Mrs. Kramer," they both exclaimed, springing up as their mother appeared in the doorway with a guest. Mrs. Kramer, though an infrequent visitor in the Nelson home, was such an agreeable, companionable one that the girls, as well as their mother, always rejoiced at her coming.

"I may as well come to the point at once," she said as they sat around the dinner table talking. "I'm here for a purpose. Miss Fagan, my secretary, gave me notice that she would be leaving in about two months to get married. That means that I must find another girl to take her place."

She looked across the table at the two girls, who gazed back eagerly. They thought they understood now why Mrs. Kramer had made them this unexpected visit.

"Your mother had written me that you girls are almost through with your business course," she went on. "So I arranged to come at once, hoping to be able to engage one of you on trial. It will be necessary for you to begin work soon, while Miss Fagan is still there to superintend your work for awhile."

The sisters looked at each other, then back at Mrs. Kramer expectantly. Which one did she want? It seemed almost too good to be true that there should be an opening in her real estate office for one of them. She was sure to be a delightful woman to work for, and they knew she did not stint in salary any one who was in her employ.

"The trouble is," she was saying, "I don't know which one to employ. You are both so industrious and ambitious, and I believe either of you could handle the work after a bit of training. However, I have arranged to stay a few days, and perhaps in that time I can decide. That is, if the one I finally choose would care to accept the position?"

She looked questioningly at the two girls.

"I reckon if I'm the lucky one, I'll not say 'No,'" laugher Zelda.

"Nor I," declared Aline emphatically. "And if I'm the unlucky one, I'll try not to be the least bit jealous."

The next day Mrs. Kramer, without seeming to do so, watched the two as they cheerfully went about their few morning tasks, then started off to school neatly and becomingly dressed. At noon they returned, prepared the luncheon and washed the dishes that their mother might have more time to enjoy her guest.

The afternoons, during the extremely warm weather, were holidays, so the girls were free to do as they wished. When, soon after luncheon, Mrs. Kramer asked Aline to write a letter for her, the sisters exchanged significant glances. This would be a test, no doubt.

Aline did her best, both in taking the dictation, and in typing the letter. Later she was rewarded with a smile and a kindly, "This is very well done." But an hour or so later, when Zelda was given the same test, she was rewarded in the same way. So neither seemed to have gained an advantage.

Indeed, as the next few days slipped away, Mrs. Kramer gave no sign that she was there on other than a friendly visit. Both girls were "in the dark" concerning her decision. Then, suddenly she announced that she was going home the next day, and the girls sat up straighter in their chairs. They would soon know, now!

"You both take dictation well," she said as though she were continuing a conversation, "and, for beginners, you are fairly speedy and accurate on the typewriter. If those were the only qualifications, I should find it hard to decide between you. But—there are other things.

"The other day, for instance, one of you used all the water in the teakettle and immediately refilled it for the next user. One of you cleared off her end of the table last night and the other left books, papers and pencils strewn over it for mother to put away this morning. As you started out this morning, a banana peel lay on the pavement right before the door. One of you walked off indifferently, but the other ran around the house and put the peel in the garbage can. Yesterday, one of you used some blue thread from your mother's work basket, and the other borrowed a skein of embroidery floss from the same place. The blue thread was replaced this morning, I noticed, but the—"

"Please don't tell any more of my sins of thoughtlessness," begged Aline. "You've already said as plain as day, 'I choose Zelda,' and I don't blame you. But"—emphatically—"when the next employer comes along, I'll see if I can't be ready to qualify in thoughtfulness, too. Meanwhile, I'm glad you want Zelda."—Helen P. Metzger, in Kind Words.

"HORSE SENSE" AND THE LOST BOY.

The following story is founded upon, or inspired by a little story often told by the writer's father:

On the old homestead in Minnesota a mare and colt were running in a pasture near the house. One night after the family had gone to bed, the mare came running to the house, put her nose on the bed-room window and neighed. Realizing that something was wrong, my father quickly dressed and followed the mare toward the pasture. Every little way the animal would stop, turn and whinny and then draw farther on. Down in the pasture was a shallow well—or where a well had been started and covered with boards. In some way the cover had been removed and the colt had fallen in the hole and could not get out. The colt was lifted out by my father and the mother tried in every way to express her thanks for the kind deed, running first to the colt then back and licking father's hand and putting her face up to his. It was such demonstrations as this that so deeply impressed my father with the well-nigh "human intelligence" of the horse.

And here is another story even more remarkable:

Down in the hills of the Ozarks lived George Caswell. The family was composed of himself, his wife and two children, Walter aged 10, and Mary aged 12. The children one day wandered into the woodland, hunting hazelnuts. In some way they became separated. For some hours they searched for nuts and then became suddenly aware of being separated and quite far from home. Mary and Walter, unknown to each other, called and called, but without avail—they had roamed too far apart to be heard. Walter had started to go back as he thought, but soon lost his way and wandered down into a deep canyon.

Mary, being unable to get an answer from her brother, decided to retrace her steps toward home, which she did. As she came out of the bushes suddenly, old "Dan," the aged family horse, appeared. Dan was an animal twenty-odd years old. In his day he had been an attractive stepper in single harness; but having aged he had been turned out to grass and was seldom used for any purpose. The neighbors said Caswell was foolish to keep him about any longer. "Why don't you shoot him, George?" was a frequent question.

"I had as soon shoot one of my family or at least one of you fellows, as old Dan. He is not hurting anything and is getting a rest from long, true and tried service. He is welcome to the range of Caswell farm as long as he lives."

It was well-nigh dark when Mary, tired and worried about Walter, walked into her home. She had hoped that he had preceded her home, but he was not there. The parents grew uneasy as the shadows gathered and twilight merged into darkness. Caswell called, yodeled and whistled with all his ability in these lines, hoping for an answer from Walter. None came. He went up one canyon and down another, working farther and farther from home, until he realized he might become lost in the wooded hills himself. His frequent calls and whistles echoed and re-echoed along the rock-ribbed gulches, but no answer came other than calls of the whippoorwill or the "whoo-whoos" of the hoot-owls.

After some time Mr. Caswell, by following a cow trail, reached a roadway which he soon realized was two miles from home and far from the hollows where the children had been nutting. "No wonder," he thought, "that a boy would get lost even in daylight, when I, who have been here for years, get lost so near home." Quickening his step he pressed toward his home.

As Caswell approached his house he heard Mrs. Caswell and Mary talking, but the voice of Walter was not mingled with theirs. Suddenly old Dan came trotting up, with almost spirit and action as in days of old.

"Daddy," exclaimed Mary, "what do you suppose ails old Dan? This makes twice he has come up to the house, acting as if something was wrong with him."

"Yes," added Mrs. Caswell, "I saw him come that way once before. What possesses him?"

By this time Dan had run up to Mr. Caswell, nosed him about, turned around and around and then started away. When Caswell did not follow, Dan returned. Then Caswell said, "I know old Dan—he wants me to go with him. Stay here, both of you, but if I call, you come, too."

Old Dan started and Caswell could hardly keep pace with him. On, on they went—up Hazelbrush hollow for half a mile, then turned into another gulch (it was close to where Mary had emerged from the woods), then on and on for nearly a mile. Old Dan never slowed his pace till he stopped, snorted and turned and whinned.

At first Caswell could see nothing nor hear anything. Then he heard the brush crackle. He threw his flashlight in the direction and saw two feet protruding from a hollow log. His heart was in his mouth. Walter! Fast in the log—and except for slight movements of the boy's feet, he would have believed him dead. Caswell ran to the other end of the log and called. Walter faintly answered. "Be quiet, son," ordered Caswell, "don't strain yourself any more—I will get you out."

A "hitch" and a pull on a pry-hole, and the log opened to the end where Walter was fast. Caswell sprang to his boy, rolling him out and clasped him in his arms. The boy was unconscious, but after a few moments opened his eyes and recognized his father, only to become unconscious again.

It was many days before Walter recovered from his terrible experience. Two things he fully decided. One was never to try to catch a rabbit in a log; and the other, that Old Dan had more sense than the neighbors who wanted to shoot him—whether that be plain or horse sense. Old Dan had won his laurels and an unending vacation at the Caswell ranch, even should there be no horse heaven—and sometimes I think there must be.—Herb Lewis, in Our Dumb Animals.

THE DEATH OF REV. J. A. RANDOLPH.

Rev. J. A. Randolph, a member of the North Mississippi Conference, chaplain of the United States Army (retired), with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, died at his home in Nashville, Tenn., on last Thursday morning, June 14. Brother Randolph was admitted on trial in the North Mississippi Conference, at West Point, Miss., in 1886; he was ordained a deacon at Starkville in 1888, and an elder at Grenada in 1890, Bishop Charles B. Galloway officiating in each case. He was appointed a chaplain in the United States Army in 1898, and served continuously until his retirement in 1922. As chaplain, he saw service in the Far East, in Mexico, and in Europe during the World War. As chaplain of the Second Regiment of Enginners of the famous Second Division, he was in the battles of Chateau Thiery, Belleau Woods, and Soissons; later he was in the St. Mihel offensive and the beginning of the Argonne offensive.

Colonel Randolph was one of the best known, most popular and most efficient chaplains in the service, winning the love of the men he served and the respect and admiration of his fellow officers.

Rev. J. H. Shumaker, writing of his death, says: "I was with him constantly during his last illness and when the end came. I know his brethren will be glad to hear that he died as he had lived—with steadfast and comforting faith in the saving power of the gospel and the hope of everlasting life. He died without serious suffering, and his going was as peaceful as going to sleep."

The funeral services were held in Nashville at 10 o'clock last Saturday morning, conducted by Brother Shumaker, assisted by the following brethren: Rev. R. L. Owenby, Dr. J. W. Shackford, Dr. W. W. Pinson, Dr. G. B. Winton, Rev. R. J. Craig, Rev. J. Q. Schisler, Rev. J. E. Stephens. Interment was in the National Cemetery near Nashville.

Colonel Randolph was a brother of the late Rev. J. B. Randolph, of the North Mississippi Conference. He is survived by his wife; his son, Dr. Peyton Randolph, San Antonio, Tex.; two daughters, Mrs. D. R. McDonald, of Nashville, and Mrs. G. R. Wright, of Memphis; three brothers and three sisters.

Colonel Randolph had lived a life of splendid service in the promotion of the interests of the Kingdom of God, and many a heart will be made sad at the news of his passing. The editor of the Advocate joins with his many other friends in extending to his family and loved ones sincere sympathy in their bereavement. It is our consolation in the gospel that we know where to find him.

The report of the committe on the state of the church recommending that the words, "holy catholic church" be changed to "Christ's holy church," was defeated in the General Conference at Kansas City by the adoption of a minority report recommending that no change be made.

At its recent commencement, Kentucky Wesleyan College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. Robert H. Ruff, president of Morris Harvey College, Barbourville, W. Va. The many friends of Dr. Ruff in this part of the church will agree that the honor was worthily bestowed.

He was retired from active service at this session of the General Conference, having reached the age-limit.

Rev. J. D. Nesom writes from Mer Rouge, La.: "We closed a splendid meeting here on the night of June 13, Rev. Dan Kelly doing the preaching and Rev. Otis W. Spinks leading the singing. Sixteen joined the Baptist church, and forty came to us. This makes a total of about sixty new members received on this charge this Conference year."

The recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Kansas City adopted a report of the committee on itinerancy to the effect that hereafter a bishop may transfer a member of an Annual Conference only on the recommendation of a majority of the district superintendents (presiding elders) of the Conference into which the transfer comes.

Rev. J. O. Hanes, general evangelist, closed a fine meeting with Rev. A. A. Bernard at Rayne, La., on Sunday, June 10. There were thirty-three applicants for church membership. After filling a number of engagements in Alabama and Mississippi, Brother Hanes, with his singer, Mr. H. M. Scott, will begin a meeting with Rev. George Fox at Ferriday, La., on Aug. 19.

The Republican Convention nominated Hon. Herbert Hoover last week for the Presidency of the United States, and Senator Curtis, of Kansas, for the Vice Presidency. The Republican platform specifically endorses the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment. Much interest attaches to the meeting of the Democratic Convention in Houston the latter part of this month.

The editor of the Advocate had the privilege of preaching at both the morning and evening hour at First Church, Baton Rouge, last Sunday, in the absence of the pastor, Dr. Frank L. Wells, who was attending the Epworth Assembly at Mansfield. Large and attentive congregations heard the messages. The editor greatly enjoyed the hospitality of the district parsonage while in Baton Rouge.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation from the Workers' Council of the Main Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., to attend the formal opening of the new Sunday School House, which took place on Thursday evening, June 14. We congratulate the pastor, Rev. Joseph A. Smith, and his great church upon the addition of this fine plant to their working equipment. Its building is a notable achievement.

Dr. H. D. Knickerbocker, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Little Rock, Ark., has issued a challenge to the pastors throughout Southern Methodism that his church will raise more for Superannuate Endowment than any other church in the connection. His church has not only accepted its quota of $7,500, but has also assumed $10,000 additional. Dr. Knickerbocker is a great friend of the superannuates.

The cover page of the July Workers' Cuncil is a reproduction of the Declaration of Independence. The articles on "Christian Patriotism," by Dr. R. L. Owenby, of Nashville, Tenn.; on "Christian Citizenship," by Dr. Ira Landrith, President of the National Temperance Council; on "Father and Son," by Dr. L. T. Guild, of Los Angeles, Calif.; on "Death Valley," by Dr. W. H. Nelson, of San Francisco, Calif., and on "Discipline and the Child," by Mrs. Nancy Smith Krusekopf, of Columbia, Mo., are exceptionally fine. Send for sample copy.

Rev. J. W. Sells completed three years of his pastorate at Pascagoula, Miss., on June 1, he having been appointed pastor in June, 1925, to succeed Rev. J. W. Foreman. During the three years, Brother Sells has received seventy-six members into the church, baptized fourteen infants, and performed one hundred and one marriage ceremonies. During that time, $10,930 has heen raised for all purposes. We gather these facts from a recent number of the Pascagoula Chronicle-Star, which makes complimentary mention of the work of Brother Sells in the community.

Rev. J. O. Kim, of Korea, who represents the Louisiana Conference in its Sunday school work in Korea, will spend next Sunday, June 24, in New Orleans. He will speak at the Second Methodist Church at the opening of the service at 8:30 a. m.; at the Louisiana Avenue Sunday school at 9:30 a. m.; at Carrollton Avenue, at 10:30 a. m., and will preach at Parker Memorial at 11 o'clock. Rev. A. K. McLellan, Louisiana Conference Dual Extension Secretary, will accompany Brother Kim to the city, and he will speak to the Wesleyan class of First Church during the lesson period and the whole school at its close, and will preach at Felicity at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon Brothers Kim and McLellan will speak at Covington, and in the evening at Bogalusa.

Rev. E. R. Smoot, our pastor at Tchula, Miss., will be the preacher at the Kavanaugh Camp meeting, Louisville, Ky., this year, preaching twice a day. Dr. Plato Durham, of Emory University, will deliver a Bible lecture each day. Brother Smoot is active in evangelistic work, having held meetings at Belzoni, Mount Olive, Tchula, and being engaged in one at Ashland. Later, he will assist Rev. Mellville Johnson at Winona. That the work of his own pastorate is not neglected is indicated by the fact that the Millsaps College campaign quota of $1,400 has been raised in full, $150 raised on superannuate quota and the balance put in the budget, and $500 expended in beautifying the church grounds with shrubbery and providing tennis courts and croquet grounds for the young people.

COMMENDATION OF THE LOUISIANA PASTORS' SCHOOL.

Allow me to say that I am heartily in favor of the "School for Pastors" at Centenary College as announced for July. These schools are accomplishing great things wherever instituted, and in this instance the faculty and speakers are of such splendid type as to assure us of a very helpful school.

Dr. Goodrich and his helpers are to be congratulated on the program, and I trust every pastor in the Monroe District will take advantage of the opportunity and attend part, if not all, of the sessions.

The third round is on and ought to he fruitful of results on all lines. Remember Sunday School Day and send in the offering to Brother A. M. Mayo, the Sunday School Board's treasurer. Our aim is to have four Standard Training Schools in the district. Two have already been held. The collection on this day will help us to put on this type of work.

The Oakdale School was fruitful in results. They are anxious for another school next year.

Rev. Ira W. Flowers, a recent graduate of Emory University, has been appointed by Bishop Candler to Oakdale to fill the place made vacant by the illness of Rev. H. W. Bowman. He comes highly recommended and will give an account of himself in due time.

Brother Bowman is still in the sanitarium at Mansfield and is slowly improving. He intends to rest quietly during the remainder of the Conference year at his home near Pelican, La.

Our Louisiana Conference Pastors' Schoool will be held at Centenary College, Shreveport, La., from July 9 to 20. A good faculty has been secured. Make your plans to attend. For further information write to Rev. Robert E. Goodrich, D.D., Shreveport, La., who is Dean of the School.

BOOK REVIEW.

A New History of the World.

The Standard Historical Society, with offices in the Atlas Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, has published the Standard History of the World, edited by Dr. Israel Smith Clare, author of many popular historical works, and revised by Dr. Paul Leland Hayworth, who has a wide reputation as a historical writer. Many of the outstanding historians of note have contributed to the work, which is published in ten bound volumes, containing more than 5,000 pages, with the promise of additional volumes in loose leaf binder form to be compiled during the next five or ten years. The volumes are handsomely bound in cloth, the print is in large and clear type, and the literary work is of a high class. The History is destined to meet with a splendid reception by students of history especially, and the reading public generally. The work is profusely illustrated with attractive and interesting maps and portraits. It is commended by scholars and leaders of thought throughout the United States, and the work deserves a place in the library of every student of history.

DR. ELLIOT'S MESSAGE TO BOYS.

The death recently at the age of 92 of Dr. Charles W. Elliott, long president of Harvard University, makes it fitting that we reprint the fine message he sent some time ago to the farm boys:

"It is a promise of success in life if a boy learns by the time he is 12 years old to use his eyes, ears, and hands accurately; that is, if he learns to see things exactly as they are, to hear the various sounds of nature and art with precision and enjoyment, and to touch or handle things deftly and effectively whether at work or at play.

"It is another good sign if a boy works hard while he works and plays hard while he plays, and tries both at work and at play to take a hearty part in 'team play.'

"It is another good sign if a boy keeps his senses and his mind on the alert, watchful to do a serviceable deed or perform a kind act.

"Again the promising boy will he on the alert for new suggestions, new lessons, and new objects of interest. He will not he content merely to follow the beaten path; he will wish to explore, discover, and invent."—Exchange.

South America has been called the "neglected continent." In the interior of this great country there are millions of scattered Indians who have never heard of the gospel of Jesus Christ, not even from the Roman Catholic Church, which claims to occupy this continent.

Died on May 16, 1928, at her home near Springfield, La., MISS ELLA D. McLIN, aged 53 years. She was the daughter of Hiram and Josephine Gerald McLin, deceased. Miss Ella was a fine Christian character and a member of the Methodist church at this place since childhood. She was known for her many good deeds. She leaves to mourn their loss three sisters and two brothers, as follows: Emma L., Ada J., and Lillie W.; H. Benjamin McLin, and Homer C. Cozens (a half brother); also many relatives and friends.

On Jan. 4, 1928, the spirit of MRS EMMA ALSWORTH KIMBROUGH took its flight from this life to the life beyond. She was born Jan. 26, 1855 and joined the Methodist church in early girlhood, and continued a faithful member until the day of her death She was first married to Mr. Albert Alsworth in 1880, who preceded her into eternity by about twenty years. She was married the second time, in 1910, to Mr. J. T. Kimbrough, who also preceded her into the great beyond by about eight years. Sister Kimbrough is survived by one son and two daughters, also several stepsons and many friends, who mourn her untimely death and who expect, after having lived faithful to Jesus Christ, to meet her some day where there is no death or sorrow to bring separations or to disturb the happiness of the soul. Sister Kimbrough's body was laid to rest in Liberty Chapel cemetery in the presence of many sorrowing friends and relatives. May God help each of us to emulate the virtues of this good Christian lady and faithful servant of the Master; and while we mourn her going, may we so live that some day we shall be with her in the glory of the eternal world.

JAS. W. GIBSON.

MRS. F. BYRON WHITE, nee Yoes, named Mary Leonide, was born Feb. 24, 1856; after marriage to B. F. Cline, April 17, 1873 (who had volunteered in the Confederate service at 16. was police juror, also steward at Blackwater), joined his church, was widowed by his death Aug. 12, 1889; married F. B. White in 1892, who died March, 1919, literally "fell on sleep" May 3, 1928, and was buried at Blackwater church, East Baton Rouge, La., May 4, 1928: Her funeral, conducted by her pastor, B. W. Waltman, proceeding from her home, occupied with her by Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Hausey, and at times by her devoted son, Frank, was the occasion of a great crowd paying tribute of affection and heartfelt sympathy. Of her seven children, all of her first marriage, the two oldest, aged 3 and 2, and the youngest nearly an infant, had gone before. and these four survive: Mrs. B. C. Black; B. F. Cline, police juror; Mrs. R. H. Hausey, and R. C. Cline. Her stepson, C. F. White, from 3 years of age, and these nephews and nieces: John A., Florence, Olivia, and William Coleman, E. E., T. DeWitt, and W. L. White, for longer and shorter periods, shared genuine parental care. The toil and pain of seventy-two years enriched her character and insured her reward. Many lips speak her praise. This queen of hospitality in the home here, devoutly loyal to the church, is at home in Heaven. This saint with ministering hands, gentlest manners, kind voice lovely face, extraordinarly luminous eyes, a lover of our Lord, will awake in his likeness.

J. W. BROWN.

The subject of this sketch, MR. JOSIAH GARRETT, was born in Jefferson County, Miss., Dec. 14, 1840, and died April 20, 1928. He spent his entire life in the same county and State where he was born, except the four years he spent as a Confederate soldier. He enlisted in the Charley Clarck Rifles (Company H, Twelfth Mississippi Infantry) in the beginning of the war, and served the four years in the Virginia army. The deceased was married to Miss Flora Carmichael on Jan. 17, 1867. They lived happily together until Dec. 6, 1906, when the Heavenly Father took her to himself. To this union eight children were born. Five of them are still living to mourn their loss. Brother Joe Garrett was soundly converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Nebo church, in Jefferson County, and was a faithful and efficient member of the same for forty-three years. He served his church as superintendent of the Sunday school and as steward and trustee for forty-three years, except about five months when he became too feeble to attend to the business, and some one else had to take his place. It was the writer's privilege to have been his pastor for four years, and often visited the home of Brother W. H. Gibson, his son-in-law, where he made his home after the death of his wife. During my pastoral visits it was a great pleasure to me to read aloud to him an hour or more at a time. We always closed with prayer; and when I was with him and when I had left him I knew I had been in company with one that knew and loved God the Father and Jesus Christ whom he had sent, and that Jesus had met with us in our devotions. The funeral was held at Union church on Saturday morning, conducted by his old friend, Dr. C. W. Grafton, the pastor of the Presbyterian church, assisted by Rev. J. O. Williams, the pastor at Nebo, and Rev. J. W. Price, a fromer pastor. "Blessed are the dead that dle in the Lord. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

C. H. HERRING.

Vossburg, Miss.

DOLA MYRTIS SLOANE, daughter of Rev. John G. and Mrs. Mary Hays Sloane, was born at Crowley, La., Nov. 2, 1887. She was converted at an early age, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Crowley, La., on March 31, 1895, under the pastorate of this writer. She attended the local schools and completed her education at Mansfield College and Louisiana Polytechnic Institute. On May 31, 1926, in Gibsland, La., she was united in marriage to Professor Leroy S. Hays, this writer officiating. One child blessed this union, L. S., Jr., who, with the sorrowing husband, her father and four brothers, remains to mourn her loss. From early childhood, she lived a quiet, consistent life, giving herself in unselfish ministry for a number of years, as home maker for her father and brothers after the death of her mother; and for the last twelve years filling faithfully the position of wife and mother in her own home. She died suddenly at Sarepta, La., on May 10, 1928, and was laid beside her beloved mother in Greenwood cemetery, Shreveport, La., to sleep until the resurrection of the just. The appropriate and solemn service was conducted by Rev. W. W. Holmes. Her passing away leaves a sad loneliness in the hearts of the loved ones that can only be comforted by the Christian hope of a blessed reunion at her Savior's feet.

"God calls our loved ones, but we lose not wholly
What he has given;
They live on earth in thought and deed, as truly
As in his heaven."

W. WINANS DRAKE.

JOSEPH WARREN JENNINGS.

Joseph Warren Jenning was born in Campbell County, Ga., May 6, 1846, and died in the home of his son, Ed. Jennings, Homer, La., Nov. 25, 1927, aged 81 years, 7 months and 19 days. He moved to Claiborne Parish, La., in 1867, and settled near Homer, in the old Arizona community, and, except for a brief period, spent there the remaining part of his long, useful life. He was married to Miss Sallie A. Harris, Sept. 13, 1868. Of this union six children were born, two dying in infancy. His widow, Ed and Olin Jennings, Mrs. Edgar Maddox, all of Homer, La., survive him. Thus, in brief, is the record of a long, useful, happy life. It was my good fortune, in early youth, to become, for a brief period, an inmate of this good man's home. Certain characteristics of his life greatly impressed and influenced me throughout my life. Deprived of a father of my own, in a very real sense he became a father to me, bestowing all the gentle affection and fatherly interest in his kindly nature on me as though I were his own; so that until the day of his death, there was that feeling that existed between us that belongs to the real father and son. He was a genuine, conscientious, devout Christian. He joined the Methodist church in Arizona, La., in 1885, and I have never known a more devoted, loyal Christian character than he was. He allowed nothing to interfere with his duties as a Christian. No visitor, stranger or acquaintance, ever interfered with family prayers in his home. As regularly as the nightfall he gathered his family group about him, read a chapter from God's Word, in simple, earnest, fervent language offered prayers to God. The impress of this simple service in this humble home can never be erased from my mind and heart, nor can its incalculable value ever be estimated. I doubt if there has been any other single thing in life that has meant more to me, in a religious way, than this service of this godly man. Another characteristic of his life was his rugged honesty. He could be absolutely trusted. He was consistently dependable. In his dealings with his fellow-men, the members of his family, and the stranger within his gates, he was always the honest, fair, frank, open-hearted, generous man. He was a good neighbor, ready at all times to render a helpful service where needed, responding without quibble to every neighborly demand. He was greatly beloved and esteemed by those who lived as neighbors to him. While never possessed of much of this world's goods, he was a successful farmer, and represented in his humble, sincere way that type of American citizenship and Christian manhood that has made this the greatest nation in the world, and will ever keep it great. The influence of such a life abides through the ages, and though his name may be forgotten among men, he will still live in the hearts and lives of men. To his bereaved widow, who for nearly sixty years was his constant and devoted companion, and to the children, who abide as useful citizens of their community, there comes the assured comfort of those who know the faith that bore him through the many years of his useful life has given him a triumphant entrance into the "Kingdom of God." Our prayer is that we may be as faithful, as truly loyal and devoted, as sincerely honest and true to all the higher calls of life as was this good man, and that we may come to the end of our days as well prepared and fitted for the call of God as was Joseph Warren Jennings.

WHY A ZONE MEETING.

By Mrs. C. M. Pulliam.

Should you ask me, "Whence this meeting,
Whence this gathering of women,
With their look of earnest purpose,
With their very air of workers
Who know well their task, and, knowing,
Give to it their best endeavor,
Give their time, their love, their labor?
Whence this heraiding of meeting,
And this stir of preparation
Days before the time assigned it,
This look of anticipation
As of pleasure and of profit
From this meeting here together?"

I should answer, I should tell you.
From this "zone" have these foregathered,
Come here from our auxiliaries,
Willingly and gladly meeting
This one day, in earnest conclave,
Meeting, greeting, giving, getting
News and ideas and aspects
Of the work, both here and elsewhere,
E'en o'er all the world, that women
Of our church this day are doing
In their consecrated effort
All the world to win for Jesus.

If still further you should ask me,
"What the gain, and why this visit
Where the good from it arising?
Could not all be learned by reading
By their own home fires, in journals,
And in papers, told by others;
Told by those who're far more learned,
And whose knowledge of conditions
All these workers far surpasses?
Why then give this day to coming
All this distance; leaving pleasures,
Perhaps duties, that would claim them
In their homes, their towns, their circles?"

I should answer your inquiries
Straightway in such words as follows:
"Know you any undertaking,
Any sort of situation,
In whatever field of labor,
Whether in our seats of learning,
In our business enterprises,
Banks or senate chambers even,
Any, every sort of project,
Where without concerted action
And some organizing effort
Anything has been accomplished?
Is not interchange of ideas,
Plans and projects just as needful
In the smallest branch or office
As in any large headquarters?

"Is a head bank so familiar
With conditions and surroundings
Of a branch, that's situated
Miles away in other regions,
That it has there no directors
To advise, consult, discuss there
The affairs of its own district?
What if our great Woman's Council
Does direct and plan our programs
For our work and for our study?
Ours but to receive and use them.
Does choose channels for our efforts,
And with wider, greater vision
Glimpses far ahead what's needed
In this work we're all engaged in?
Does that mean that naught is left us
To discover, plan or project
Save what they alone suggested?"

Say not so, O, Christian woman;
That is why wise heads saw fitting
In these zones to group our women.
If branch banks must have directors
And have meetings every quarter
To facilitate their business,
Ought we not to be divided
Into smaller groups than districts?
Is not our work more important
Than the keeping, saving money?

Christ thought one soul more important
Than the world and all that's in it.
And we need more zeal, more courage,
More of love, devotion, knowledge,
Sacrifice, full consecration
If success attends our efforts.

That one reason is, and others
Prove themselves as plainly to us.
Can we estimate the value
Of this fellowship together,
And the inspiration gathered
From this meeting and from hearing
Something, that may chance some chord touch
That these many years lay dormant,
Waking it to active service?
What can be more beneficial,
More uplifting to the spirit,
Than a day devoted solely
To the workings of his kingdom?
These small zones, these subdivisions,
Furnish all of us that pleasure
And 'tis then, too, they prove helpful.

There are in each town, each district,
Those you want to see enlisted,
Those you feel could be a power
In this work for God and Missions.
Who, as they have never joined you,
Think not of the larger meetings.
Feel no call to go, no interest,
Doubtless know not when you have them,
But would willingly be present
At a "zone" meet if invited.
Zeal has often zeal begotten,
Love of work been caught by others
When they see a demonstration
Of unselfish work among you.

As we go from here this evening
May we all have been made stronger,
More devoted, prayerful members
Of our zone, our church, auxiliary.
And fear not to give more fully
Of our thoughts, our time, our efforts
Unto him who all things giveth.
May advancement of his kingdom
Henceforth be of first importance
And the keeping of his precepts
Be as State laws, just as binding.
Then will this zone meet have proven
And have satisfied the wisdom
Of these countless subdivisions
In the field of faithful workers.

Mrs. S. M. Collins, vice president of Louisiana Conference, writes asking our co-operation in a special day of prayer on June 25. Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb has passed on the call, which has been issued by the W. C. T. U. This will be the day preceding the great Democratic convention. May we all join in prayer for a dry Democratic nominee?

DISTRICT MEETING, LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT.

The district meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society for the north section of the Lake Charles District met at De Ridder, La., May 18, at 10:30 a. m., with a good attendance.

Mrs. Luella E. Dees, ex-district secretary, called the meeting to order. Opening hymn, "O for a Thousand Tongues to Sing." The Scripture reading was given by Brother H. W. Ledbetter, followed with a prayer by Brother R. F. Harrell.

Mrs. Dees introduced the new District Secretary, Mrs. R. S. Walton, of Sulphur, La., giving her a hearty welcome. In response Mrs. Walton expressed regrets that the district had lost such an able and efficient District Secretary as Mrs. Dees, and expressed the hope that we would keep up the good that had been accomplished.

Mrs. W. F. Raggio gave the welcome, which was responded to by Mrs. Reese Pattison, of Many. Mrs. Dees, of De Ridder, gave a report of the work for the year 1927, which was very interesting. She urged each officer to be prompt in sending in their reports on time and to be sure to have them made out properly, as that means so much to the District Secretary. Also, stressed social service, supply, and Bible study reports, and that failure to get these reports in promptly and correctly keeps us below standard. She said that she was proud of the fact that her district had raised their quota of Pauline Randle fund. Mrs. Dees expressed regret in giving up the work. She said it had inspired her to study and to seek better things and had brought her in contact with so many people whose influence has brought her closer to God, and that she gained much that will always linger a pleasure. She felt sure that Mrs. Walton would accomplish even more than she, and that every auxiliary would strive to help all they could.

Rev. H. W. Ledbetter dismissed the morning session with prayer, and the conference adjourned to the Masonic

Since Taking Black-Draught This Man Is Eager For His Meals and Feels Much Better.

Harrisburg, N. C.—Mr. M. F. Fink, of this place, says: "It must have been fully twenty-five years ago that I began taking Black-Draught regularly. It wasn't so long after I married.

"I was in town one day, and while talking to a friend I stooped over to pick up something. When I straightened up, I felt dizzy. I spoke to him about this and how I had not felt like eating.

"My friend told me to take some Black-Draught. I knew my mother had used it, and so I bought a package. When I got home, I took a good, big dose, and the next night, another. In a few days I felt much better, I was hungry and the dizziness was gone.

"A good many times I have had this dizziness and a bad taste in my mouth, or headaches, and then I take Black-Draught and get better. I do not have to take it very often. We buy from five to seven packages a year."

Thedford's Black-Draught has been found to relieve sick headaches in thousands of cases that were due to constipation. Containing no mineral drugs, it acts gently, yet promptly. Try it. NC-193

How Much Water Should Baby Get?
A Famous Authority's Rule
By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in gold.

Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. J. O. Kim, Conference Superintendent of Sunday School Work in Korea, who is supported by the Sunday schools in Louisiana, is making an itinerary in each district in our Conference during June 8-24. We extend him a hearty welcome, and no doubt his visit and messages to the Sunday schools in Louisiana will result in great good. Rev. A. K. McLellan, Extension Secretary, is accompanying Brother Kim on his visit.

The last two training schools, Oakdale and Winnsboro, had two days of rain to compete with. The out-of-Conference instructors were, Mrs. J. A. Bays, of Beaumont, Tex., in the Oakdale school, who had a fine class of Young People, and Mrs. Sue Brame, of Jackson, Miss., in the Winnsboro school, teaching a course on "Primary Organization."

Sunday morning, June 10, I left Alexandria for Homer, by way of Ruston. I reached Ruston in time to attend their Sunday School Day service, which was well attended. The great need of the Ruston Sunday school is a new church, and the pastor, Dr. W. W. Drake, with his official board, passed a unanimous resolution recently to build. We congratulate the pastor and his congregation on this unanimous action.

In the late afternoon, in company with Dr. Drake, we left for Homer to attend the opening of the Homer-Haynesville Standard Training School, which promises to be a good one. At 7:30 there were over one hundred present at the opening of the second session of the Standard Training School for Homer and Haynesville. The faculty were all present: Dr. W. W. Drake, Mrs. R. H. Harper, Mrs. R. E. Smith, and Rev. H. L. Johns. The presiding elder, Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, who had preached the sermon for the school, was there.

While in Homer we had the honor of being entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Gill. Mr. Gill is superintendent of the Sunday school and District Secretary of the Ruston District. Much credit for the success of the school is due him. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Lee, is much pleased with the attendance and spirit of the school.

The Board of Managers for the New Orleans Standard Training School met June 10 and organized, with Rev. B. C. Taylor as chairman of the Board, and Mr. J. H. Carter, Educational Director. The tentative date of the school is Oct. 14. This will be their eighth session, and we trust it will be the largest and best yet.

The last three Sunday schools to send in Sunday School Day offerings are the Gilbert Sunday school, in the Monroe District, and the Wesley Chapel school, in the Ruston District, on the Clay charge. The treasurer of First Church, New Orleans, writes: "I am enclosing check for $58 from the First Methodist Sunday school. This is an offering for Sunday School Day."

Rev. J. B. Grambling, pastor at Grand Cane, is planning, in connection with his third quarterly conference, a Sunday School Day rally, and we appreciate the invitation to be present.

Mr. Chesley Price, superintendent of Logansport Sunday school, writes: "We are looking forward with pleasure to your visit to us next Sunday, and I have announced that you would be here at the Sunday school hour, so am writing that you may let us know just when to expect you. Sunday is Brother Perry's day at Longstreet, and he announced you to fill the pulpit at the morning service here. Trust we may have a great day."

Mrs. R. H. Harper, of New Orleans, has taught a Junior course in three consecutive training schools in North Louisiana—Minden, Winnsboro, and Homer. Mrs. Harper is Elementary Superintendent in the New Orleans District, and we appreciate the service she is rendering us as an Elementary specialist.

There were four pastors to take credit in the Winnsboro Training School: Rev. J. A. Alford, Rayville; Rev. J. W. Faulk, Mangham; Rev. J. C. Price, Gilbert, and Rev. W. S. Henry, Winnsboro. We congratulate them.

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

It may be of interest to many to know that we had thirty-eight preachers in attendance at the Conference Training School and forty-nine schools were represented. The Aberdeen District had 9; Columbus District, 15; Corinth District, 14; Grenada District, 46; Greenville District, 4; Greenwood District, 15; Sardis District, 9. Of the fifteen who came from the Greenwood District, twelve were from the Swiftown and Isola charge. We all know that Suydam lives and works over there. The man in charge is the key to a trained, consecrated leadership in the church. Under the guidance of Miss Helen Swisher, the young people who attended the school were trained in conducting the worship services that were held each day. These services were as near perfect as any we have witnessed.

The eighth session of the Corinth District Training School will close Friday afternoon. We have had Chautauqua and rain all the week, but the students in attendance testify that this is the best school we have held in this section. We will issue fifty or more certificates. One reason a larger number will not attend these schools, the standard of work is too high. To be plain, the majority of people do not care to do hard study. There is no way to make the cross popular. The multitudes seek pleasure, not the cross.

Superintendents will do well to take notice of the Cokesbury Record System, just off the press. See advertisement on the outside cover of the magazine. These record books are the best, and the secretaries and teachers will like them.

Let us hear from you when you have observed Sunday School Day. Why not write a few lines to the Advocate, giving the results of its observance? May the Lord bless the men who are doing the work of the church, and may he be very patient with those who do not.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Alas and alack! The offering for the Dual Extension this month is smaller than it has been in over two whole years. I notice from the other Conferences there has been a steady increase. It looked at the first of the year as if there would be a steady increase from the Mississippi Conference; but behold a falling off that is beyond measure. It is hoped that the Sunday schools will catch step and all those who are not now holding the missionary program will do so and send in the money. Please bear this in mind and stress the need of the home field. The Dual Extension Program is much larger than it has ever been. We are covering territory never before reached. The demands made upon the resources of the Board are much heavier than any member of the Board thought at the first of the year. The mission fields are making demands also. Shall the Mississippi Conference set the pace of retrenchment, or will fall in step with the steady upward march of the other Conferences? This is a call to all the district workers and the local Sunday school workers to make a real effort to make the missionary programs and offerings meaningful in the highest and best sense.

SARDIS DISTRICT EPWORTH LEAGUE INSTITUTE.

The Sardis District Epworth League Instituts convened at Olive Branch, June 1, 1928, at 2:30 p. m., Miss Annie Lee Birmingham presiding.

"Onward, Epworth Leaguers," was sung to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

An address of welcome was given by Mr. H. B. Warren, after which, "From All the Dark Places" was sung.

Brother Broyles, local pastor, had charge of the devotionals and expounded the parable of the talents (Mat. 25:14-31).

The roll was called and the following reports made:

Cockrum: (Two delegates). League recently organized. Doing good work.

Hines Chapel: (Five delegates). League two years old. Increased membership. Doing good work. All Leaguers take part on programs.

Senatobia: (Two delegates). Oldest League in the district. Doing excellent work. Will grade 85 per cent according to Standard of Efficiency.

Tyro: (Four delegates). Plans for study class on missions and one on the hand book. Welcomes visitors. Faithful bunch and can always be relied upon.

Olive Branch: (Fourteen delegates). Have good programs. Pay pledges. Very good League. Pastor rises and says, "Yes, a mighty good League."

Sardis: (Three delegates). League still young. Doing fine work. Fine bunch of young people to work with.

Round table discussion on "Why Have An Epworth League?" 1. It trains leadership. 2. It broadens vision. 3. It affords recreation and right kind of amusement and entertainment. 4. Eighty-five per cent of the preachers get their first training in the League. 5. It makes Christians. 6. It feeds directly into the church.

The following talks were made:

1. "The League Policy," by Mr. Wamble, from Senatohia.

2. "How to Make Programs Interesting and Helpful," Rev. K. S. L. Cooke, from Tyro.

3. "Business and Council Meetings, Their Relation, etc.," Miss Annie Lee Birmingham.

Special song, by Olive Branch Leaguers. Round table discussion on "Recreation and Culture." Hymn No. 489, "He Leadeth Me," was sung.

Speeches again as follows:

"The Mission Study Class," by Miss Elizaheth Neims, from Hines Chapel.

"Duties of the four Department Superintendents," Mr. Walker, from Senatobia.

A general discussion on "The Three Covenants" and on "A Standard Epworth League."

Miss Birmingham discussed the Summer Assemhly to he held at Grenada, June 11-15, and gave out literature concerning same.

The "Know Missions" oratorical contest was held, and results are as follows: First place, Mr. Wamble, from Senatohia; second place, Miss Lucy Mae Stevens, from Olive Branch. The judges were: Rev. A. J. Henry, Cockrum; Rev. K. S. L. Cooke, Tyro; Rev. Chas. M. Kinard, Sardis circuit.

Hymn No. 556, "Blest Be the Tie," was sung, and then the benediction. But this time the benediction did not terminate the meeting. Cool, delicious refreshments were served by the Olive Branch Leaguers. Thanks, Olive Branch, for your generous hospitality, and hoo-ray for Miss Birmingham, the District Secretary.

CHAS. M. KINARD,
Secretary for the Institute.

MERIDIAN EFFICIENCY INSTITUTE.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: "it seems more like the Assembly," was the comment often made by many attending our city Efficiency Institute; and that's ahout the biggest compliment we could have received, for we all know how wonderful are our assemhlies. We did have a great time despite the fact that it "rained pitchforks" almost incessantly for two days beforehand and then the first two days of the institute. Nevertheless on the opening night we kicked pitchforks aside and made our way to Central Church, where, at 6:30 p. m., the ladies of this church served us a lovely supper. it was free, too, as were all of the suppers served in turn each evening hy the ladies of the different Methodist churches of the city.

From supper we went to two classes, each of forty-five minutes' duration. The first period was either in Bible, Missions, Social Service, etc., just as one chose, and the second period was in Epworth League methods. These were followed hy a demonstration period each evening except Friday. The demonstrations were: a social meeting; a Council meeting; a business meeting, and a devotional meeting, given one each night in the order named.

I'll just tell you one event of our demonstration social. It was conducted by our genial and efficient Y. M. C. A. director, Mr. Wallace C. Journey, assisted hy his wife, who is a talented musician. You'll know that Mr. Journey is splendid and that we had worlds of fun when I tell you that he will almost equal our own inimitable Harhin and Pim. The special feature of this hour I suppose I might term a "Bottle Sitting Contest," in which our dignified dean, Mr. W. D. Hawkins, and our esteemed elder, former president of Whitworth College, Rev. H. G. Hawkins, were the two contestants. It was certainly a sight to be remembered as these two dignitaries sat each on a large round bottle on the floor and with feet crossed toe on heel, attempted to stay in position on the rolling bottles while struggling to strike a match or light their candles. After many spasmodic efforts, during which the surrounding floor was thoroughly mopped as they tumbled first off one side of the bottles then the other, "Pa" Hawkins succeeded in igniting his candle, and was greeted with deafening applause. Other interesting things followed for which I have not space, hut I think "Mr. Wallace" had us do most everything imaginable, either here or at one of the lunch periods, from yelling and singing Siamese and French songs to "sitting on a clinker" and meowing like a cat.

Just a word about our faculty and our Central Office representative. As to the latter, we had "no sech animal." We, that is "Pa" Hawkins, did his best to obtain one; thought he had secured Miss Brown, and rejoiced greatly, only to have our feathers fall by being informed that she couldn't be with us. As I've stated, this is the second Efficiency Institute in the history of our Union, the first heing held in November, 1927. At that time we were fortunate enough to have Dr. D. L. Mumpower, of Central Office, and Miss Lillian Knohles, missionary to China, with us; therefore we'd gotten it in our heads that we couldn't have an institute without some of these higher-ups. We thought we should despair upon heing refused, hut Dean Hawkins stiffened his backbone and said we'd do it all hy ourselves, and we did. But just look who we were. Among those on our facuity were Miss Addie B. Greely, deaconess at Central church; Mrs. A. F. Watkins, wife of our renowned Dr. A. F. Watkins, former president of Millsaps College; Rev. A. M. Broadfoot; Rev. James Smith; Prof. John Pearson, of the Meridian High School; Rev. H. G. Hawkins, former president of Whitworth College and once missionary to Japan; Miss Alpha Watheny, District Hl League Secretary, and Mrs. C. P. Blanks. We certainly found them all capable and inspiring instructors.

I shall have to omit many interesting and helpful events, and tell you of our closing night, which was perhaps dining hall, where a delicious lunch was served.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The meeting was again called to order at 1:30 p. m. Hymn: "O Zion Haste." Devotional, by Mrs. R. F. Harrell, of Many. Subject: "She hath wrought a good work on me" (Mark 14:3). Her talk was very inspiring and was greatly enjoyed by all. She compared the groups of women all over the world to the group of women that followed Jesus from place to place trying to do their best, working for a wider vision. She said that every woman should be in a missionary organization and use her talent to help enlist women for this great work. She contrasted the love of Mary and the motive behind the gift to the kiss of Judas that betrayed Jesus. That we must bring our gifts in the right spirit. She also spoke of gifts of recklessness—Mary gave all she had—and we should give our lives and ourselves. "If he is with us who can be against us." She also spoke of the comparison between Martha and Mary. We are all Marthas to a certain extent, but we should try to be like Mary. Mary gave her gift to Jesus at the time it was most needed, and at the time he needed a friend—her name was made immortal, and as a band of women we should carry out the command given us: "Go ye into all the world; Do this in remebrance of me; We may serve as many serve; She hath wrought what she could."

The reports from the auxillaries were very interesting, showing that each society was doing excellent work.

A duet, "There is no friend to me like Jesus," was beautifully rendered. Every one expressed their appreciation by a rising vote of thanks.

Mrs. Stanton, of Lake Charles, gave a very interesting talk on "Echoes from the Conference," followed by Mrs. Sailor, of De Ridder, on "Candle-lighting service."

Mrs. W. H. Gates, of Sulphur, illustrated the children's work with the skeleton of a doll, showing that with a failure to send in reports of the different departments the head, arms, or legs came off—and felt sure that none of us wanted a headless doll or society.

Mrs. Gott gave a very interesting report of the Junior work being done in Merryville.

Mrs. Harrell, Conference Historian, requested that any data concerning older societies be furnished her at the earliest possible date, as she is anxious to finish this work during the summer months. She expressed keen disappointment in so little co-operation. Out of 500 requests mailed out, only 158 replied.

Mrs. Malzacher, of Leesville, talked on the Jubilee work. Mrs. J. H. Cain, of De Ridder, State Superintendent of Young People's Work, talked on organization.

Round table discussion: "From the Mount of Privilege to the Vale of Service."

Mrs. Dees was given a rising vote of thanks for the good work accomplished under her administration.

It was voted unanimously that the Missionary Conference be held in Leesville, La., in 1929.

All ministers' wives in the congregation were introduced to the audience. after which "O Jesus I have Promised Thee," was sung by the audience. Closing prayer by Mrs. Hill, of Merryville, La.

The evening session was in charge of Mrs. Cain, who presented the work of the Young People.

A LETTER FROM MISS LOUISE PRESTON.

Dear Young Friends: You'd never guess what I've been doing, so I'm going to tell you—taking tucks in the Conference grand-twins' dresses; that is, in Jane's, for she is so tiny that hers have always to be altered. I'm no sort of seamstress, can't even use a thimble, so you know what a gigantic undertakng it was for me—and, oh, yes—I've thought of you all more than usual to-day, and decided to write and tell you so. (Every one laughs when we say "you all" out here). The twins are growing so fast, and are always into something. We haven't decided, yet, whether they'll be president or tin peddlers. Jane talks so much and makes so many gestures that she'll be a stump speaker of some kind, maybe a preacher; Jules is quiet and likes anything that looks like a fire, so maybe he'll be a fireman; and they both are well satisfied when they're carrying pots and pans all over the house. Jules likes his pacifier—he has been sick so much that he is a trifle spoiled—and his daddy is trying to make him give it up. "Son," he'll say, "you're a big boy—you don't want that thing. Let's throw it away." Son manfully throws it away, so long as daddy's near, but after a moment picks it up again. I'm thinking that we grown-ups are like that in more ways than one. How strong we feel when we deny ourselves something, or resolve to leave off a fault—and the first thing we know we're back at it again. We need to stay close to our Father, too, for "of yourselves ye can do nothing; with me you can do all things."

That quotation reminded me: I always put a Scripture reference on the flap of my envelopes, sometimes just below my return address, just a notion of mine. Recently I received two letters, addressed, respectively, "Louise Preston, Route 2, Box 147, Tucson, Arizana, Num. 6:24"—and "Route 2, Box 147, or Phil. 4:19." One was from a Mississippi Conference minister, too—but I won't tell on him this time. I knew that I try to live by my Bible, but didn't know I lived in it before!

It's warm out here, from 102 to 103 degrees in the shade. I wrote Brother Hawkins that, and he sent me a joke about a man answering, "Well, I don't have to stay in the shade," but, you see, I do!

You all should see the yucca bloom I have on my dresser. It looks somewhat like the Spanish dagger, but is more beautiful. The plant sends up a single stalk of bloom. So does the century plant, and they are blooming this year, most of them. They bloom every eight or fifteen years, opinions differ—and once allowed to bloom, the plant dies. Most of those who have them cut the stalks off before the blooms come, to prevent this.

The cactus is all in bloom, and there are so many varieties one can't keep up with them. Our neighbor across the street, a lady doctor from New York, has a hedge of ocatilla cactus, which has terrible thorns and beautiful blossoms. The Mexicans use these for fences, and they are certainly most effective ones. A neighbor who has a ranch out from town brought me several kinds of cactus blooms to look at, and I foolishly dumped them onto my bed. One kind has tiny thorns shaped like a fish-hook, and these worked themselves through the bed-clothes, so that I was fishing, or trying to fish, these tiny thorns from my hands, and even my feet, for days afterward.

Speaking of the lady doctor, she has always lived in apartments, and has never had a lawn, or grown things before. It is interesting to watch her work among her flowers, and to see her delight in them. You folks who are used to being out among growing thing can't appreciate them so much as we who have to be shut away from them, or who have never lived where nature reigned.

I've gained three pounds, weigh eighty pounds now; feel fine, am up about two hours every day, and have a good appetite, so I guess I'm all

Mrs. Steele Says of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Pratt, W. Va.—"I was so weak and nervous that I was in bed most all the time and couldn't sit up and I am only 30 years old. I saw your advertising in a magazine and after I had taken three doses of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I could feel that I was better. After taking two bottles I began doing my work and I feel like a new woman. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends and say it will do all it claims to do and more. I will gladly answer all letters I recive."—Mrs. S. E. Steele, Pratt, W. Va.

right. I read a "Practical Prayer" recently, which might well apply to us out here where foodstuffs are so high, especially the first two lines: "Lord, give me a good digestion—and something to digest." Now, I'll have Brother Bennett trying to send me something to eat, as he wished to send me some wood when I told about the wood question! Better send a fan, now—only fans give me pleurisy. The wind blows nearly all the time, though, and my own room has lots of windows and doors, so I fare very nicely, indeed.

I want to thank you, Brother Bennett, for your letter, and also Brother Oliver. How I enjoyed the "age" contests put on by Brother O'Neill! Vera beat me to the solution, though. I wish our Advocate out here were as friendly as yours, Dr. Carley. And, Leaguers, let me tell you what Dr. Carley did! He happened to think of me one morning, sat down at the typewriter and sent me a note wishing me a happy day. That touched me so, that little thought—it made me so happy that, womanlike, I just lay here and cried to think that such a busy man would pause to send such a kindly wish for my happiness that day, to me, whom he knows only through my letters to you. "Kind hearts are more than coronets" and we often do more good by our sympathy than by our labors."

The beautiful tributes to Brother Selby I certainly appreciated. He was good to me, and I loved him.

Oh, Leaguers, how I wish you'd send in news to the League page. Every week I look for it—and am disappointed. What's the matter with Ellisville, and Gulfport, and Laurel, and Meridian, and Vicksburg? Friends write me often of interesting things these Leagues are doing, and I wonder why they aren't reported in the Advocate. It's time to begin to boost for Assembly, anyway, isn't it? The "Scela" (Southern California Epworth League Assembly) folks are getting out such clever bulletins and magazines advertising their Assembly—and how they can boost! Of course, Californians are noted for that, but they really are doing splendid things in their Conference. In the Scela Magazine for May they have a page "The Scela Advertisers' Association." Leaguers are urged to "Patronize Your Assembly Officers." The District Secretary advertises "The very latest in Report Blanks—specials on July 1, Oct. 1," etc. The Reporter advertises "Free Publicity, any time—any quantity," the Treasurer advertises "Receipts to suit your pocketbook—No extra charge for Overpaid Pledges," and Doctor Epworth League says "Scela Tonic for tired, run down or nervous Leagues—one week at Scela will do wonders—Order yours now, from ——, Registrar." And, Leaguers, you know it pays to advertise.

Mr. Cheek is leaving us to-day, to begin work in California. I dont' see how we're going to do without him, either. I could write on and on, but I won't. Dr. Carley might not think so kldly of me if I write much more.

Here's a little verse to set you thinking—it did me:

"Some folks in looks take so much pride
They don't think much on what's inside.
Well, as for me, I know my face
Can ne'er be made a thing of grace,
And so I rather think I'll see
How I can fix the inside o' me
So folks'll say, 'He looks like sin,
But ain't he beautiful within!'"

And a little thought "There's nothing in the world worth doing wrong for."

If any of you come to the World's Sunday School Association, and stop over in Tucson, why, remember that I'm here. It's beautiful in the West this time of the year, and I'll be so glad to see you.

With loving wishes to each of you,

the most profitable of all. At lunch hour we were delighted to have present three of the former Union presidents, Mr. W. D. Hawkins, Mr. Ralph Hayes, and Rev. James Smith. Aside from our songs and stunts, led by Mr. Journey, there is one other incident I hope you'll forgive me for mentioning that occurred at this last lunch hour. Pa Hawkins arose with a tall package all mysteriously done up in lovely white tissue paper, and after making a speech in behalf of the others about some one for whom the gift was intended, turned and presented it to me—an adorable little boudoir lamp, all rose and yellow, in the form of a candle, with its globe molded in the shape of a curving flame. There I was having to accept when "Unworthy! Unworthy!" were the words that surged within me! The room seemed suddenly filled with tear gas, and I could scarcely express my appreciation, for it was too well known that I had "fussed," refused, argued, "Let some one else do it for a while," and then finally accepted the presidency of the Union again. Right then and there I learned another of life's lessons.

After our last classes we reassembled for the awarding of certificates and for our consecration service. Forty-six Leaguers received each one unit of credit on their Christian Culture diplomas. Four others had done the required work, but were too young to receive credit. Among those receiving credit, and of whom we were very proud, were six out-of-town Leaguers from the Suqualena chapter, who braved the weather to be with us. Following the awarding of credits we entered into a most impressive consecration service, led by the dean. He appealed to the young people to commit themselves to a crusade with Jesus for the accomplishment of three things: First, the consecration of their lives for the evangelism of the world; second, for world peace, giving their influence to outlawry of war; third, for a Christian citizenship that maintains the ideals of Jesus. Every Leaguer present responded to the appeal, and our institute closed with our League benediction by all.

No, I won't say that it wasn't some trouble; that it didn't take much time and planning; and that we didn't have to sacrifice some less worth-while things; but if you had been with us those five evenings I believe you, too, would have agreed that it was well worth any time that had been spent upon it.

LILYBEC PHILIPS.

P. S. Any of you other districts that want to put on a good institute and if you will make us fair enough a proposition, we'll think about lending you our dean. It's bound to be good if Pa Hawkins is there.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Sunday School Day money is slowly coming in. We have been encouraged by the reports that have reached us and we are hoping that this encouragement will continue to grow with the passing days.

Several new Sunday schools are calling upon us for support and we are doing our best, not only to respond with what they are asking, but all that ought to be done and then some if at all possible.

The present week six of the young people are out representing the Sunday School Board at various places, teaching Cokesbury Leadership Schools and other work. It thrills me to think of the interest and care with which these young people do this work. You who pray and love youth, pray for these that they fail not.

This is giving them a chance to find themselves; yes, and making it possible for them to gain the confidence which will make them more capable as they enter school rooms to teach this fall. You who uphold them will have a share in their future. I am pleased to report that the schools taught up to this time have been highly successful and encouraging.

The Standard Training School at Mount Olive had the same number of credits as last year. The rains and sickness and other unavoidable causes interfered and made it hard for the attendance to hold, but it did, with a spirit that was superb. Mr. W. A Welch and Mrs. Welch and Mrs. G. C. Speed came all the way from Bethel Church to the school, not missing a night in spite of the rains and floods. This was a round trip of 45 miles. I think the bravery of these made the spirit of the school much better than it could have been otherwise under any circumstances. We trust that these will have a blessing from their efforts that will make their own community better in every sort of way.

The First Standard Leadership Class ever taught in the Conference was conducted at Forest. This was almost disbanded on account of the rains, but it held, and four completed the work. We are in hopes that more of these classes will be conducted throughout the Conference.

Forest, we hope, will go forward from now on.

The men who are to check the Sunday schools this fall must begin to get lined up for this important task. The Newton District is ready to go. The Seashore District is ready. It is hoped the other districts will begin to make preparation also.

Pray for all the workers and all the work.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

"THE CHURCH COLLEGE TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW."

In our Methodist Episcopal exchanges of June 14 we find an article under the above title by Dr. James A. Beebe, president of Allegheny College, in which there are some significant and suggestive statements.

In answer to the question, "What will a Christian college do?" President Beebe says: "However Christian it may be to supplement in a co-operative spirit the work of other colleges, the church college which is content to be no more and no less Christian than the rest of the world, is notably deficient in the quality of its Christianity. Both the 'field and the function' of the church college appear in this: The significance for society and the individual of the Christian approach to all truth, and the Christian way of life in all relationships. For State and non-church private colleges this at most can only be incidental. For the church college it is primary and controlling. * * * Yet again and still more important, it is the function and province of the church college to seek the development of the Christian attitude toward men and God in its students. Can that college be called Christian which encourages its students to think of education in terms of personal advantages? to seek it because it gives one a running start to success in business, politics, or a professional life, or increases one's power, or adds to one's wealth? Can that be a Christian school whose courses in economics do not prepare a student to face intelligently the complex industrial life of today and help him to think his way through to a Christian attitude toward it? And can that be a Christian school whose courses in history and political science do not help the student form a Christian opinion about the problems of government, diplomacy, and international relations, including war? And can that be a Christian school whose extra-curricular life —whose fraternities, athletics, amusements—are not frankly controlled by Christian principles?"

Having thus stated the ideals of the Christian college as he conceives them, President Beebe proceeds to state some hindrances to the attainment of these ideals, which he lists as follows:

"1. A new type of student, attracted to the school by its buildings, its fraternities, the success of its athletics, the fame of its faculty, instead of its Christian atmosphere.

"2. A new type of teacher, the product of the modern graduate school, 'whose ideals are materialism in physical science, mechanism in biology, behaviorism in psychology, determination in history, imperialism in government and industry, expediency in ethics,' all of which tend to neutralize the Christian ideal of life and God and man. This teacher, unlike the pastor-teacher of earlier years, feels no obligation 'to make his students good.' He yearns for 'research' and 'productive scholarship,' by which last he does not mean 'constructive results in the lives of students.'

"3. A new type of administrator, who is more of a business man than an educator (as he is often called), who has few contacts with the student body, who is concerned chiefly with the problems of organization and finance, and who, at the hazard of losing his soul, must make a showing of growth and expansion to hold his own with the overshadowing State school and highly-endowed non-sectarian private school.

"4. A new type of alumnus, generally very vocal, who is eager to have a winning athletic team and is frankly out of sympathy with high Christian and scholastic ideals.

"5. A new type of trustee, selected often not for his religious earnestness, but for his skill as a business administrator and financial counsellor. Through this trustee an alliance is formed with business and industry, and economic liberalism is likely to be rebuked as sternly as theological errancy in the older period.

"6. A new type of church, which is much less dogmatic than the church of our fathers, and so much less sure of the necessity of maintaining colleges whose courses of study and whose ideals shall be different from those of State schools."

The substance of it all is that it is the function of the church college to be distinctively Christian in all its organization and activities, in its point of view, its atmosphere, its purposes; and if it does not perform this function, it has no justification for its existence. This we believe to be the decisive test. If a church college is not different from the State school and the non-church school in the specific things that distinguish Christianity from "the world, the flesh, and the devil," it is not a Christian college, and it has no right to be called such.

The church has no right to spend a lot of money in supporting non-Christian schools.

PURE IGNORANCE.

We esteem Dr. Cladius B. Spencer, editor of the Central Christian Advocate, one of the official organs of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a courteous Christian gentleman, who would not knowingly make a misstatement or intentionally do anybody an injustice. But we do accuse him of pure ignorance in connection with the following editorial, which appeared under the caption, "Lynchings," in his issue of June 14:

"The General Conference spoke with commendable plainness concerning lynching. But does condemnation go far enough when little is done to correct the state of mind that sets the kerosene on fire?

"So long as there is race hatred there will be lynchings. Lynching is a form of entertainment among those who are steeped in race discrimination. This is obvious from the fact of the theatricals that accompany lynchings, so diabolical that Satan himself, and the satanic inquisitors of the Middle Ages could devise nothing more gruesome than that accompanying some of these lynchings. The element of entertainment accompanies every one of them to a greater or lesser extent. It is not the simple and direct intention merely to exact the penalty of death. There is the crowd standing around, as of old they used to surround the gibbet in England, or the burnings at stake in Spain, amounting to a holiday.

"It must be that a better state of mind is pervading the people among whom race discrimination has been most pronounced, because during the first third of this year, 1928, there has not been reported a single case of this thing.

"So we take courage and press on toward some type of human affinity."

Dr. Spencer has been editor of the Central Christian Advocate for twenty-eight years, and he was elected by his recent General Conference for another term of four years; we cannot conceive, therefore, how a man who has been so long in a position to learn can be as densely ignorant as Dr. Spencer shows himself to be when he makes these statements: "Lynching is a form of entertainment among those who are steeped in race discrimination. * * * The element of entertainment accompanies every one of them to a greater or lesser extent. It is not the simple and direct intention to exact the penalty of death. There is the crowd standing around, as of old they used to surround the gibbet in England, or the burnings at the stake in Spain, amounting to a holiday."

Not so, Dr. Spencer, not so; absolutely not so. For the sake of your readers, we hope your ignorance about other things is not as dense as your ignorance about lynchings. Lynching is bad enough, God knows; but it is not as bad as ignorance, so gross as to be comic if it were not so tragic, makes it appear.

THE CHURCH PRESS.

Dr. James R. Joy, editor of the New York Christian Advocate, in an editorial in a recent issue on "The Church Press and the General Conference," says, among other things:

"Taken by and large, the General Conference did well by the church press. The fact that the papers as a whole do not 'make money' was accepted as a matter of course. It is becoming recognized that the quadrennial deficit should be regarded as an item of advertising expense—and, in comparison with the vast benefits of the publicity secured, an almost negligible item."

It is generally agreed that the church must have papers, whether they "make money," or even pay their way, or not. Perhaps the ideal situation would be for the paper itself to produce an income sufficient for all its needs, with enough surplus to provide for specially attractive but expensive features; but we do not know of any paper that has attained this ideal. In our opinion a church paper is necessary even if the larger part of its support has to be provided independently of its own income.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

It is said, "man is incurably religious." Au evidence of this universal quality lies in the fact of one's never-ceasing interest in the great spiritual teachings of the Bible. The old Book is like a fairy dream of a jewel cave. Top, sides and floor glitter and shimmer with gems of "purest ray serene." We read Genesis, and wonder ahout the hirth scenes of the coming earth, the tragedy of engulfing waters cleansing its face from the vile sins of an accursed race, and the saving grace for au elect remnant to replant the seed of man. We follow the patriarchs over sunlit Syrian plains aud in fancy can see their flocks and herds as they dot far reaches of hill and vale; or we sit in the shadows of the eventide near the sheltering tent of the father of this romanic(?) race, and in a maze of wonder behold him entertain visitants from realms unseen. After these comes Joseph, with a life story of such an intricate cast, and rare human interest, as well as traciug in clear outline the wonder of divine providence that its outline and plan scarcely find a parallel in the wide range of letters, profane or sacred. Moses, great because God shaped and directed his life and destiny, and used him to reveal to a darkened world an ethical code unequalled in its purpose and purity, elsewhere in the realm of law. Out of the pride and arrogance of Egyptian tyranny and superstition, he is strangely driven hy the avenging weight of his own crime to the far-off desert place, that he might more fully learn that mercy and love ever temper divine retribution for justice. When this divinely taught man of God's right hand leads his emancipated people for forty weary years through the stark waste of a naked and waterless land, we how in humhle acknowledgment of a supernaturai power, which causes the very dry rocks to gush forth living waters, and the heavens to rain food. A hard school was this desert schooi, hut it was the oniy way to teach righteousness to a stuhborn, rehellious race. Judges, prophets, priests and kings pass in stateiy procession, through decades and centuries of history. Great eveuts occur; mighty deeds are wrought; battles iost and battles won; nations live and disappear in the gulf of time; ever onward, upward through the mystic enchanting pages of the great Book, the seeing eye and understanding heart may trace God's purpose in man's life and destiny. In no other history can this purpose, this holy, righteous purpose, he so outlined and marked. Only in him, who lived, and loved, and died that man might live and love and not die, may we find the consummation of all this wondrous chain of events that links centuries together and vindicates fuliy the claim of the divine guidance and inspiration of the Old Book. Yet no man may see the real beauty of the Bible, its full meaning, its marvelous lessons of heroism and faith, until the drama of human life shall close and the kingdom be delivered up to God the Father. Then perhaps, we may study it auew, and understand it more fully.

The prosy preacher was lecturing on the prophets. The major prophets had claimed some two or more hours of his time. "And now," said he, "we coue to the minor prophets—what place shali they have?" A weary and worn hearer arose, and said: "Parson, if you don't mind, they may have my place." Despite the humor of the locus mutandi, the minor prophets are not aitogether among the least of the prophets. The book of Micah is a gem of intrinsic worth and literary finish that lies tucked away amoug these. Its prophetic uote is as clear as the call of a cardinal from a hedge, dew-spangied, on a spring morning. Iuspired prophecy possibly finds no fuller and more positive declaration elsewhere in the Old Testauent. Micah warns his people in no uncertain tones of impending judgment, and tells of the horrors of the Assyrian invasion. Yet in wrath God will remember mercy, and the promised restoration of the holy city is assured. The glory of Christ's kingdom is foretold; even his birthplace is mentioned. Universal peace will he the great, final outcome. War shali be no more, and the ingathering of all nations will close the suhlime drama.

This hook is well worth our study as the church grapples with great problems of world-wide import and realizes as never before its call to renewed and vigorous missionary effort and enterprise. For surely if the golden visions of Israel's prophets are yet unfulfilled in all the fullness of their meaning, how much less are the more perfect and assured promises of Christ's Kingdom.

OUR NATIONAL HYMN.

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

While "The Star-Spangled Banner" is prescribed by army and navy regulations as our national anthem, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," is our popular national hymn. Samuel Francis Smith, who was a classmate of Oliver Wendell Holmes at Harvard, is the author of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." In a class poem, Dr. Holmes once described him thus:

"And there's a fine youngster of excellent pith.
Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith;
But he shouted a song for the brave and the free—
Just read his medal, 'my country,' 'of thee.' "

Later in life, when Smith's hymn had become universally admired as our patriotic air, Dr. Holmes said to him: "Your name and fame will live when I and my works are forgotten."

It was while he was a student for the Baptist ministry, at Andover Theological Seminary, that he wrote "America." It was written in less than a half hour. Dr. Tillett, in "The Methodist Hymnal Annotated," says: "The author had not the remotest idea that the words he dashed off thus hurriedly would ever become a favorite with any lovers of music and song, much less become the national hymn of a great and growing nation. National hymns do not become such by virtue of the loftiness of poetic thought and expression, but because they have in them that indefinable, simple something that gets into the hearts of the people. Greater national songs than this have been written—hymns surpassing it in dignity and nobility of thought—but it is doubtful if we shall ever have in America a hymn more popular with the people than this."

When some one expressed regret in the presence of Dr. Smith that our national hymn should have the same meter and tune as the national hymn of England, he replied: "I don't share this regret. On the contrary, I deem it a new and beautiful bond between the mother country and her daughter."

It was written in 1832, and was first sung that year at a children's Fourth of July celebration in Park Street Church, Boston.

The following verses, published in the Boston Courier in 1885, indicate the wide use our public schools have made of this national song:

Passing the Primary School.

"Again each morning as we pass
The city streets along,
We hear the voices of the class
Ring out the nation's song.

"The small boys' treble piping clear,
The bigger boys' low growl,
And from the boy who has no ear
A weird, discordant howl.

"With swelling hearts we hear them sing
'My Country, 'Tis of Thee—'
From childish throats the anthem ring
'Sweet Land of Liberty!'

"Their little hearts aglow with pride,
Each with exultant tongue
Proclaims: "From Every Mountain Side
Let Freedom's Song be Sung.'

"Let him who'd criticise the time,
Or scout the harmony,
Betake him to some other clime—
No patriot is he!

"From scenes like these our grandeur springs,
And we shall e'er be strong,
While o'er the land the schoolhouse rings
Each day with Freedom's song."

Dr. Ninde, author of "The Story of the American Hymn," quotes Dr. Smith as saying late in life: "I have heard 'America" sung half way round the world. I have heard it on the Atlantic Ocean, on the Baltic Sea, and on the Mediterranean; in London, Liverpool, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Paris, Rome, Naples; in the Baths of Pompeii; in Athens, Calcutta, and Rangoon. On the earth I have heard it on Pike's Peak, and under the earth in the caverns at Manitou, Colorado, where it was played on the stalactites."

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Monk and Monroe.

Monk is "smilin' through" at Monroe. This is a great church and steadily growing greater with the passing months. We have nearly, if not quite, fifteen hundred members in our First Church, and with the tremendous progress in building and business affairs, there is no reason why that membership may not be increased to much larger proportions in a very short while.

Brother Monk is a wonderfully effective leader. He looks zealously after all the interests of Methodism in his church, and his assistance makes the work of the presiding elder far less burdensome than it otherwise might be.

This year Brother Monk has extended his activities to include the organization of a new church on Gordan Avenue, in the south section of Monroe. A building and lot have been purchased, a church, Sunday school and Missionary Society organized, and Rev. John Norris, assistant to Brother Monk, has been preaching regularly there. This will be a strong church in the near future, although it is not yet set off from First Church.

We have reason to be proud of the record made by Methodism in this city during the last few years. Great strides forward have been taken, but the end is not yet. Efficient leadership, Christian co-operation, consecrated effort, will bring to pass greater things with the passing years. We are moving onward certainly and rapidly, and we hope to continue so to do.

The circulation of the Christian Advocate and Methodist Quarterly Review remain about the same as last year. We ask the interest and support of the church in our effort to secure the largest possible circulation of these splendid periodicals.

In review of the year's work, and considering the state of the business, the Book Committee has appropriated $75,000 for Conference claimants. We express our appreciation to the ministers and laymen of our great church for their loyalty and support. We appeal to the large membership of the church for its continued interest and co-operation in carrying on this great business of the church.

HOW TO GET MEN TO READ THE BIBLE.

By John R. Pepper, Superintendent, First Methodist Sunday School, Memphis, Tenn.

I think all Christian workers and Bible students will agree that every professing Christian ought to read some portion of the Holy Scriptures every day. Now, I have always believed that any legitimate plan which gets large numbers of people to read the Bible regularly and systematically is bound to prove a great blessing. Many people make it a rule of life to read the Bible every day, but a much larger number will neglect it altogether unless they are encouraged by the good example of their associates.

A rather unique plan for getting men in large numbers to read the Bible in a large way was initiated by the Byrd Murray Bible class of Tulip Street Methodist Church, Nashville, Tenn., of which Mr. J. M. Way, associate secretary and treasurer of the General Board of Lay Activities, is the teacher. This plan was inaugurated on Jan. 2, 1927. There had been no previous publicity or discussion. The work began with the simple request that every member read at least one or two chapters a day, that the reading begin with Mark and the Acts, and that a book be finished before the reader should turn to another book. The lesson study had revealed the great need of a larger and more accurate knowledge of the Scriptures.

At the end of the first week the teacher placed a neatly printed report card in the hands of all the members with the request that they report their reading for the week, giving names of the books in which they had read and the number of chapters read in each book. When the offering was taken the Bible-reading report, which serves also as an attendance card, was collected also. Just before the closing prayer the total number of chapters read by the class and the name and number read by each member in excess of twenty-five chapters was announced.

It was a small beginning. The aggregate for that week was only 114 chapters, but the aggregate for the year 1927 was 33,252 chapters. The average attendance of the Byrd Murray Class was approximately 50. The average reading per member amounted to considerably more than one-half of the entire Bible.

When I heard of this very simple and inexpensive plan to stimulate Bible reading, I at once decided to try it in some of the classes of First Methodist Sunday school. We began on July 2, 1927, just six months after the Byrd Murray Bible class started. In eleven months five of our classes have read 54,913 chapters, or a little more than forty-six times through the entire Bible. The work is going on with increased interest, and I am writing this article for the sole purpose of inducing other Sunday schools and Bible classes to adopt the plan and share the blessings which flow from the regular, systematic reading of God's Word.

No new organization is necessary, and the only expense involved is the cost of the report card which is to be filled out by every member every Sunday. A sample of this card will be furnished to any one who will send a self-addressed stamped envelope to John R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn., or to J. M. Way, Nashville, Tenn., and your local printer can print the cards as you need them.

Each of the five classes following this plan makes a report at the end of the month showing the aggregate number of chapters read. On the following Sunday I visit each class, call for the member who read the largest number of chapters during the month, and present him with a vest-pocket edition of some portion of the Scriptures. The present costs very little, but the recognition that goes with it is of great value. It is a rare thing that the same individual wins this present more than a month at a time because others are stimulated to outstrip him in reading. And thus the greater benefits grow out of the greater reading of the Holy Book.

I am sure my good Brother J. M. Way, whom I have known as a faithful Sunday school worker for many years, will not object to my reference to him and his work, for my only purpose in writing this article is to extend and promote the good work which he had the honor to begin.

HELPING THOSE WHO HELP THEMSELVES.

(Interview with the Rev. R. B. Burgess, President Textile Industrial Institute.)

"Help those who help themselves," may be termed the motto of the Textile Industrial Institute of Spartanburg, S. C., where 179 American-born and American-bred boys and girls, and men and women are enrolled as students, earning a living as well as an education at one and the same time.

This unique piece of home mission work is carried on under the auspices of the Home Department of the Board of Missions of the Southern Methodist Church, with a view to giving the underprivileged people of the mill and mountain districts of the South an opportunity to earn an education which they could not get otherwise. The present enrollment of 179 at Textile Institute is the largest in the history of the institution, the number having increased from seventy-eight in the past three years. With few exceptions the students are all self-supporting. By working part time in the neighboring mills and going to school part time, they are able to earn as they learn.

"With students already enrolled from eight of the States in our Union, namely, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Vermont, and West Virginia, we are looking forward to the day when Textile Industrial Institute shall become a great training school for leaders in the industrial world," declares the Rev. R. B. Burgess, president of the school. "One of the chief aims of the school is to train leaders for our industrial population, not only religious leaders but political leaders as well. At least 75 per cent of our students go back into mill work, either as operatives or overseers or as Christian workers. To-day a dozen or more members of the Upper South Carolina Conference are graduates of Textile Institute, while at least that many of our former students are now managers of big mills. Some of the Textile Institute boys have gone into politics, and we have found out that they not only get the votes of the mill workers but of the downtown business men as well."

Mr. Burgess spoke with pride of the three members of the first graduating class of 1915, who returned to Spartanburg to take part in the commencement exercises of the school in 1927. These three early graduates have all made good along their various lines of endeavor, he declared. One of them has become the overseer of one of the biggest mills of the country and gives employment to a number of the students from Textile Institute, thus offering to others the same opportunity that meant so much to him. The second graduate is a prominent attorney in Spartanburg, S. C., and a member of the Legislature of that great State. The third member of the class, who belonged to the Baptist church, is now a missionary in Brazil, having under his jurisdiction forty native preachers in a territory covering an area larger than the State of South Carolina.

The students who come to Textile Institute, according to Mr. Burgess, belong to independent old Anglo-Saxon stock, and there is no desire to pauperize them; therefore every student must pay something for what he gets. Many of the students come from the highlands of Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, and Virginia and belong to the fine old Scotch-Irish stock that has been sealed up in the mountains for generations, probably some of the purest blood in our country.

A recent survey of the students of Textile Institute shows 88 per cent of them members of some Protestant church; 70 per cent devout Christians who really try to put into practice in their daily lives the principles of Christianity; twenty-four out of the 179 are life service volunteers; and ten are taking special technical training for positions as mill overseers.

Textile Institute is located in the center of the textile industry of the South, for within seventy-five miles of its doors the majority of all the spindles of the Southern States are located. One large mill contiguous to the campus of the school and another about a mile away both offer employment to the students, the heads of the mills giving prefereuce to student workers, who, they say, do the best work of any employees of the mills. Other mills nearby have voluuteered to take student workers, and it has already been found, says Mr. Burgess, that adequate employment could be given to several times more students than are at present on the roll of Textile Institute.

How is it possible for students to work in the mills and go to school at the same time? Mr. Burgess, in answering this question, explained the system of management of Textile Institute as follows: First, the entire student body is divided into two equal sections, and one job in the mills is assigned to each pair of students, one member of the pair being taken from the first section and the second member of the pair from section number two. The two students take charge of the same job and alternate their work, one going to school one week while the other works in the mill. The mills give first choice of the mill jobs to the students in the institute because of the efficiency of the student workers. Each student in the mills earns from $12 to $15 each week during the two weeks' time that he is at work in the mills, and in turn pays to the school a sum of $9.50 a fortnight for his room and board. This leaves him with the difference between $9.50 and his $12 or $15 with which to pay for his clothes, books, and other incidentals. School is in session almost the entire year, the only vacation being in the months of July and August.

Textile Industrial Institute is now on the accredited list as a high school, and during the present year two years of college work have been added. The work done by the school is credited by Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C., by Furman University, and by the State Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Mr. Burgess told many interesting stories of students at Textile Institute who had made good. One boy, who came from the mountains of Tennessee at the age of fourteen, found a job in the mills at Greenville which at first paid him nothing at all. Soon he began to draw small wages, practically all of which he sent back to his father, a poor tenant farmer in the mountains. Hearing of Textile Institute, the boy decided to enter the school, and in one year finished both the tenth and eleventh grades, not only making the highest record in his class but also winning the medal as the best weaver in the mill during the year and a scholarship to Wofford College. He was outstanding man in the Senior class at Wofford and won second place in the big oratorical contest, delivering an oration written entirely by himself—a plea for the people of the mountains. He is now teaching to earn money to put himself through law school.

Another student, a married man of 35 or thereabouts, with four children, gave up a job as an overseer in a mill at a salary of $200 a month to come to Textile Institute for an education so that he might become a preacher. Here he has a job earning $15 a week for two weeks of the month, going to school the other two weeks. His splendid wife, however, is standing behind him in his ambition to fit himself to preach the gospel to his people, and she also has taken a job in the mill. This man was formerly a professional baseball player in the South Atlantic League.

Student number three is rated as the best basketball player in the mill basketball teams of the South. He turned down an offer of $125 a month to play professional basket-ball and is hard at work in the mills for $15 a week, rating the opporunity that is given him at Textile Institute to equip himself for life as higher than any amount of money that could be paid to him untrained.

This young man also expects to put himself through college.

A conference supply from a mill district also belongs on the list of Textile students. Along with his two grown daughters he has come to school, he in the ninth grade and they in the tenth. His aim is to continue his education until he can become a full member of the Conference and thus be better prepared for service among his people.

Another was a weaver at Greenville, young and ambitious, but he had never really had a chance. As he stood at his work he could watch the boys hurrying to and from school, and as he thought of the hopelessness of his own life and his lack of education, he wept. One day somebody told him of Textile Industrial Institute—a place where he could still work in the mill and yet get an education for which his heart hungered. A chance for him at last! He came to the school and plunged headlong into the work, and in six years he had accomplished the impossible task—he was graduated from Wofford College, and behind him in the Junior class he left one of those selfsame boys he had watched with eyes of envy from his little window six years before.

Helping those who help themselves, lending a hand to our own American-born boys and girls who have never had a chance—that is the great work that Textile Institute is doing to-day.

BAY SPRINGS (MISS.) WESLEY BROTHERHOOD.

On the night of June 20, the men of Bay Springs Methodist church met and partook of a palatable luncheon in the basement of the church, prepared by the "ever ready" ladies of the church, and after some words of explanation by the pastor and Rev. W. W. Nelson as to the objectives of a Wesley Brotherhood, an official moved that we organize, which move was carried and the following officers were elected: W. F. Thompson, president; Dr. R. D. Pittman, vice president; J. B. Horn, secretary; D. T. Burnett, treasurer, and H. H. Crisler, Jr., Methodist Layman agent. Twenty-one gave their names for membership. Money was handed the treasurer to pay for the charter, and it was decided to meet once a month in the basement of the church, with luncheon, program, and special entertainment. July 19 is the date for the next meeting, when Methodist men all over the charge and surrounding towns and communities are specially invited to attend. Notify the secretary, at Bay Springs, if you think you can come. You'll receive a royal welcome.

J. A. WELLS, Pastor.

THE SARDIS DISTRICT MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

My Dear Dr. Carley: Please publish the program for the Sardis District Ministers' Association. We are to meet on Tuesday morning, July 10, at 10 o'clock, in the Methodist church at Pope with Rev. G. W. Robertson as pastor-host. The program committee has submitted the following program:

10:30 a. m., Sermon, by Rev. C. T. Floyd, of Sardis.

11:30 a. m., "What Is the Best Plan for Getting the Benevolences?" Discussed by Rev. H. N. McKibben, Rev. T. H. Porter, and Rev. J. D. Simpson.

"What is the Pastor to Do When a Congregation Refuses to Permit an Offering to Be Taken?" Rev. T. M. Bradley, Rev. W. W. Hartsfield, and Rev. A. T. Clanton.

"What Is the Relation of the Pastor and the Sunday School Superintendent, and Can They Cooperate for a Better Sunday School?" Rev. G. A. Baker, Rev. A. J. Henry, and Rev. S. B. Potts.

Round table discussion, "What Is Worship and What Object Does Our Order of Worship Serve?" led by Brother H. R. McKee.

I am too busy to give a lengthy report of our last meeting, which was held in the beautiful little church in Coldwater with Rev. G. A. Baker and his good people, but I want to speak of the sermon feast that we had in a really great missionary sermon preached by Rev. K. S. L. Cooke, our pastor at Tyro. Then our chairman, Rev. C. T. Floyd, spoke very earnestly to us about the importance of the Golden Cross enrollment and it seemed agreed that we would try and get every church in the Sardis District to respond to the Golden Cross enrollment.

A. T. CLANTON, Secretary.

AN APPEAL FOR HELP.

To the friends of the church in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Dear Brethren and Friends: We are struggling hard to establish the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Hays, La. We have a small congregation and no place of worship. We have a plot of ground and there is a man that proposes to give us a house if we can move it, and we have not the money to move it. If we had $150 or $200, we could move the house and repair it and have a very respectable house. If our friends in Louisiana and Mississippi will help us, by the help of God we will establish Methodism here. Send contributions to W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of Lake Charles District, or J. M. Spires, P. C., Grand Chenier, La.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE REPORT ON SUPERANNUATE ENDOWMENT.

Following up the Plan worked out by the Secretary of the General Board of Finance and Conference Directors in the St. Louis meeting, some weeks ago I requested the pastors of our Louisiana Confernece to report to me the results of the Superannuate Endowment Campaign by June 15. A good many have made their reports; others have not yet finished the work. I am receiving reports every week, and shall expect to hear from all the pastors sooner or later who have not yet reported.

Advocate readers will be especially interested in the following reports by two of our French pastors serving mission charges:

"This is to tell you that the Bayou Blue charge has sent in the balance due on superannuate endowment. We really cleaned up our balance. We collected chickens and eggs and the balance in cash.

"C. F. THIBODEAUX."

"Enclosed will find a check for $5 for the superannuate fund, the same to be credited to the Port Eads church, Delta circuit. We had no quota (it's a new circuit), but we want to be present in all the causes of the church.

"LEON PICONE."

Rev. J. B. Peters, pastor First Church, New Orleans, reports that every dollar of his quota will be collected this year in hard cash. My ear is to the ground listening to hear as fine reports from the other big churches of the Conference. Rev. G. D. Purcell writes: "Oberlin will pay by the 15th of June the remainder of her pledge." Rev. W. R. Harvell, Hammond, will clean up this year. Rev. R. W. Tucker, Bogalusa, has things arranged to pay up in full next year. Rev. H. N. Brown, Natchitoches, will clean up his entire quota by "next year, or break a trace." And Brown will raise every dollar of it. Others have made splendid reports, but I must stop right here. More later.

A YEAR OF REAL REVIVAL IN KOREA.

By M. B. Stokes, Director of Evangelism.

The year 1928 is proving to be a year of real revival in the Korea Conference. The work is going forward on all sides. They are now having a great series of meetings in the Choonchun city church. As many as 800 people are in attendance upon the services. This is by far the largest attendance that the church has ever had. Also large numbers are coming into the church as new believers.

In the Seoul District.

The work in the Seoul District continues to go forward with encouragement.

The Sukkyo Church, which has had a steady increase since last fall, recently reached the high mark of more than 180 in attendance at the morning service. They have had to order twelve more benches to seat the newcomers.

At Wondong the new church had more than eighty at the service last Sunday morning. If that congregation keeps on growing the problem will be where to put the people. The building will hardly hold more than 100 even if we crowd them in all over the floor.

The little new group outside the East Gate is making fine progress. I managed to get them a little temporary place for worship, and last Sunday there were more than fifty in attendance. They are having a revival there now, and the people are coming so well that some have had to stand outside. On the very first night ten people decided for Christ.

Just the Beginning.

The above are a few instances of what is going on all over the Conference. And as yet the revival is just beginning. We can look forward to a greater movement next fall.

The Tongmoonan Church in Songdo is in the midst of a continual revival. The congregation has increased to about 300.

A Great Forward Movement.

Now is the time for a great forward movement in Korea. Next fall we want to put on a big campaign in non-Christian villages, and this will take a good deal of money. The total cost of the campaign so far has been less than yen 800, or about $400. We have been very careful in our expenditure of money and have yet used nearly all that was granted us.

I do not know the financial conditions of other districts, but in the Seoul District, along with the successful revival movement, we are having a fine year in contributions. Out of the eight charges of the district, three have paid in full all Conference collections, including the assessments for Conference missions. Two other charges are almost out.

Truly in every way the year 1928 is proving to be a year of real revival in Korea.

REV. W. E. THOMAS CONDUCTS REVIVAL IN NEW ORLEANS.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, the Kentucky evangelist, assisted by local pastors, is holding services every evening under a tent at Lakeview, New Orleans, on the Canal Boulevard, near Taylor Avenue. The Board of City Missions is sponsoring the meetings.

THY STRENGTH.

I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing.

The joy of the Lord is your strength.

Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees.

Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.—The Scriptures.

OUR MODEL.

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.—The Scriptures.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY—ROBERT ANDREWS DAVIS.

An order came for us to cross the Mississippi River. We marched through Alexandria ou to Sicily Island, where we camped awhile; thence on up the Columbia. We stoppped here to rest on our march and some one built a fire of log heaps. I found a green pumpkin and threw it in the fire. We were ordered to march and I grabbed my pumpkin out of the fire. I hroke it open and tried to eat it—did swallow a few mouthfuls, being so very hungry, but it made me sick and I have never liked pumpkiu since.

We marched up past Monroe and camped in the Ouachita flats, untii the rain drove us out. One night I was on guard as corporal, with two hours on and four off; these off hours I tried to sleep, but when I would lie down, it was in a puddle of water; next morning with wet ciothes I found a fire quite comfortabie untii I was dry. That winter I wore a pair of cottonade pants all winter.

On the first day of January, 1864, we marched through Mouroe; cold, snow on the ground. I thought I would freeze on the march. We camped somewhere between Monroe and Bastrop. I was sent with a detail up into Arkansas. On our return to camp, quite a number took pneumonia, and some died, Wm. McCail, from Grand Chenere for one. I was also stricken down and sent to the hospitai, and never regained the ranks of my regiment until after the Mansfield fight. I was sent from an old Negro cabin we had used for a hospitai, through Monroe, across the river, to a hospital above Monroe about three or four miles, and as soon as I was able they carried me on out to a hospital at Mount Lebanon, where I remained for some time. During these trips the battle of Mansfield and Pleasant Hiii were fought. Here was where I heard a young medical student say, as he was preparing to drive an ambuiance out in the country for forage for the hospital, as he stepped in the vehicle and picked up the reins to drive, "Well, I am an M. D. now." He was driving a pair of muies.

When I was discharged from the hospital, Brother Upton, a Methodist preacher, took me in his buggy and carried me out about twenty-five or thirty miles to one of his quarterly meetings. I preached for him on Saturday at 11 a. m. We stopped at a Brother Shehee's Saturday and Sunday. Mr. Shehee's wife was a Rambow. When Brother Upton told me that I nearly split my sides laughing. But I was much impressed with Miss Shehee.

Monday morning I started for Shreveport, soldier-fashion, afoot. I crossed Lake Bisteneau (the only time I ever crossed it), and walked nearly all that day. Toward night I began to look for a place to stay. I was a stranger in a strange place. I reached a nice place and asked the gentleman if I could stay all night. He took me in, treated me fine, and next morning sent me on horseback to Shreveport. This I enjoyed.

On reaching Shreveport, I reported to the post commander. He sent me to the Shreveport ferry, where I was on guard and had to read all the passes of the people passing. While here, a storm came up and biew our boat out into the river. I attempted to get off the boat and found we were away from and.

After the storm subsided, the guard on the pontoon bridge told me that the wind was carrying him down the bank into the river; when he caught hold of a post, the wind biew him up and down on the ground and gave him a worse whipping than ever his mother gave him.

I was sent to the hospitai after this, where I spent my time nursing my comrades, preaching in the dining room, and acting as ward master in the first ward in the hospital in the City Hotel iu Shreveport.

At the battle of Mansfield, we lost our field officers, General A. Mouton, Brigadier Generai, Colonels Armour, Beard, Lieutenant Colonel Walker, and many men. I was reported dead, but was ill in hospital at Mount Lebanon, as stated above, so was not in the battle at all.

I remained in the Shreveport hospital quite awhile. I went from there up to Jefferson, Tex., with a number of convaiescents, where we stayed until most of the sick men were discharged, and we were returned to Shreveport.

Afterward we rejoined our regiment and did a good deal of marchiug. Finally we went up into Arkansas; camping here and there, we reached Monticello, where our army was reviewed by General Magruder.

During the review I was in a fix. I lost my shoestring and my shoe continued to come off my foot; every time I would stoop and put it on. This angered our "Cajin" Captain so much that he came near iashing me with his sword. But the review came to an end and we were ordered back to Louisiana. This meant several days' march. During the time it turned coid and we marched daiiy in the rain and sieet, at night sleeping in our wet ciothes. Having contracted dysentery, I straggled along and reached my command way in the night. I asked Dr. Boswell to send me to the hospitai. He did. Such a place! In there were men eaten up by great fat body lice. I was given a bunk with a hard cotton mattress on it. I was so sick, worn out and weak that for awhile I was miserabie. But the biessed Lord did not forsake me. As I lay on my hard bunk thinking of home, father, mother, sisters and brother, I, in prayer, said to the Lord I was satisfied; only one more sign would I ask about my call to preach. If he would iet me get out of this miserable war, get weii and get home to see my father, mother, sisters and brother, I would feel I was not mistaken in my cali to preach, and I would do it in some way the baiance of my life. Immediateiy, I feit better. I was soon up and was made steward of the hospital, and was given charge of the hospitai, with Dr. Greenstead iu charge as surgeon. We were placed in Washington, Hemstead County, Ark., where I remained untii given charge of some convalescent hospital stores to go to Lewisviiie, Ark. I acted as steward at Washington.

I was on one occasion providentiaiiy cared for. I felt quite a heavy burden resting on me. It was part of my work to go to the baker and get the bread for the hospital. Having something eise to do, I sent my comrade, the ward master. As he called for the bread the baker said: "Why didn't Davis come, he must have smelt a mouse." The ward master told me about it; so when the baker came to the hospital I asked him what he meant. He would not teii me then. After a few days we were ordered to take charge of some forty or fifty convalescent stores and the wagon to carry everything to Louisville. So we packed up and struck out. On the first night we camped out, the baker and the cook were in the same mess with me, and as we sat down to eat I asked a biessing, as I usuaiiy did. After supper the baker called me aside and asked me if I remembered the question I had asked him about smeiling a mouse. I said yes, and he said: "I am ashamed to acknowiedge it, but this very cook that ate supper with us to-night had come to me and said you accused me of stealing the soldiers' bread. It made me so mad that I vowed I would not give you a chance, but would strike you down with an ax handie when you opened the bakery door. But hearing you ask that blessing so earnestly just now convinced me the cook iied."

We reached our destination the next day, and I delivered the men and goods. I then had nothing to do, but I preached to the men in the wards every chance I got. Then a place was made for me as hospital steward.

I became acquainted with the chaplain of the post, Mr. Weiis, who proved a good friend to me. When Colonel Coiiins ordered me to return to my regiment, Brother Weiis went to General Magruder's acting generai and prevailed on him to have me as steward in the hospital and his assistant to preach to the soldiers. Now I was happy, and here I remained until I was given a sixty days' furlough. I went to Shreveport for my furiough, where I heard "Old Pap," Generai Price, deiiver his last address to his command, declaring the war was over, Lee had surrendered, and we could go to our homes.

So with the Missouri troops I boarded a transport at Shreveport and went down the river to Grand Ecore, where I met up with my own regiment and went aboard auother transport, on which the regiment went down to Alexandria. Here Chug White (my uncle Dr. Will White, afterwards of Abbeville), and myself hired a hack, which took us to Opelousas. While ou the boats I fell sick again, and for a iong time after I got home I was sick.

I'll never forget that homecoming. Oh, it was giorious! I borrowed Grandpa White's horse and buggy and drove to Prairie Gregg. When I got to the house I hallowed, "Hurrah for the Confederacy!" Every one jumped up and ran out of the house, and there was son and brother. Mamma was not there, but had gone over to a neighbor's, about a mile distant. I went to bed. Turning over to the window, I saw her coming. The pony seemingiy couid not travel fast enough. But she arrived at iast, came in and threw herself across my breast and burst out crying. "Well," I said, "if my coming home makes you cry, Mamma, I'd better stay away." She exclaimed, "No, no, I am weeping for joy, I am so giad to see you return. We heard you were killed on Mansfield battlefield."

I cured myself of dysentery with clabber. But oh, didn't I eat! I was so near starved that I ate so much that papa said, "Son, you are surely welcome to as much as you want, but you are liable to kill yourself." So I said: "Papa, I have no control over my appetite. You tell me when you think I have eaten enough and I'll quit."

OVER-INDULGENCE.

By Dr. Oscar Dowling, President, Louisiana State Board of Health.

The desire for ease and plentiful diet is common alike to both man and animal. When a man becomes greedy and takes more than his share of the good things of life, nature punishes him. In the race for power and ease, modern man has forgotten to acknowledge the rights of his body. His infractions of physical iaws will inevitably find their just reward.

With over-induigence comes a ioss in body tone, a decrease in mentai activity, a sluggishness of matter and mind that closely indicates disintegration and decay. Over-fed, under-exercised bodies do not respond to the demands of the instant with aiertness and strength of purpose. The excellent brain becomes ciouded, the steady hand inaccurate, the feariess eye dimmed, and the gaze uncertain. The final debacle is near at hand. Such a condition is eminently preventable.

It is the man or woman who lives the well balauced iife who gets the most out of himself or herself and who is of greatest service to fellow-men. You cannot eat your cake and have it, too, nor burn the proverbial candle at both ends without exhausting its lighting capacity quickly. Nor can the man who over-works, the "go getter" of busiiness iife, the sport who over-plays, the gourmand who over-eats and drinks, expect to live the allotted span. It is likely to be very brief and end at the most productive age, "for verily they shall have their reward."

The one who is moderate, who keeps to the "middle way," will, barring accidents and epidemics, achieve his goal with a long and useful life. Chances are overwhelmingly in favor of the individual who maintains a standard of a simple, healthful diet, and offsets mentai work with physicai exercise or recreation. When success comes to such a one he can enjoy in peace of mind and contentment the fruits of his labor. For "what profiteth a man that he gain the whole world and lose his health?"

The Home Circle.

A Boy's Hands.

Sometimes it's only shadows
When mother says it's dirt;
But I know it's only shadows,
'Cause I scrubbed them till they hurt.

I don't know where they come from.
My father says that he Sometimes used to have them
When he was small like me.

My mother never has them:
Her hands are always white;
But just 'cause boys are different.
To scold me isn't right.

Sometimes it's only sunburn;
Then dad and mother grin;
But I know it's only sunburn,
'Cause it's in, in, in.

"GREYFRIARS' BOBBY."

Among all the noble monuments that adorn the beautiful city of Edinburg there is one of modest preiensions that rivals in popularity, among children, the proudest of them all. It stands on George IV Bridge, and is dedicated to the memory of a faithful dog, called "Greyfriars' Bobby." In 1858 the owner of this little terrier was buried in the churchyard of Greyfriars, that historic spot where, 200 years before, the Scottish Covenanters had signed, many of them with blood drawn from their own veins, the famous Solemn League. For three days after the funeral, Bobby the chief mourner, disappeared. On the day following, a spectacle of woe and bunger, he entered Traill's restaurant where, with bis master, John Grey, he had been a regular mid-day visitor. On two successsive days, punctually at 1 o'clock, each day, when the loud gun booms out the hour from the historic castle, Bobby came for bis meal, which consisted of a bun and a bone. The interest of Mr. Traill having been aroused, be followed the dog to discover his whereabouts, and found that he had taken up his abode on tbe freshly-made grave. Frequent attempts to lure him away, and even to chain him up were unavailing, for piteous howls indicated that such methods were a mistaken kindness. For nine long years Bobby received his daily bounty, and became the favorite of friends at the restaurant, and of visitors in the churchyard. Then a tragedy almost happened. Mr. Traill and Bobby were summoned to the court, and in due course brought before the magistrate, Bobby for the crime of "vagrancy," and his benefactor for "harboring." If Mr. Traill must feed a masterless dog, the law enacted that he must pay the license, or the animal must be shot. Justice, however, was tempered with mercy, and both offenders were set free "with commendation." For five years more, the wonderful vigil was kept at the silent grave, interrupted only by the severity of weather, during which Bobby would creep under one of the flat tombstones. Then he, too, was laid to rest beside his master; and the spot, marked by a rose bush, is visited by numerous admirers. One of these was the Baroness Burdett-Courts, who was so impressed by such a fine example of fidelity that she erected a monument in the form of a drinking fountain, surmounted by an image of the dog, taken just before bis death. It bears the following inscription, which is read with pride by visitors from all parts of the world:

A Tribute to the affectionate fidelity of
"GREYFRIARS' BOBBY."

In 1858 this faithful dog followed the remains of his master to Greyfriars' Church, and lingered near the spot until his death in 1872.—The Presbyterian Messenger.

A WISE OLD HORSE.

Long, long ago, before there were any automobiles, all farmers owned horses. They had carriage horses and work horses and all sorts of horses. Sometimes when the faithful animals grew too old for hard work and could no longer plow or draw hay wagons, they were sold to cab drivers in the cities, which is a sad way for a farm horse to end his life.

But there was a farmer who loved one of his old horses so much that he wouldn't sell him when he grew too old for the hardest work. "Instead of doing that," he said, "I shall give good old Toby to Lucy for a pet." Then he laughed, because Lucy, his little girl, was only four years old. She was fond of pets and had a great number of them, but Toby was the biggest pet she had.

He already loved the little girl, for she went to the pasture fence and called, "Come, Toby, Toby, Toby!" and when he came galloping across the field, he was almost sure to find a lump of sugar in her hand. Then he would stand perfectly still while she climbed to the top of the fence and from there to his back.

After that when Lucy said, "Get up, Toby, get up!" Toby would give his bead a toss and go stepping along, stepping along, slowly and carefully, so that the little girl wouldn't fall off; and she, hanging tight to Toby's tough mane, rode on, smiling and happy. Toby also liked to have Lucy walk up to him and say: "Good old Toby, good old Toby." Then he would put his head down low so that she could pat his long nose and brush the flies away.

But one day Toby and the little girl had a sad accident. Lucy was taking her usual ride, and Toby was stepping along, stepping along, slowly and carefully, when something unusual happened.

It was a warm day, and Toby made up his mind that he wanted a drink of water; so he walked splash-splash, splash-splash into the creek and stood there for a minute in the cool water and looked up the creek and down the creek. Lucy began to brush back her curls, which the wind had blown into her face.

Then Toby bent his head to drink, and in doing so it made his neck into a steep hill, and he did it so suddenly that little Lucy, at the top of the steep, high hill, went slipping, sliding, slipping down the hill so fast that the next thing Toby knew his little friend had gone splash! into the deep water. It was a loud splash, too, enough to scare any horse.

The creek was deep, and Lucy could not swim, and would surely have drowned had not Toby been a wise horse. Before she could sink even once he bent his head and stretched out his long neck and picked the little girl up by fastening his teeth in her gingham dress. Then he walked fast, splash, splash, splash, splash, straight across the creek and up the bank on the other side, and there he dropped Lucy, soaked and scared, on the soft green grass.

The hired man saw what had happened, for he was away up on a big platform, oiling the windmill. Down the ladder he slid as fast as he could slide; and when he reached the ground, he ran over the little bridge across the creek as fast as he could run. Then he snatched up little Lucy and ran with her to her mother, although she was still dripping wet, she wasn't frightened but was laughing.

Toby came home at last over the bridge, stepping along, stepping along rather slowly as if he expected to be scolded perhaps and maybe wishing that he could say to the family: "Accidents will happen." But when he reached home, he was astonished. The family came to meet him. They petted him and fed him with sugar and patted his long nose and called him "Good old horse, good old Toby," just as if he was the most wonderful horse in the world. Lucy's mother put her arms around his neck and kissed him, the big brothers brushed his coat until it was as smooth as satin and combed his mane until it was soft and silky, and ever afterwards as long as he lived nothing was too good for him.—Exchange.

MOTHER CENTIPEDE GOES TO THE SHOE STORE.

"Where are you going, Mother Centipede?" asked the twelve Centipede children.

"I am going to the shoe store," their mother replied.

When she came to the shoe store, she said "What shall I do, Mr. Storekeeper? I have twelve little darlings, and each little darling has a hundred legs. How can I buy shoes and stockings for all of them when I have only a dollar?"

"Well, you might buy enough for just one child, Mrs. Centipede," answered the storekeeper.

"What! and hurt the feelings of all my other darlings?" exclaimed Mother Centipede. "No, indeed, that would never do!"

"Well, then, you might buy each child two shoes and two stockings, Mrs. Centipede," replied the storekeeper, smiling affably.

"What! and have my little darlings limping along with shoes and stockings on only two feet? No, indeed, Mr. Storekeeper, that would never do."

"Well, then, you might buy all of them stockings for all of their feet and let them do without shoes, Mrs. Centipede," said the storekeeper.

"What! and have a whole basket of stockings to darn the very first day?" cried Mother Centipede. "Stockings without shoes would soon be all holes. No, indeed, Mr. Storekeeper, that would never do! But thank you. I see I shall have to go home and put on my thinking cap."

On her way home she met Dr. Owl. "Please give me your kind advice, Dr. Owl," said Mother Centipede. "I have twelve little darlings, and each little darling has a hundred legs. How can I buy shoes and stockings for all of them for a dollar? If I buy just enough for one little darling, that will hurt the feelings of all my other little darlings; and if I buy each one shoes and stockings for two feet, that will make my darlings limp; and if I buy them all stockings for all their feet and let them do without shoes, the stockings will soon be nothing but holes, and I shall do nothing but darn stockings for my little darlings."

"Do your children go to Sunday school, Mrs. Centipede?" asked Dr. Owl.

"No, Dr. Owl," said Mother Centipede. "There is no Sunday school near enough."

"Well, then, do your children go to day school, Mrs. Centipede?" asked Dr. Owl.

"No, Dr. Owl," Mother Centipede replied. "It is summer time; there is no school now."

"Well, then, Mrs. Centipede," said Dr. Owl, "just let your children do without shoes and stockings. They do not need them in the warm weather, and it is much more sensible to spend the dollar on a picnic for the little darlings."

"Why, Dr. Owl!" cried Mother Centipede. "That is a fine plan. You are very wise. They do not need shoes and stockings, and I shall spend the dollar on a picnic for my little darlings. Thank you, wise Dr. Owl." And she went home.

The very next day Mother Centipede took all of her little darlings on a picnic, and every little darling liked it much better than it would have liked shoes and stockings.—Elsie Parrish, in Youth's Companion.

The ladder of life is full of splinters, but we never realize it until we begin to slide down.—King's Business.

A school girl was asked: "What did Henry VIII do to Anne Boleyn?"

The reply was surprising: "Please, teacher, he ironed on her."

The child repeated her statement. She was quite confident that Henry had caused Anne Boleyn to submit to this treatment. It fitted in with her idea of his character.

Chapter and verse were then demanded, and the child opened her history book and pointed triumphantly to the passage: "Henry pressed his suit on Anne Boleyn!"—Tit-Bits.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We express our thanks to Rev. J. D. Simpson, Byhalia, Miss., for two subscriptions recently sent in.

Rev. and Mrs. K. L. S. Cooke, Tyro, Miss., announce the birth of a son, John Leon, on June 16. Blessings upon the young man!

Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Porter, Port Gibson, Miss., announce the birth of a daughter, Julia Louise, on June 19. Blessings upon the little lady!

Dr. John M. Barcus, long an outstanding figure in Texas Methodism, died at a hospital in Fort Worth on June 12. He was 67 years old.

We thank Rev. J. M. Metcalf, pastor of the Scotland charge, Mississippi Conference, for three subscriptions recently sent in to the Advocate.

Rev. Luther Bridgers, of Georgia, recently assisted Rev. C. M. Crossley in a fine meeting at Columbia, Miss. Brother Bridgers was accompanied by his wife, who rendered splendid service in the meeting.

The Manufacturers Record quotes Henry Ford as saying: "Prohibition is a fine thing. I believe it will become world-wide. Alcohol destroys the brain cells and lowers a man's efficiency. I believe that industrial competition will force prohibition upon the whole world."

Miss Rebekah Lewis, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. B. W. Lewis, Homewood, Miss., was married to Mr. S. K. Williams, of Kosciusko, Miss., on June 16, at the home of the bride's parents, the father of the bride officiating. The Advocate extends all good wishes to the happy young couple.

The recent death of Mrs. Lutz, mother of Dr. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, removed another of the old line of Methodists in New Orleans. She had heard practically all the Methodist preachers who have labored in this city as far back as the time of Bishop Linus Parker.

At the third quarterly conference of the Ripley, Miss., church, held recently, the pastor, Rev. H. P. Lewis, reported that 80 per cent of the benevolences were already in hand in cash; and Mrs. Lawrence Clayton reported the superannuate quota paid in full and remitted to Dr. Todd, thus completing the five-year pledge from Ripley. Fine!

At the third quarterly conference of the Brandon charge, held at Pelahatchie, the presiding elder, Dr. J. L. Decell, preached such a timely sermon that the pastor, Dr. Rolfe Hunt, and the congregation requested him to publish it in the Advocate. We hope Dr. Decell will send us the manuscript.

Rev. L. M. Sharp, Georgetown, Miss., has our thanks for two renewal subscriptions to the Advocate, recently sent in. The work moves along well on the charge. Brother Sharp announces that Rev. J. O. Hanes, general evangelist, with his singer, Mr. H. M. Scott, will begin a meeting at Georgetown on July 22.

Evangelist Claude P. Jones has just closed a meeting with Rev. H. G. Roberts, at Flora, Miss. This is the thirteenth meeting Brother Jones has held this year. He goes next to Mize, Miss., with Rev. B. H. Williams. Pastors who may desire his services for fall dates can communicate with him at Hattiesburg, Miss.

A Daily Vacation Bible School will be held at Epworth Church, this city, beginning on Monday, June 25, and lasting several weeks. The school is especially for primary and junior children. The pastor, Rev. Guy M. Hicks, is acting as general superintendent of the school, assisted by a competent corps of instructors.

Dr. F. M. Freeman, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Texarkana, Ark., formely pastor of Parker Memorial, this city, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Tuesday of last week. He was in the city to officiate at the marriage of Miss Bessie Monroe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Monroe, to Mr. Edwin A. Ehaugh, on Tuesday evening.

Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference, has been fortunate to secure Rev. J. F. McClellan, of the Mississippi Conference, lately president of the Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose, Miss., to serve the Pine Grove charge until Conference. Brother McClellan will take charge of the work this week.

Good reports from each church were made at the recent third quarterly conference of the Nettleton charge, of which Rev. E. M. Shaw is pastor. The Carolina church reported a most excellent Sunday School Day program. The work moves along well in all departments. We thank Brother Shaw for four names added to the list of subscriptions recently secured.

The following telegram from Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, sent from Laurel, Miss., and dated June 22, will bring sorrow to many friends: "Mother died at Laurel, Miss., this afternoon, aged 78 years, 9 months. She had been ill about two weeks." Our heartfelt sympathy goes out to Brother Gunn and other members of the family in this great bereavement.

The twentieth session of the Seashore Divinity School, closing this week at Biloxi, Miss., has maintained the high standard of former years. The lectures of Dr. Leander S. Keyser have been interesting and thought-provoking. It has not yet been our privilege to hear Dr. Faulkner, of Drew, who is scheduled to occupy the platform this week. We expect a full report of the School from the secretary, Rev. H. M. Ellis.

The Advocate office was brightened on Monday morning of this week by a visit from Rev. W. W. Graves, of Columbia, Miss. Brother Graves was in the city for medical attention, another operation being deemed necessary, which he was to undergo Tuesday morning. He is hopeful that as a result of this operation he will soon be enjoying good health. His many friends will pray that it may be so.

Rev. Ira W. Flowers, a recent graduate of Emory University, Atlanta, has been appointed pastor at Oakdale, La., in place of Rev. H. W. Bowman, who was forced to give up the work on account of ill health. Brother Flowers has entered upon his work and has already won the esteem of his people. In this connection, we are glad to be able to report that Brother Bowman's condition is somewhat improved and he is now resting quietly at his home. The brethren will, we are sure, remember him in their prayers.

Professor J. B. Mitchell, Jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. J. B. Mitchell, of Rayne Memorial Church, this city, has recently been on a visit to his father and mother here. He will complete his work for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of Chicago this summer. He has been elected associate professor of biology in the University of Georgia, which position he will assume at the beginning of the fall term. Professor Mitchell is regarded as one of the most brilliant of the younger scientists of this country.

The following items from the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference, indicate the substantial progress being made in that part of the church: A new church building at Booneville, Rev. W. H. Mounger, pastor, to cost $75,000, is going up; a new church at Guntown, Rev. M. H. Weed, pastor, has been completed without any indebtedness; a new church at Wheeler, Rev. W. C. McKay, pastor, will be completed soon; a Sunday school annex at Kossuth, Rev. G. D. Burt, pastor, is nearly finished; a new church at Snow Down, on the Iuka circuit, Rev. E. P. Craddock, pastor, will soon be completed; two successful Standard Training Schools have been held, one at Corinth, and one at Ripley (now in session). Evidently the presiding elder, Rev. E. H. Cunningham, and the pastors of the Corinth District are busy men.

The Emory University Glee Club sailed on June 8 from New York for its second European tour. Before leaving Atlanta, a farewell concert was given which drew an audience of four thousand people, the night being designated by official proclamation of Mayor Ragsdale as "Emory Night." The club gave a recital in New York previous to sailing which drew the enthusiastic approval of the musical critics of that city. On July 5, the club will assist in the dedication of a memorial window to Lawrence Washington, great-great-grandfather of George Washington, in All Saints Parish Church, Maldon, England. It is a source of pride that our great university at Atlanta has developed a musical organization which has won world-wide renown. It is of special interest in this section that Lawrence Chaffee, of New Orleans, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Chaffee, active members of our First Church here, is one of the soloists of the club.

Rev. Jimmie Smith, who is one of our general evangelists and a member of the Mississippi Conference, with residence at Dallas, Tex., has enjoyed a busy and successful season in the evangelistic field since Jan. 1. He has conducted ten revivals during the first two quarters of the evangelistic year, with almost a thousand additions to our church, and half as many to other denominations. He is with our pastor at Cotton Valley, La., in a town-wide revival that is attracting unusual attention. The meetings are being held under his big tent, which has a seating capacity of 1,500 people, and capacity crowds are hearing him nightly. The big tent is being used for the first time at Cotton Valley, and is the third large tent Brother Smith has dedicated to the great work of evangelism during the last six years. The dedication service for this one was held on June 10. Brother Smith will go from Cottton Valley to Sulphur Springs Bible Conference, Sulphur Springs, Ark., where he will deliver the evening addresses for the Conference each evening at 8 o'clock.

FROM REV. H. E. CARTER.

Dear Dr. Carley: I am here with my mother, who is very sick. Her condition is very serious. I ask that you and all our friends remember her in your prayers, that if it is God's will she may be restored to health. She is 74 years old. Pray for us.

Yours in the Master's service,
H. E. CARTER.

HAVING EYES TO SEE.

A well-known nature-lover and writer on nature themes tells us a somewhat pathetic story of coming upon a magnificent view as he drove his car out from a stretch of woodland one lovely spring day, and stopping to feast his soul upon the sight, and being greeted by a resident of the district to whom he tried to express his pent-up emotions, only to get the crushing response that the resident had never been impressed with the sight and that it had meant nothing to him through all the years. It was the tragic case of a man who lived in a beautiful world and who never had eyes to see it, one to whom green fields and blue skies and trees and golden sunsets meant nothing.

It is, indeed, a tragedy when men and women have no sense that appreciates the wonderful beauty that is spread all over the great world of nature that lies about them. But, after all, is not such a lack only a type of another one that is still more serious and fatal? I heard the other day a man lamenting that he had not always appreciated at their full value the virtues of his friend who had gone; he felt he had been too keen to notice his faults and failings and not keen enough to see his great and outstanding virtues. It may turn out to be a real tragedy when this is done, when we shut our eyes to the goodness that is in the heart of our neighbor, or perhaps in the hearts of the boys and girls in our own homes—goodness that might be helped greatly if some friendly eye should look upon it and should understand, and goodness, too, that it might help us greatly both to see and to appreciate.

Much is being said these days about the wickedness that there is in the world, about the triumph of evil courses and the failure and disappointment of enterprises that seek ideal ends; but that is only one side of the picture, and it would be a terrible tragedy if any of us should, stupidly or willfully, fail to see that other side. There never were as many sincere, high-minded, honest-purposed people in the world as there are to-day; here and there all over the face of the earth high and holy purposes for the good of the race are being carried to fruition as they never have been before; kindness and brotherhood and goodness are growing in the earth as they have not grown since the dawn of civilization, and it would be a terrrible mistake if you and I had our eyes so filled with the sight of the evil and wrong and error that are all about us in the world that we could not see this great, broad, beautiful scene of human progress and the triumph of right over the wrong. Indeed, it would be a tragedy of tragedies if we did not see it.—The New Outlook.

THE FIRE OF JESUS.

Jesus Christ said: "I am come to send fire on earth." Christ has come, and he has not come for nothing. He has not lost faith in the great objects of his mission, to make us sons and daughters of the Father, and to bring in his kingdom in this world in a life that expresses service and unselfishness.

It is for us to come under and to keep under the spell and the power and the fire of his might.

There are often special reasons that attach us to the Christian church, such as old associations, cherished traditions, which have a vitality of their own not to be despised, which will not be quenched even by the drudgery of church work. But the pure motive that ought to be supreme in all our loyalty is sympathy with the ends of our Lord.

The deeper and more intelligent that sympathy is, the better we shall be able to bring to Christ that composed zeal which some one attributed once to John Wesley, that composed zeal that is not hectic, not spasmodic, but steady, because the fuel that catches fire from God is laid by hard thought and patient service. Otherwise, all Christian enthusiasm is apt to flicker out.

The same applies to our personal experience. In one of the great scenes of the "Pilgrim's Progress" Bunyan tells how Christian was taken on the heights of the neighborhood and shown a fire burning against the wall, and one standing by it always casting much water upon it to quench it, yet did the fire burn higher and hotter. Christian asked the meaning of this, and was told that the fire represents the work of grace. Then he was taken and shown at the back of the wall a man with a vessel of oil in his hand, of which he continually cast, but secretly, into the fire. And that is an interpretation of Christ, who with the oil of his grace maintains the work he began in the heart of man.

There are times when we are all tempted to say that there is nothing in the world or in our lives but the things of apathy, selfishness and so on, that threaten to quench the great fire of our religion. In the worries and hardships of life we are sometimes acutely sensible of how much there is that throws cold water upon our faith and our enthusiasm. But the fire is not left to itself. Many waters cannot quench that fire.

What Christ kindled is not left to itself. It is a care to himself, and there is always one who is behind the wall constantly and secretly, in ways often unknown to oursieves at the moment, maintaining the warmth of our devotion to him.

We need not be afraid of that. What we do need to be afraid of is losing touch with our Lord.

There are some people who in speaking about their personal religion are extremely concerned. There may be some here who feel that the glow of their personal faith and the fire that they once had in their hearts to the Lord is much less than it was. People wonder sometimes if, with the physical handicaps of life, the troubles that they have got to meet in the immediate future, there is any use keeping up the fire. They consult you, and sometimes you get the impression from them—as you often do from people who write about Christianity in our newspapers—you get the impression that Christianity is a little group of people on a moor, carefully kneeling around a little spark of fire, sheltering it from the high winds lest it be blown out.

Men and women, is that our Christianity? God forbid! We have a far deeper faith than that. Our personal religion is not some little contrivance of our own, for which we are responsible. It is a fire lit by the Lord Jesus Christ. Although you may see first and foremost what is throwing water upon it, the discouragements, the difficulties, remember there is one behind the wall, there is the unseen Lord who lit that fire, and who will not let it go out!

What you have to do is to maintain contact with Christ by prayer, by thoughtfulness, by attendance at the sacraments, by the hearing of the Word and the reading of the Word. If you do that, he who is behind the wall will constantly, but secretly, do for you what he has done for his people through all the ages, keep that fire burning. "The smoking flax he will not quench."—From an Address by the Rev. James Moffatt, D.D.

THREE DOORS.

Three doors there are in the temple
Where men go up to pray,
And they that wait at the outer gate
May enter by either way.

There are some that pray by asking;
They lie on the Master's breast,
And shunning the strife of the lower life,
They utter their cry for rest.

There are some that pray by seeking;
They doubt where their reason fails;
But their mind's despair is the ancient prayer
To touch the print of the nails.

There are some that pray by knocking;
They put their strength to the wheel,
For they have no time for thoughts sublime;
They can only act what they feel.

Father, give each his answer,
Each in his kindred way;
Adapt thy light to his form of night,
And grant him his needed day.

—William Watson.

MRS. IDA BAILY SHAW was born in the southern part of Marshall County, Miss., in March, 1862, near old Ebenezer church. Very early in girlhood she was converted to Christ and united with the Methodist church at Ebenezer, later moving her membership to Harris Chapel church, on the Waterford circuit, where she remained an active member until her death. Sister Shaw was blessed in childhood with Christian parentage. Being reared under this environment, she developed a life of true devotion to her church and was an inspiration to all with whom she was associated. In 1895 she was united in marriage to John Newton Shaw. To this union was born one son, Jessie Shaw, who resides in the Laws Hill community. On Mothers' Day, May 13, 1928, Sister Shaw fell asleep at her home adjoining Harris Chapel church. For some twelve months or more she had been affected with heart trouble, from which she never recovered. During the eighteen months that the writer knew Sister Shaw, her devout Christian life was an inspiration to him. She loved her Bible, and loved to hear it read. And the beautiful expressions that she gave as to its teachings would readily impress one that she had no fear of death, but looked upon it as a peaceful sleep, from which she would awaken into an eternal day. These profound truths she learned not only by her study of the Bible, but most of all by her sweet relation with the Great Spirit. Although the touch of mother's hand will be missed, the sound of her gentle voice hushed and her place vacant in her church, yet the message she has left is the message of a life that shall live on in the hearts and lives of those with whom she was associated. She leaves one son, two brothers, seven step-children, and many other relatives and friends to mourn her departure. Her funeral was conducted by her pastor, and interment was in Mount Moriah cemetery, beside her relatives who have gone on before her, "God gave, he took, he will restore. He doeth all things well."

LESTER M. JAMES.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN LAGRONE was born near Banner, in Calhoun County, Miss., on Dec. 16, 1872. He died on March 18, 1928, at Tupelo, Miss., and was buried at West Point, Miss., where he had lived for a number of years. He left to his widow, Mrs. Willie Smith Lagrone, and three children, Lucy Frances, Martha and William, Jr., the heritage of a life well spent and example of a strong, manly Christian character. He inherited many of the excellent qualities which were so evident in his father, Rev. W. S. Lagrone, who for fifty years was a leading Methodist preacher in North Mississippi Conference. He never drifted from the teaching of that parsonage home. There he was taught to be loyal to his church, and throughout his life he was right in the midst of all of the activities of the church, local, district, and Conference. At the time of his death, which occurred suddenly while seated in the hotel at Tupelo, he was serving on the board of stewards of the West Point church. During his whole life his religon colored his plans and purposes. He thought deeply on religious things and was well informed on all church matters. His opinions were well founded and he knew where he stood on every issue, moral and civil, and gave to all who needed the benefit of his counsel. The fifty-six years of life were not lived in vain. His friends, his church, his State miss him even now. The large Methodist church was crowded with people when the funeral was conducted by his pastor, assisted by Revs. R. A. Tucker, Carroll Varner, W. N. Duncan and E. S. Lewis.

W. R. LOTT, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, on the 7th day of May, 1928, God, in his wise providence, deemed it best to call our beloved friend and brother, JOHN SIDNEY OTIS, from his earthly labors to his heavenly home; and,

Whereas, our church, Sunday school and the community have suffered greatly in the loss of this influential, upright Christian gentleman and recall the many acts of virtue which he constantly displayed in his regular walk among us for a half a century; and,

Whereas, we deeply appreciate his service to his fellow-man, the church, the community and the country;

Therefore, be it resolved, That we extend to his wife and children our deepest sympathy in the loss of a devoted, loving husband and father; and,

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the minutes of the third quarterly conference and also the Sunday school minutes; that a copy be sent to the family of Brother Otis, and a copy be sent to the Christian Advocate for publication.

Respectfully submitted:

D. R. Weston, Sunday School Superintendent and Steward; Roy Baxter, Assistant Sunday School Superintendent.

A DAUGHTER'S LETTER TO HER MOTHER ON MOTHERS' DAY.

My Dear Mother and Father: As today is Mothers' Day I have especially been thinking of you. I cannot express in words the thankfulness and appreciation that I feel toward you, my own mother and father, for the rearing that you gave.

Those memories of happy childhood days are fresher in my mind than things that have passed only a few days ago. I can hardly realize yet that I have the responsibility of my own life. But as I know I have, and, more than that, I am a mother, I realize a greater responsibility. But in having the cares of motherhood and many trials and temptations of life, the influence of your life has meant so much to me. I can remember lots of words you spoke to me when I was a child, and of course they have been helpful to me; but the life that you lived before me has meant more to me than anything else I can tell you about. I feel that I have been blessed by having such a father and mother as you.

Our home was not a home of worldly luxuries, but a home that was richer than these, a home of love and peace, and a home where dear father and mother taught us children the way of salvation. I know we owe a lot to our mothers.

I feel, Mamma, as I speak these words to you, I owe a lot of honor to dear old papa, who has been as good a papa as a child ever had. We have been blessed with a father that lots of others do not have. It was mother and father who cared for us while we were sick and while we were not able to take care of ourselves. It was mother and father that worried over us when we were disobedient, but that loved us more than any one else on earth. As a child I was sometimes disobedient and caused you probably many heartaches. But to-day I am out away from your care. I want to live that I may not cause you any more worries as to the character of my life; and now that I am the mother of two children, I want to live the life before them that will be a great influence to them in the life to come.

Now that I have grown out of your care, and no longer have the privilege of being obedient as a child to you, I can be obedient to our Heavenly Father, who gives us the privilege of loving him.

I send you much love and many thanks this Mothers' Day for what you have done for me.

Your own child,

MRS. ALTA HEARN.

(Daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Jerry Fordham, Olla, La.)

A GOOD LETTER FROM VINTON, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: I do not feel that I would be intruding to ask a small space in your appreciated paper, as I only ask this favor about once a year. I do this to let you know that we are not all resting at ease in Zion.

We had a change in our preachers this year. Brother Walton came to us a stranger, but I am sure he does not feel so now. He took hold of the work as if it was no new thing for him to do, and is moving on nicely. We organized a men's Bible class that seems to be appreciated. We have a good Sunday school, conducted by Brother Zatta. We have quite a lot of promising young people in the school, also a good Epworth League and a fine, up-to-date Missionary Society, doing a fine work.

The women have just finished a nice parsonage, and are now going to repair the church building. Of course, they get some help in the buildings, but they are the moving force in the work. Their motto is, "Never wait for the other fellow." I often wonder how we could get along without them.

Vinton is a growing town, and religion must grow with it. We have three oil fields in reach of us, and fine rice fields. Some of the oil men have built nice homes here and this means they have come to stay, and have put their children at school and attend churches. We have good hotels, good merchants, a strong bank, several good garages, a fine high school, conducted by Prof. Norton, and fine teachers. All we need now is more old-time religion, and we are praying for that.

My eighty-second birthday is a thing of the past. The good ladies called on me as usual, with some nice presents; a few hymns were sung, and prayer was offered; then good-bye came, wishing the old man many more happy birthdays.

May God bless you.

R. M. DAVIS.

DEAR REPORTERS.

In giving you the new address, that of Mrs. W. M. Williams, Magee, Miss., who has just been elected to this office, may I thank you most warmly for this year of happy co-operation and ask you for a continuance of your interest and prayers.

A WORD FROM THE RETIRING EDITOR.

Mine was the great honor, one year ago at the mid-year ex-meetiug, to receive appointment as your Editor; throughout these weeks I have been most happy to serve you and to do whatever I could toward making our page attractive and worth-while.

I have grown to love the work deeply and to see its multiple possibilities. Really, I am just now heginning to get connected lines over the Conferences, and to form something like a satisfactory "home-base," so it is a keen disappointment and sorrow to me to have to give it up. But I feel sure that you will rally quickly to Mrs. Williams, our new officer, and we will not even feel any jar of change.

My great desire is, that all with one accord, we may make sure that each report shall house an inspirational thought, that each page couch a message of uplift, and that each week prove a stepping stone into that greater future just ahead; and, pressing forward to a richer to-morrow, remembering with Emerson that "nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm," may we keep our page vital, teeming with great varities of constancy, "the secret of success;" hope, "of all ills that men endure;" "the only universal cure;" faith, "girt with golden wings," and truth, who holds in her palm "the eternal years of God."

PATRIOTS IN CHINA.

"The Chinese nationalists consider themselves just the same sort of patriots as the American nationalists considered themselves in the days of the Revolutionary War when they were fighting against overwhelming odds to establish the independence of their country," declares Dr. W. B. Nance, former president of Soochow University, now in the States on furlough. "And just as the American patriots believed that they would finally win out even in those days when Washington was being villified and the Continental Congress was trying to set him aside, so the patriots in China to-day believe they will finally succeed in establishiug a stable government in China, in spite of present handicaps and hindrances."

Dr. Nance has been a missiouary in China under the Board of Missions of the Southern Methodist Church for thirty-three years and has heen connected with Soochow University since the organization of that institution in 1901. In 1914 he became vice president of the school, and was elected president in 1922, which office he held until the spring of 1927, when he resigned to give place to the new day in Chinese leadership. Since that time Dr. Nance has served as "Western adviser" of the institution. Just prior to his departure from China a few weeks ago, Dr. Nance was one of the guests of honor at a hirthday celebration given hy the alumni of Soochow University to three men who had heen long connected with the university and had had much to do with building it up to its present success. In addition to Dr. Nance the other guests of honor were Dr. J. W. Cilne, a former president, and Prof. Joseph Whiteside, head of the department of English.

"The nationalists under the Kuomintang insist that they must capture Peking," says Dr. Nance, "for whoever is in charge there will inherit the recognition foreign governments gave the Chinese republic after the revolution of 1911-12. In spite of the fact that they control all of the country south of the Yanstze river and much of the territory north of it, they have not heen recognized hy any nation as a government, and without this recogniticu they canuot demand any revision of treaties. Therefore, they will not consider any truce with the northern militarists, which would permit each to control his own section of the country."

Dr. Nance refused to prophecy as to the prospects for a stahle government in China. When he left China early in March everything was quiet, but just how long this quiet might last he declined to conjecture. One of the chief difficulties facing the nationalists today, he declared, is that Chang Tso Ling, the northern militarist, is backed up by Japan, to whom he has granted wide concessions in Manchuria in return for their military assistance. The nationalists are also handicapped at present by their break with the Soviet government in Russia, as they formerly obtained supplies, munitions of war, and expert drillmasters from this country.

"Yet in spite of these handicaps and in spite of dissensions in their own ranks, caused by personal ambitions and jealousies, which manifest themselves from time to time, the nationalists look upon themselves as patriots called to defend their country from foreign oppression, and believe that in the end they will win out," Dr. Nance declared.

A GREAT SPIRITUAL YEAR.

"It looks as if the year 1928 would he the greatest spiritual year we have ever known among the Mexicans in the United States," declares Rev. F. S. Onderdonk, superintendent of the Texas-Mexican Mission. "In all my ministry of thirty years among the Mexicans I have never known anything like it," Dr. Onderdonk adds.

Early in April Dr. Onderdonk hegan a meeting among the Mexicans at Mission, Tex., as a result of which he baptized and received into the church sixty-four souls. Following the meeting at Mission he held services at Pharr, Tex., and on the very first night the church was crowded beyond capacity, and many of the children had to sit on the steps of the platform. Many of those in the audience were students from Valley Institute, the Methodist mission school for Mexican girls. At the very first call the people came to the altar three deep, and many were converted.

"Everywhere the revivals are continuing with unabated power," says Dr. Onderdonk. "The year 1928 bids fair to become known in history as the greatest spiritual year ever known among our Mexican brethren."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Four months and we shall gather at Pontotoc to make reports of the work for the year. Much can be done during the remaining months. Some things were put off for a later date, and they are still undone. Reference is made to the observance of Sunday School Day. About twenty-five schools have observed the day and have reported. What about three hundred other schools? There is no board in the Conference that is doing more to help build the kingdom of God than your Sunday School Board. We are having urgent calls from needy places that we cannot answer because we do not have the money to pay the expenses of those who have prepared themselves for the work. Is there any way to get rid wholly of the results of the sin of neglect? The remedy for a thousand ills in the country church is a leadership trained to teach the rising generation the way of Christian living.

The Workers' Council, a monthly magazine published for the Sunday school officers and teachers, is one of the most helpful periodicals sent out by any church. If your school does not receive this magazine, send for sample copies and see for yourself that is what the teachers need. Another periodical that is indispensable to the teachers of beginners, primaries, and juniors is the Elementary Teacher. Send for copies of this magazine and give it a trial.

What are you doing for the children in the towns that are running loose, with no one to guide them in their play? The Daily Vacation Church School is intended to help these children keep clean and happy. The children do not get more than forty hours of instruction in the Sunday school during the year. A school conducted for three weeks, four hours a day, would afford sixty hours of instruction. The children need it; they will like it; they will suffer for lack of it.

The Standard Training School being help at Houston is distinguished by the number of young girls in attendance who have never been in a training school before. Rev. W. N. Dodds, pastor; Mr. C. R. Justice, superintendent; Mrs. Fred Dulaney, and others have worked hard for several weeks to secure a large attendance. Rains, sickness, deaths have hindered in the work. We are doing the work for those who attend and we know that "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." The fight against the world, the flesh, the devil, and spiritual illiteracy is to continue indefinitely. We are assured of "all power in heaven and in earth." We can afford to go on in the confidence that some day we will triumph.

The morning paper chronicles the death of Rev. John A. Randolph, a member of our Sunday School Board. He was a really great, good man. We shall miss his wise counsels, his mature judgment. He has fought a good fight, he has kept the faith and will receive his crown. We shall meet again.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

At the time of this letter we are in the midst of the first session of the Pastors' School. The enrollment of the Pastors' School is small, but the work being done is of a high order. The instructors have given universal satisfaction. It is hoped that this first effort will be the forerunner of larger and better schools. We are having many visitors who come for a short stay and pass on. We will in all probability have many more who will drop in for a time and get a taste of the work. From all indications the undergraduate groups are up to the years agone. The public platform ministry of Dr. Keyser is being well received, and he is giving satisfaction in a most marked degree.

The reports of the Cokesbury classes are beginning ot come in. It is very gratifying, the interest taken by the superintendents in this work. Our teachers are geting a fine reception, and they are doing, so far as can be gathered, a fine, outstanding piece of work.

Several of the places did not send in an offering of $3, or a collection. If each church that has a Cokesbury School will do this, it will enable us to hold at least four other schools we would not otherwise have the opportunity of holding. At the same time please do not think you are in any way compelled to do this.

We are hoping and praying that each and every Sunday school in the Conference will put on a program of missionary education that will make each Methodist Sunday school pupil thoroughly missionary. It is not to our credit that we have to put on campaigns to get the money to do our missionary work. We ought to grow an intelligent membership that would joyously assume its responsiblity to the saving of the entire world. The missionary programs will aid; but, greater than that, we will need to emphasize the missionary teachings in the regular sessions. Our people must be taught that missions is a part of the mian stream and not a side issue. If each teacher could only realize the importance of showing the missionary implications of each lesson as taught in the Sunday school, it would bring a new day with us. Missions must become a part of the regular work of the ordinary church and its organizations.

We are anxious to do more for our Sunday schools than ever. We are anxious to hear from you as to how we may do this. We are hoping that the "D" Type Program of Work will be released for use by this fall, to say the least. This is a vital need.

You on your part can help us by holding the Sunday School Day and giving a substantial offering to the cause.

Pray for the workers and the work,

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. J. W. Lee, pastor at Homer, and Educational Director of the recent Homer-Haynesville Training School, writes: "We had, all in all, a great school, if the date was not propitious." Records of this school show an enrollment of sixty-five; issued sixty-one credits.

The class on "Program of Christian Religion," taught by Dr. Drake, issued eighteen credits; "Princples of Teaching," by Mrs. R. E. Smith, eighteen credits; "Intermediate-Senior Agencies," by Rev. H. L. Johns, thirteen credits, and "Junior Administration," by Mrs. R. H. Harper, twelve credits. The pastors and superintendents at each place, Rev. J. W. Lee, Rev. H. M. Johnson, Mr. E. E. Gill and Mr. T. W. Camp, took credit in this school. Wherever the leaders lead, the teachers follow.

Saturday morning, June 16, found me en route to Mansfield by auto, accompanied by my family and office secretary, to visit the Epworth League Assembly. We were delighted with the attendance and interest we found at this great Assembly. Saturday night we heard the oratorical contest on "Know Missions."

Sunday morning we reached Logansport in time to attend the Sunday School Day program, and preach at the 11 o'clock hour. The attendance at Sunday school in this beautiful little village on the Sabine River, which divides Texas and Louisiana, was 173. Mr. Chesley Price, in whose home we enjoyed noon hospitality, is superintendent of this progressive Sunday school.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY.

The North Mississippi Conference Epworth League opened its twentieth annual Summer Assembly, June 11, 1928, at Grenada College, Grenada, Miss., with 184 registered delegates participating.

Under the leadership of President W. C. Newman and his assistants, work in every department was highly successful. Class-room work, under the direction of a group of consecrated and efficient teachers, was very proficient, practically every delegate receiving credit.

The Assembly was very fortunate in having among its teachers Miss Julia Wasson, who has spent some years on the mission field in China. Association with her filled us with a desire to walk more closely with the Master. Rev. E. O. Harbin, in the classroom, on the playground, and in his platform addresses, endeared himself to every Leaguer. He made it plain that it is possible to take Jesus into our social and business world as well as into our spiritual life.

For fun and a jolly good time, this Assembly couldn't be beat. Each Leaguer had plenty of pep. Yells, songs, and stunts filled their rightful place on the program.

The closing date, Friday, June 15, found a group of young people declaring this the best Assemly ever, and, because of their fellowship with each other and the renewing of their spiritual vision, more determined to uphold the banner "All for Christ" as they go forward under the leadership of Jesus Christ.

AN EPWORTH LEAGUE PILGRIMAGE.

The Epworth League Pilgrimage, which was conducted last July to Trinity Methodist Church at Los Angeles, Calif., was such a success that it has been decided to make the trip again this year.

The Epworth Leaguers and their friends will meet together at various assembling points on Saturday, Aug. 18. The Louisiana delegates will join the party from the Eastern States in Dallas on Aug. 18.

The trip will be made by way of Denver, through to San Francisco, then to Los Angeles, and return by way of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

The Pilgrimage will include sight-seeing trips at Pike's Peak, Colorado Springs, Denver, Salt Lake City, Lake Tahoe, Berkeley, Oakland, San Francisco, Chinatown, Los Angeles, Venice, Hollywood, the Apache Trail trip through the Roosevelt Memorial Dam in Arizona, El Paso, Juarez, San Antonio, Fort Worth, and Dallas. Special arrangements have been made for private cars and sight-seeing buses in the main cities for this group.

For an illustrated folder giving the information of rates, routes, etc., those persons desiring to go should write to Rev. J. D. F. Williams, First Methodist Church, Fort Worth, Tex., or to Miss Elizabeth Langford, Box 260, Alexandria, La.

You probably feel like a lot of other people that about all you can do is dust some powder in your shoes or give your feet a special foot bath and let it go at that, but don't be foolish. Make up your mind to-day that you are going to give your feet a real chance to get well.

Go to any good druggist to-day and get an original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil.

The very first application will give you relief and a few short treatments will thoroughly convince you that by sticking faithfully to it for a short while your foot troubles will be a thing of the past.

FROM SHUFORD, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I have just read Brother Ben. P. Jaco's letter of June 14, relative to his birthplace, See's Chapel.

It was my good fortune to be pastor of that noble band of workers at See's Chapel, 1926 and 1927; and may I say to Brother Jaco the good work he mentions is still carried on.

The laymen he mentioned are not there any more, but they left footprints there, and their memory still lives; and there are S. M. Nelson, Ben Nelson, V. Y. Burford, G. W. Coleman, T. M. Wright, Bud Vanderburg, N. A. Morris, that take charge of the experience meetings, and if the pastor does not show up the good work goes right on.

There is Mrs. T. B. Nelson, Mrs. Ruby Nelson, Mrs. G. W. Coleman, Mrs. V. Y. Burford, Mrs. Jewell Burford, Mrs. Herbert Nelson, Mrs. Tom Wright, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. May Morris, and Mrs. R. P. Nelson. A finer band of Christian workers are not found in the North Mississippi Conference.

In the little church known as "See's Chapel" you'll find a larger per cent of adult members in Sunday school every Sunday, I suspect, than any church in our Conference—and the church is not on a graveled road.

I want to join Brother Jaco in saying, Mr. Editor, the next time you get that close to See's Chapel, visit them. They have the true spirit of old-time Methodism.

But I was about to forget that I am on Shuford charge, where Brother Jaco has many warm friends who are continually asking about him. I am sure that he recalls every church on Shuford charge, and we will be glad to have you come and visit this little historic charge.

It was here at Shuford that the good women of our Conference placed a field worker for full time for about four or five years, to make Shuford a "model" circuit.

My wife used to tell me and others that she had a "model" husband, and so one day I got down the dictionary and looked up the word "model," which meant "a small imitation of the real thing." Since then I have objected to being a model anything. But at any rate, Mr. Editor, I believe that both the circuit and myself are going to get over this model sort of business and get down to something worth while.

A. C. JOHNSON, P. C.

The present enrollment of 179 in Textile Industrial Institute, Spartanburg, S. C., is the largest in the history of the institution, the number having increased from 78 to 179 in the past three years. This school is a unique piece of home mission work; operated under the auspices of the Home Department of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Here American-born and bred men and women and boys and girls can earn a living and an education at the same time by working part time in the neighboring mills and going to school part time.

Seventeen years ago Methodist missionaries were stoned out of the town of Cunha, in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Two years ago work was begun there again, and when services are held there today not only is the building full, but more people stand outside to listen than can get into the house.

Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby
—Babies Have Nerves—
By RUTH BRITTAIN

Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

HEADACHE.

By Dr. Oscar Dowling, President, Louisiana State Board of Health.

There are twenty or more classes of disease that may cause a headache. In fact, headache is most frequently the symptom of some disturbance elsewhere, and the pain is caused by irritation of sensitive nerve fibers either in the covering of the bone, in branches of one of the large sensitive nerve trunks that supply the face, or it may emanate from pressure on the dura, the skin that covers the brain.

It is stated that the brain substance is devoid of sensation, and that all pain must come from the outside through the nerve fibers. This is substantiated by the relief afforded when an operation on the skull gives room for expansion of a brain in which a tumor is growing.

The cause of a headache is often difficult to determine and sometimes impossible. If careful enough examination is made, usually one of the following troubles will be found to be the true cause: Neuralgia, ocular defects, constipation, epilepsy, neurasthenia and hysteria, arteriosclerosis with high blood pressure, nephritis, anemia or lack of hemoglobin, inflammatory changes in the nose, at the roots of the teeth or in the sinuses, syphilis, meningitis, encephalitis, brain tumor. The typical attacks of sick headache produce characterstic symptoms that stand out as a special disease, though often grouped as a form of epilepsy; nor must disturbances in that minute but extremely important gland, the pituitary, situated at the base of the brain, be forgotten. We should not fail to include headaches resulting from infections and dietetic indiscretions, which presumably disturb the balauce in the blood supply to the head.

This does not exhaust the list, but the few causes mentioned are enough to show how far from being a simple matter a headache may be. Fortunately, relatively few forms of the severe type occur. What we usually experience is due in the overwhelming majority of instances to eye strain, nervous tension that disturbs vasomotor equilibrium, digestive disturbances, including constipation and "biliousness," or perhaps a temporary toxemia from organisms propagating in the tonsils, pharynx and nose.

These are the troubles so easily influenced by the salicylates, and aspirin is espcially popular and effective. This useful substance suppresses pain, brings about a redistribution of blood, causes a dilation of the skin vessels, stimulates skin excretion, and perhaps also acts as a diuretic. In combination with a mild purge and rest, the best results can be expected, and they are likely to be permanent. Aspiring fails completely when the trouble lies deeper and when its pharmocologic action is without influence on the primary disease.

HYSTERICAL

South Carolina Lady Tried Cardui and Says She Noticed Remarkable Improvement.

Anderson, S. C.—"I suffered a long long time, before I tried Cardui, and my only regret is that I did not know about it sooner," says Mrs. Lillie Pruitt, 130 "K" Street, this city.

"I was badly run down in health. My nerves 'went to pieces', and I had to go to bed. I was not able to do my house work for many months. I got so bad off, I could not bear to have anybody walk across the floor of my room. The least little thing upset me. Sometimes I became hysterical. I had bad pains in my back and sides, and my head and limbs would take spells of aching, which almost set me wild.

"One day I was reading and I saw where a woman, who had a trouble like my own, had been relieved by Cardui. I decided at once to try it; so I began on a course of the 'Home Treatment'.

"It began to help me from the very first. I took Cardui regularly, for several months, and my improvement was so remarkable, that my family and friends were delighted. 'Cardui has no equal, in my opinion. I gladly recommend it to others."

Doctor Found Women and Children Sick More Often than Men

As a family doctor at Monticello, Illinois, the whole human body, not any small part of it, was Dr. Caldwell's practice. More than half his "calls" were on women, children and babies. They are the ones most often sick. But their illnesses were usually of a minor nature—colds, fevers, headaches, biliousness—and all of them required first a thorough evacuation. They were constipated.

In the course of Dr. Caldwell's 47 years' practice (he was graduated from Rush Medical College back in 1875), he found a good deal of success in such cases with a prescription of his own containing simple laxative herbs with pepsin. In 1892 he decided to use this formula in the manufacture of a medicine to be known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and in that year his prescription was first placed on the market.

The preparation immediately had as great a success in the drug stores as it previously had in Dr. Caldwell's private practice. Now, the third generation is using it. Mothers are giving it to their children who were given it by their mothers. Every second of the working day someone somewhere is going into a drug store to buy it. Millions of bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin are being used a year.

Its great success is based on merit, on repeated buying, on one satisfied user telling another. There are thousands of homes in this country that are never without a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and we have gotten many hundreds of letters from grateful people telling us that it helped them when everything else failed.

While women, children and elderly people are especially benefited by Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, it is promptly effective on the most robust constitution and in the most obstinate cases. It is mild and gentle in its action and does not cause griping and strain. Containing neither opiates nor narcotics, it is safe for the tiniest baby. Children like it and take it willingly.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Tuesday, June 19, we spent in Oakdale and Lake Charles. At Oakdale at 10 a. m., we were in a missionary rally, at which Brother Kim gave the message. At this rally were representatives from Glenmora and Hineston. Among the Hineston visitors was Miss Maxine Terry, Sub-District Leader of Sunday School Work, who is planning a Sunday School Rally for the fifth Sunday in Juiy.

At Oakdale we found the new pastor, Brother Flowers, recent graduate of Emory University, in charge. He has made a fine impression on the entire community.

We arrived at Lake Charles in time to enjoy the noon luncheon at the church, prepared for a zone meeting of the Missionary Society. This zone meeting, on account of its large attendance, reminded me of a district conference.

We had a satisfactory conference with the Dean, Dr. R. H. Wynn, and Educational Director, Miss Pauline Wynn, of the Camp Conference School to be held at Lake Arthur, Aug. 7-17 In addition to these leaders, Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder; Mr. A M. Mayo, district secretary, and Rev A. K. McLelian, Extension Secretary, were in our group.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

BEAUTY SPOTS.

In making the trip from New Orleans to Biloxi one day last week, we passed through great stretches of marsh grass, which, over large areas, was brown and dead-looking. There was nothing before our eyes but the monotonous expanse of withered grass. Yet, now and then, we would catch a glimpse from the car window of a little lagoon or a small patch of open water literally covered by water lilies in full bloom. These were veritable beauty spots in the midst of an apparent wilderness.

So it is, we mused, in life. Sometimes it seems that our way lies altogether through desolate wastes. We lift our eyes and look even to the distant horizon—and all we can see is the never-ending stretch of the monotonous path through dreary wastes. But as we continue the journey, here and there we come upon scenes and experiences that charm our eyes and cheer our spirits, putting a song in our hearts and sending us on with lighter steps and a more vibrant hope. Maybe one of these experiences was a hearty handclasp and a fervent "God bless you!" from a friend. Thank God for the beauty spots along life's way.

THE POLITICAL CONVENTIONS.

An observer of the proceedings of our national political conventions finds very little ground for hope—if the reports in the daily press are to be believed—that our national affairs are to be conducted by men who "see things sanely and see them whole." There is no great comfort in reading that delegates have to be kept quiet by policemen, that supporters of rival candidates try to take by force the standards and banners of other State delegations, and that the assumption seems to be that the crowd that can make the biggest noise and keep it up the longest is unquestionably the one that has the support of the people at large. Some of the actions at the recent conventions suggest that they were performed by rather small children of the under-privileged classes. We take no great pride in the way these conventions are conducted.

Of course everybody knows that the Republican convention nominated Hoover and Curtis for the presidency and vice presidency, respectively, of the nation, and that the Democratic convention nominated Smith and Robinson. The nominations for the presidency were made on the first ballot, which is an unusual thing.

Greatest popular interest centered in the pronouncement of the platforms concerning prohibition and, of course, the candidates to be chosen. The Republican platform is generally taken to be dry, and the candidates are considered dry supporters; the Democratic convention adopted a plank pledging a sincere effort to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment and legislation connected therewith; the presidential nominee, a pronounced wet, accepted the platform, but, after his nomination, called attention to his well known position and stated that he considered it his duty "to point the way to a sane, sensible solution" of the situation; the vice presidential nominee is understood to be a "bone-dry." In popular understanding, the wet and dry issue is clearly drawn between the rival parties, the Republicans representing the drys and the Democrats the wet. Of course there are other important issues involved.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate, not being a political organ, will not engage in the political campaign that the country now enters upon. Thousands of devout Christians and loyal Methodists will be found supporting both parties. The nature of the issues involved will doubtless cause a shifting of votes from one party to another such as has not, perhaps, been seen in any previous campaign. Both parties will gain and lose adherents because of these issues. The church will—it ought to, anyway—continue its work of establishing, extending, and maintaining the kingdom of God on earth without violating in its activities the principle of separation of church and State, which is one of the basal principles of Protestant Christianity. At last, the individual has to test his own actions by the professions he makes.

A RETIRING AGE FOR BISHOPS.

Doubtless many of our readers saw the article in the Nashville Christian Advocate of June 22, by Bishop John M. Moore, on, "Four Things I Liked." Among the four things he saw at the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Kansas City that appealed to him, he comments somewhat at length upon the provision for retiring bishops at the age of seventy. In connection with this subject, he says:

"They superannuate their bishops at a fixed retiring age and save them from humiliation that would come from discussing their infirmities of body or mind. Every bishop knows on the day of his election just when he will take out, and he prepares himself and his affairs for that event. Of course ill health may come upon him, and he may retire because of that, but the question of general superannuation is solved. * * * During my thirty years of attendance upon our General Conferences most of the retirements of our bishops have been accompanied by distress and heartaches upon the part of these bishops and their friends. A few times some the members of the Committee on Episcopacy have been accused of voting to retire a bishop in order to create a desired vacancy. Under our system the infirmities of age frequently have to be strenuously and distressingly exposed in order to bring about even a just superannuation. * * * I say frankly that I would welcome the establishment by the General Conference of a retiring age for our bishops."

Taking into consideration the inevitable burdens of the episcopal office and the almost inevitable infirmities of threescore years and ten, we agree heartily with Bishop Moore in the position that the next General Conference would do well to fix a retiring age for our bishops.

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL AND THE PASTORS' SCHOOL.

The Seashore Divinity School and the Mississippi Conference Pastors' School closed their sessions at the Seashore Camp Ground on Friday evening of last week. While these schools were held at the same time and place, they were not related to each other. We were not privileged to attend any of the classes of the Pastors' School, but we heard many fine things of the work done by Dr. R. E. Smith, Dr. W. G. Henry, Dr. G. F. Winfield, Rev. John C. Chambers, Dr. J. L. Jerdine, and others connected with the work. Rev. J. T. Leggett, director of the School, had everything in good working order.

Being a member of the board of directors of the Seashore Divinity School, we came a little more directly into contact with its work. This was the twentieth session of this School, and it was one of the best sessions held thus far. There was a considerable number of undergraduates from four Conferences taking their courses of study under competent and skilled instructors, and a good attendance of others who took advantage of the opportunity to hear the lectures by Dr. Keyser and Dr. Faulkner. The weather was delightful and the occasion was one of great pleasure as well as profit.

We believe there is a distinct need and place for the Seashore Divinity School in the work of the church. It is not just a preachers' institute, but a well established institution that for twenty years has done the finest kind of work in helping our young ministers to complete their courses of study under the personal direction of competent teachers and with the inspiration that comes from personal association in the class room. It is well supported and well attended; and is making a definite contribution to the efficiency of those who attend its sessions from year to year. Under the presidency of Rev. J. T. Leggett, the School is maintaining its high record of successful work.

The North Mississippi Conference voted cooperation in the School last year and appointed as its representatives on the board of directors the following: Rev. Carroll Varner, Rev. A. Y. Brown, and Rev. W. W. Mitchell. Brother Mitchell was unable to be present this year, but Brothers Varner and Brown were in their places. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Rev. J. T. Leggett, president; Rev. C. C. Miller, vice president; Rev. H. M. Ellis, secretary and publicity director; Rev. A. Y. Brown, treasurer; Dr. R. H. Harper, dean. The next session will be held June 11-25, 1929.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

To tax or not to tax; just how much, when and in what way, manner or form, aye that's the question! Tariffs, revenues, excises, many are the names under which these charges on the people come, and all are unwelcome guests. Roads, schools, levees, pensions, State, Federal and municipal improvements, asylums, hospitals, prisons, reformatories, must be built and maintained. A new industry or discovery of mineral wealth, instead of lightening taxation, increases it. The great army of public officials also increase, for every new industry demands or secures new officers. Then there are boards, commissions, divers and many, all, I presume, pro bono publico, and several mills are added to the tax list. One mill is not much, but many mills make a muckle, and they grind.

At the capital, they fight, and fuss and fume about it all, while the legislative mills grind grist of new plans and strange devices for revenue only, according to the time-honored principle of democracy.

When the collectors claimed a personal tax from our Lord, he told his overseer to go fishing and pay it for both. That is what peaceable citizens do, just attend to their daily business—Peter's was fishing—and meet the obligation. In those days governmental authority came from above, was handed down; with us it supposedly rises from beneath the masses, and at least we have the privilege of saying something about it all, without incurring the crime of lese majesty, and having our heads cut off, though our incomes do suffer, for they are cut somewhat.

Well, it requires some cerebration, and undue excitation of the brain cells to draw a moral from all this; only I will say in passing patient service will in the end bring its reward, especially if this service is tempered with a goodly share of common sense and a manly, independent, loyal love for fair play and just dealing in church and State.

* * *

This brings on more brain exercise. Training for leadership is the cry bruited abroad in our church papers. "Let him that is greatest among us be your servant." Our Lord did not have much to say about leadership, but had many lessons concerning service. Train our youth for service and the leadership will take care of itself. In fact, service, by precept and example, in the ranks or at the head is Christlike. The places on the right and left in the kingdom are not as soft and easy seats as some may imagine; besides that, they are the gift of God to those who are worthy. "Ich dien"—"I serve"—is a worthier and loftier motto to bear in any battle than "I rule." A kind of obsession prevails among us, at times, demonstrated by a phrase or term, and away goes the body ecclesiastic, like a steed with an empty saddle covering space and carrying little. After all, you cannot train a man for leadership, for real leaders in all departments of human activity come up from the ranks. When the French called Napoleon "The Little Corporal," they recognized this principle. Sometimes at our feasts, public or private, I am placed at the head of the table, owing probably to age; but I notice the food is just as good on the side lines. I am quite sure this is true at the feasts of spiritual joys and rewards which our gracious Lord spreads for his guests. In fact, they are all knights of the round table.

May my muse, who sometime would sing in lowly service free,

Lead me, Lord, that I may others lead,
To Thee.
Teach me that I may also teach
For Thee.
And so in service seek my daily bread
Of Thee.
And with thy presence, thy ransomed reach
In Thee.

"A BETTER FINANCIAL SYSTEM."

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

The editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate and I so seldom agree that for once it gives me a vast deal of pleasure to express unreservedly my perfect agreement, unqualified approval and endorsement of his most excellent editorial in the Advocate of June 21, under the above caption.

The editorial referred to is so nearly in accord with the things that for some months I have been thinking and trying to formulate that I feel like I want to hand the editor a fragrant bouquet of the beautiful flowers which have been growing and blooming in my parsonage yard this spring and summer.

The editor is right when he says that a better financial system is needed, and he is right again when he states that there is a general dissatisfaction with the present system. How widespread this general dissatisfaction is among both laity and the ministry, is distressingly known by the pastors who are next to the people; but this disturbing fact does not seem to have penetrated the consciousness of our church leaders and all those in authority. They do not seem to be aware of the deep, strong undercurrent of dissatisfaction, growing, becoming more insistent month by month, and which is, sooner or later, going to find its way to the surface in an unmistakable manner to the astonishment of those responsible for these financial campaigns which the pastors, through pressure from above, have been under the necessity of presenting to the people or lose prestige.

After stating that "we are trying to raise money in too many ways," the editor proceeds to enumerate the various causes which the pastor is expected to present and to which the people are expected to give. Let us take the experience of this year as an example. Immediately following the Conference session, in common with all other pastors, I had to attend various gatherings at different points where I was supposed to be "cultivated" myself by those in authority and then, returning to my charge, I was expected to "cultivate" my people during a period of approximately two months, this "cultivation" of myself and people having for its objective, of course, a special collection for missions. Following this was the Superannuate Endowment Fund campaign which was supposed to have the right of way for three months, including another "cultivation" period; but before this movement was well under way the campaign for Millsaps College was launched and, at this writing, is still in progress, the end not being in sight. While both these money gathering organizations were in progress at the same time, there came the Golden Cross Enrollment. For years the pastor has been urged to take the collection for raising the regular assessments in the early part of the year, but the benevolences were necessarily side-tracked for the simple reason that the pastor could not give his attention to the regular assessments with all these other special collections on his hands. As I have bowed beneath the burden of these numerous and various collections, I confess that I have felt in sympathy with that Texas preacher who last fall at his Conference session asked to be placed on the superannuate list, assigning as a reason for his request that he had found himself unable to keep step with the program of the church in the matter of financing campaigns.

The editor of the Advocate "hits the nail on the head" when he says: "The necessity of taking one collection after another, of putting on one campaign after another, of carrying on intensive periods for collections year after year has done two things: it has made of the ministry largely an agency of propaganda for financial activities, and it has produced a state of mind in the laity that borders very closely upon resentment." (Type emphasis mine.) These wise and timely words precisely state the exact situation as it exists today among the laity and in the ministry, and if something is not done at an early day to relieve the stress of the situation which, as the editor affirms, "borders very closely upon resentment," the result will be utter indifference to all financial appeals, if not rebellion. The evidence that we are already rapidly approaching one or the other of these conditions is manifest, as indicated in the editor's further statement that "the financial returns under the present system are growing less all the time, while more and more intensive methods have to be used to produce even these diminishing results." We are indeed, as the editor truly says, "face to face with a situation that is highly critical and that threatens disaster unless a better financial system can be found." (Type emphasis mine.)

Following the forceful statement of the critical situation produced by high-pressure methods of those who have been out of the pastorate so long that they are apparently unaware of the conditions herein discussed and which the church is now facing, Dr. Carley offers some excellent, pertinent and thought-provoking suggestions as a remedy for the relief of the present critical situation and looking toward the adoption of a better financial system. The first of these suggestions is in substance that the General Conference declare all church-wide campaigns closed, and the editor emphasizes his attitude by saying that when he says closed he means closed. More emphatically Dr. Carley adds: "Wipe the slate clean." (Type emphasis mine.) In my opinion this first suggestion, including the cancellation of all pledges made in these campaigns—"wiping the slate clean"—is fundamental to all the other suggestions offered by the editor. Personally, I am not waiting for the General Conference to declare these financial campaigns closed—my part in them, with the single exception of the mission special, is already closed, and I have wiped my slate clean.

One of the finest paragraphs in the editorial under discussion is the closing one, a part of which I quote: "We have heard it said that a revival will come when the church begins to give as it ought to give; we believe it more likely that the people will give as they ought to give when a revival comes. * * * The primary need of the church is spiritual power—and that power will come from more religion, and not from more money. Let us develop the power and the money will take care of itself." (Type emphasis mine.)

During his ten years as editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Dr. Carley has never written a wiser or more timely editorial than the one in which he has so admirably presented the conditions as they exist in the church to-day than the one in which he has so ably discussed, "A Better Financial System." I only wish I had had the ability to write and the intellectual acumen to have conceived that editorial. Let every preacher and layman, and more especially those in authority, read again that fine editorial, and then to every word, sentence, and paragraph let all join me in saying, "Amen!"

Before closing this article, I wish to express a hope that Dr. Carley will publish his editorial in leaflet form for distribution throughout the church, and that a copy may be placed in the hands of all the delegates who may be elected to the next General Conference.

CRIPPLES BY THE WAYSIDE.

By J. R. Pepper.

A Lay Meditation. Acts 14.

There are cripples of many kinds; some in body, in mind, and in spirit; just waiting for somebody to speak the healng, sympathetic word. The great Adam Clark says that he was a physical cripple in his brain; he supposes that some membrane was pressing upon his brain, which prevented its normal action. So one day the inspector came to the school and he was wearing the "dunce cap" because he could not learn, and the teacher said to the inspector: "'Don't ask that boy who has the dunce cap on to answer anything, for he is really a dunce and does not seem to be able to learn." This so excited Adam Clark that he states that the rush of blood to his head, he thinks, ruptured the membrane and turned his brain loose, and after that he went ahead of his class continuously.

Faith the Foundation Stone of Real Life.

There is very much faith in the world, as all business must be done, more or less, by faith. Therefore, social and commercial life are based upon faith. No one can succeed without faith in his fellows. Implicit faith in God is the greatest element in any character. Many have faith enough to rise, if we could perceive it.

Every Life Has Its Own Temptations.

Each person has different temptations, but equally strong, perhaps. How we behave under temptations determines our character. There are six stages of temptations: 1. Being tempted. 2. Yielding to temptation. 3. Tempting others. 4. Resisting temptation. 5. Outliving temptation. 6. Helping others to overcome temptation.

Like Passions or Knowing One's Self.

It is well for us always to remember that we are much like the balance of the world. Some of the best people have enemies. Convictions touching righteousness cut across the grain of wrong, and will always do so. Do right and be just, is the only safe rule. Then let enemies howl with rage, if they will.

Truth Cannot and Will Not Die.

Christianity was supposed to be dead several times; but it always revives, to take quicker and longer strides. Be sure of truth and never fear.

Our Debt to a Few People in World Circles.

We never will know it. Paul and Barnabas returned over the same route as they went over, establishing the church, although very hazardous to life. They were the first and successful foreign missionaries.

Fruits of Unknown Ministry and Service.

The boy Timothy was the fruit of this perilous journey. What he became to Paul and the church, we will perhaps never know until the revelations of eternity. So we may project our lives into the future by such a faithful ministry.

Memphis, Tenn.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Winnsboro and Henry.

Winnsboro has one of the most beautiful and complete churches in Louisiana. Rev. H. W. Rickey found an old, dilapidated building there in 1924 when appointed there from the Conference at Crowley, and in the three splendid years of his pastorate he brought to pass the almost miraculous work of a complete modern church building wholly adequate to the needs of this growing little city and the pride of our Methodist constituency there.

Rev. W. S. Henry is in the first year of his pastorate and is getting along fine. He has all the interests of his church at heart. The official board is not only well organized, but is keeping up entirely with the budget requirements.

The ladies are improving the parsonage, which had fallen into disrepair because of the strenuous effort necessary in the church building campaign. We have every reason to look for great and greater things from the Methodists of the city of Winnsboro.

"A MISSIONARY MOTIVE FOR THIS GENERATION."

Final in the Epworth League "Know Missions" Contest.

By W. L. McDuff, Monroe District Contestant.

Fellow-Leaguers: My purpose this evening is to present to you a Missionary Motive for this generation. To my mind's eye, the greatest problem that confronts you and me as young Americans is the teaching of our fellow-man about Jesus Christ. And surely we remember his great command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Is this, I ask, not a sufficient missionary motive for us of this generation?

True, you and I at some time may have been hostile to foreign missions, and even now we may have friends, yea, even parents, who have this same attitude. Yet after we understand, after we know, we will doubtless wonder why and how we could have ever been so confused, so dumb to the teachings of our Lord and Master. To me this little answer solves the seemingly used-to-be puzzle. First, to us geographically speaking, foreign pertains to any country far-away or outside the boundary of our country. Then, without a doubt, religiously thinking, you already know how our Saviour would have us think in regard to those in need of missionary aid. Would he have us merely think geographically? Nay, never, but he would have us think of those who are foreign to the teachings of God, those who live far away from the standards of Christ. They are the ones in need, regardless of whether they reside in home lands or in foreign lands. And, my brothers of this generation, do we not see that it is up to us, not as individuals alone, but collectively, to live up to the teachings of our Lord, so that the example which we as a nation set before the world will be missionary in spirit, in thought, and in deed? This, to me, is the most essential and important missionary motive for this or any generation: That we should work harder than ever before in the effort wholly to Christianize our own America, so that the effect will be far-reaching; as the light which shines brightest at home shines farthest.

I am sure you all know that formerly our missionaries abroad, in telling and teaching of Christ and his great, satisfying love, caused their hearers to think that all Americans were as good and Christlike as the missionary himself. This, of course, was not their intention, but nevertheless it had its effect, and the listener in most cases did not learn of the un-Christian acts committed in our own country. To-day an entirely different situation confronts us. In fact, some of you will no doubt register amazement when I tell you that the world has shrunk so in size that should I attempt to compare the shrinkage for you, I might toss upon the fingers of this hand a fully inflated basketball to represent the world of our forefathers' time; then without exaggerating, we might let the tiny tennis ball represent our world of to-day. How and why? you will doubtless ask. And the explanation might run thusly: In the days of our forefathers, weeks and weeks were required to make a trip across the mighty Atlantic; to-day, it is a matter of only a few days. In fact, inventive genius has almost made it possible to breakfast in America and lunch the following day in Paris. Then, of course, we would consider the fast train, telephone, wireless, radio and the wonderful feats which they make possible. Just a few score years back when the Father of our Country, George Washington, passed away, it took several days for the news to reach Boston from the city of New York. A very few years ago when no less a personage than our late President, Woodrow Wilson, breathed his last, the news was flashed around the entire world in an hour's time. Therefore, we can easily see why the Christianizing of our own country is so vitally important if we are properly to back up our missionaries abroad. For now cannot our every un-Christian act be flashed through the air to appear in the headline of their daily papers, naturally having its effect upon our missionary efforts in their countries? But young men, young women, can you not see the providential hand of God Almighty as it stretches out across the universe bringing to light these mysterious and wonderful performances of the electrical and mechanical powers? Can you, too, not feel the appeal of his wonderful, magnetic love beckoning to us of this generation, down through the ages, in the gift of his only Son, saying: "Ye are the light of the world?" Is this, I ask you, not a superior missionary motive for our generation: The giving of his only Son that all the world might know?

Go with me now, if you will, in your mind and let's catch a glimpse of our world as it is to-day, yes, visions and scenes that will grip our hearts, that will cut their impressions so deep upon our minds and souls that mere man should never forget. First, let us dwell in our own homeland, where our forefathers came in search of religious freedom, where we worship a true and living God and know of his tender mercy, his great, affectionate care. Do we realize that others are following in our footsteps? Then, my brothers, where will we lead them?

Next, we might visit the far Northland, where there's no sunlight, no daylight for weeks and weeks. There in the icy huts of the Eskimos we may catch a glimpse of a cold, chubby baby hand as it stretches forth from its mother's bosom, grasping, yearning for more of God's beautiful sunlight. Then can we, too, not feel the appeal of these tiny hands yearning, longing to know more about, to get closer to this wonderful Saviour, who can indeed warm their very hearts, their whole life, causing them to live anew? It's up to you and to me, my brother. Shall we enlighten them?

And now let us travel to the faraway South, the land of sunshine, the land of those who worship idols, and who appease their false gods with human sacrifice. There we will tarry for a short visit with our African brother in Christ, for such he is. True, you and I may not love the yellow, the brown, the black-tinted physical being, but equally as true he is our brother in Christ, and we should indeed love his soul to the extent that we would gladly yield to the opportunity of serving him. In the name of our Christ, and his Christ, I ask you, Will you go?

Then again, let us journey to the orient, and there catch a glimpse of our stunted brother, physically and mentally, as well as spiritually. He, too, is a worshiper of false gods; he, too, after nothing else seems to satisfy, stretches forth his yellow-tinted, bony fingers, appealing to you and to me, grasping to catch the truth, yearning for this Jesus Gospel, this Christ Child who is able to satisfy his every need, his every desire. I ask you must Jesus bear the burden alone? Nay! Never! For we know that all these are our brothers in his name.

Therefore, we must go, help go, and let go to their aid as never before. For did not he who shed life's precious blood upon Calvary's Cross that we and they might have everlasting life, leave the command of: "Go Ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature?" This in itself should be a sufficient missionary motive for us of this or any other generation. But as we journey along down the years of time, and as we read the names of David Livingstone, John Patton, Bishop Lambuth, and scores upon scores of others who, too, gave their life's blood, the best that was in them, their very all, in this same missionary effort; can we then not feel the age-old appeal as it comes down the high-roads of time making for you and for me, a supreme, a superior, in fact an all sufficient missionary motive? not only for this, but for all generations to come.

Nancy went to visit her cousins one day. When she arrived, Aunt Margaret said: "Now, let Nancy have whatever she wants, because she is your guest."

After a few minutes of playing, Nancy ran out to the kitchen and said: "Aunt Margaret, will you please tell them who I am."—Liberty.

FOR A BETTER FINANCIAL SYSTEM—A LAYMAN WRITES.

Dear Dr. Carley: Without having glanced at any sheet of the Advocate of the current date except the first page, whereon appears the editorial headed, "A Better Financial System," which I have read carefully, permit me to say that this editorial should be put in the hands of every member of the church, within and without the jurisdictions served by the New Orleans Advocate.

It is timely. The slate should be wiped clean. Church-wide campaigns should be carried on only when absolutely necessary, and not more than one every quadrennium. A budget should be made in line with Section 3 or suggestion 3, and this budget should be collected 100 cents on the dollar.

In the humble position of lay leader of a church of some seven or eight hundred members, in the average small city of the North Mississippi Conference, I have assisted in putting on campaign after campaign for the past four years for the raising of money. All of them have been successful; never a fall down; yet I have come to realize that your closing sentence should be the slogan of the church: "Let us develop the power, and the money will take care of itself." I am not one of those who immediately grow restless when the subject of money is mentioned, but the church needs, as you have said, more real preaching than it is getting, and less of exhortation from the pulpit for the purpose of putting over this campaign or that. That should largely be the layman's job.

Again permit me to say, your editorial is timely.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES O. PRUDE, JR.

Amory, Miss.

JOHN A. RANDOLPH—AN APPRECIATION.

By Dr. Cawthon A. Bowen.

A recent sorrow has stalked forth to smite the hearts of a group bound together by a single bond of obligation and devotion to one who had befriended them and overmastered them by his radiant life. This strong, kindly soul has brought to a close the circle of his completed tasks; he has returned to One by whom he was commissioned, to be decorated again for signal bravery both under fire and amid the less tumultuous struggles of everyday living.

The reader cannot but have suspected the language just used of being militaristic. But our contention is that it is possible to transfigure the organization and workings of war when God is the Supreme Commander and his chosen men are playing a brave part in the offensive against the enemies of righteousness. That God had found just such a man and used him in the peaceful ministry of Methodism, in training camps, at outposts, in hospitals, behind the front, in front-line dug-outs, and in councils of peace makes such language appropriate when friends gather to voice their grief over Colonel John A. Randolph, U. S. A. For in his case the term "Colonel in the United States Army" and "good soldier of Jesus Christ" are synonymous.

His wide range of service carried him away from the circle of friends in his native State. It was there as a boy that I came to honor him; and often in my father's home there came news which precipitated discussion of the single-hearted devotion to duty which carried this man and his equally heroic wife to posts of danger and hardship.

But it was our good fortune that those splendid closing years of his life were spent back at home with those of us who thought that we had a peculiar claim on him. When he returned to the pastorate it was to take an important charge and minister with skill and vigor to its needs. He took an intense interest in the program of religious education of his Conference and brought to this task at a trying period the foresight and confidence which had become his possession through the experience of years. Later on, his removal to Nashville, Tenn., placed him in close contact with the important central activities of the church and with the educational life of "the Athens of the South." Though the years had been heavily reenforced in their attack upon him, he never lost that buoyant, sparkling interest in the life about him. Be it an important board meeting, or religious gathering, or the class session of some outstanding educator, this man, who seemed to have discovered the fountain of youth, was apt to be present and actively interested in what was going on. I recall his presence in the peace discussions carried on at the Young People's Conference at Memphis; his annual summer residence at Junaluska, where he worked alongside the youngest and most diligent in the effort to prepare himself for further service; his enrollment as a student at Peabody College and his high standing in a class in one of the more difficult subjects. So it was with this genuine disciple, this learner. His mind never hardened; his spirit had the resiliency of its youth. To the end he was growing, preparing, expecting, spreading the spirit of adventure and discovery.

It may be that he has been transferred, his preparation finished, to undertake greater discoveries under more favorable conditions. He has left us. But even the poignancy of our common grief cannot blind us to the completeness of his way of life.

"Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

METHODIST LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE, LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., AUG. 19-26.

By Maud M. Turpin.

One of the significant activities of Southern Methodism during the past quadrennium and a half has been the growth and development of the laymen's movement.

Under their own organization and with the slogan, "One is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brothers," at their masthead, Methodist laymen have pressed forward, bringing into their religion and the programs of the Methodist church that same energy, interest, and efficiency which have characterized them as business and professional leaders.

So rapid and marked has been the progress of the laymen's movement that one is scarcely surprised to find plans under way for celebrating the sixth anniversary of the organization of the Board of Lay Activities by a great laymen's convention and conference; nor that the theme of that conference should be, "Religion in All of Life."

Equally appropriate is the site selected for the conference—Lake Junaluska, North Carolina, seat of the Methodist Southern Assembly, where the Board of Lay Activities was organized in 1922, and which from its inception has been associated with the work of laymen.

The plans for the approaching laymen's conference at Lake Junaluska, Aug. 19-26, are the most complete that have ever been attempted, and the conference promises to set a new standard in the way of attendance, program, and recreational features.

A Friendly Invasion.

More than 4,000 laymen are expected. In every nook and cranny of Southern Methodist territory the laymen are discussing the conference and modes of travel. Texas has planned to route special trains bearing State delegations; Tennessee laymen will travel by motorcade. Coming in trainload lots or by public and private conveyances over the scenic highways of Arkansas, Louisiana, Georgia, Kentucky; Tennessee, Virginia, and the Carolinas, the friendly invasion of Methodist laymen will behold en route some of the most beautiful and interesting spots in America, while those who are fortunate enough to be at Lake Junaluska during those notable days of Aug 19 to 26, are going to be favored with seeing the most representative group of men ever assembled in one body. The gathering will include "rich men, poor men, doctors, lawyers, merchants, soldiers, sailors, teachers, tailors," perhaps a governor or two, and no telling how many presidential possibilities. Every known variety of what Methodism can produce in the way of a capable, upstanding man will be represented, with one exception—the crowd will not include any preachers, although preachers will be welcomed to sit in the body and to speak from the platform.

But it is a layman's conference. Four thousand laymen gathered to discuss how they can carry their religion into their everyday life! What a sight that will be, and what good will undoubtedly come out of it.

Theme and Speakers.

With "Religion in All Life" as the central theme, some of the subjects to be discussed include such topics as "The Witness of the Spirit;" "Religon and Theology;" "Spiritual Movements in Methodism;" "Our Methodist Forbears;" "Religion and Citizenship;" "Christianity in International Relationships," and various phases of Methodist work, such as missions, stewardship, brotherhood, education, and healing.

In addition to Methodism's own leaders, including bishops, pastors and board secretaries, the speakers include such men as S. D. Gordon, of "quiet hour" fame; Dr. F. W. Boreham, Australian author, lecturer and preacher; Walter P. Fraser, of Pittsburgh, Christian business man and philanthropist; Thomas D. Taylor, of Philadelphia, president of the Methodist Committee of One Hundred of the United States; Honorable E. Dow Bancroft, of Chicago, and others.

The program will not be all speeches and addresses. Ample opportunity will be given for colloqui and round table discussions, with special reference to themes having to do with the lay work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the direction of the General Board of Lay Activities.

The New Caruso.

General Secretary, G. L. Morelock, who was a recent visitor at the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Kansas City, was enteprising enough to secure at that time the golden voiced Mario Capelli to give special musical programs from time to time during the conference as he did at Kansas City.

Mario Capelli alone would be worth the trip to Lake Junaluska. He calls himself an Italian-American. Although one of the youngest opera stars, he is rapidly becoming famous. He was a pupil and protege of the late Enrico Caruso, who was also his friend and counselor, and who, it is said, declared Capelli to be the only person he would be willing to have called the successor to Caruso.

Signor Capelli, aside from his music, is an interesting personality. Born of Italian parents and reared in the Roman Catholic Church, he sang for five years in the Pope's cathedral choir in Rome. The story of how he became a Methodist and how he bummed his way to New York in a freight car to seek out Caruso, and became his student and disciple, is one of the interesting chapters of his life. Like his illustrious maestro, Capelli has a tenor voice of wonderful range and power. He will spend an entire eight days with the Methodist laymen's conference, where he will inspire the men with his singing of sacred music and Negro spirituals, of which he has made a special study.

Time for Play, Too.

In planning the program, recreation and fellowship have not been forgotten. The afternoons will be left free, and beautiful Junaluska and the surrounding country will afford every means to meet the most varied tastes in recreation, whether it be swimming, boating, hiking, mountain climbing, golf, tenuis, or visits to such points of interest as Eagle's Nest, Chimney Rock, Blowing Rock, Mount Mitchell, Grove Park Inn, Biltmore, and other places of unusual attraction.

Special Arrangements.

And as for railroad transportation and hotel accommodations, Ralph E. Nollner, superintendent of the Southern Assembly, has made special arrangements for the laymen's conference. A number of railroads east of the Mississippi have granted a special rate of one fare plus $1 for the round trip, with a twenty-day limit for the return trip, or a tourist rate of one and one-third fare can be secured on all railroads during the entire summer.

Equally attractive are the rates for hotel accommodations, where the best possible entertainment may be had at reasonable cost. Write to Superintendent Nollner about all these things. Watch the Methodist Layman for complete program outline, and let nothing deter you from taking your place in the great laymen's conference at Lake Junaluska, N. C., Aug. 19 to 26.

OLDER GIRLS' CAMP CONFERENCE, LAKE ARTHUR, LA., AUG. 7-17.

Realizing the possibilities for Christian education in summer training schools, the Louisiana Conference at their last annual session authorized that the Louisiana Older Girls' Camp Conference be held at Lake Arthur in Southwest Louisiana. In conference with Mr. O. S. Gates and Miss Alleen Moon, our specialists in young people's work with the General Sunday School Board, the details of the program were worked out and approved by them. The purpose of the camp is:

1. To furnish the girls of Louisiana Methodism an opportunity to fit themselves more fully for Christian service;

2. To supply ten days of fun and fellowship and inspiration under capable and consecrated Christian leadership;

3. To challenge the girls to higher standards of Christian living.

Class work will begin on the morning of the 7th, and delegates should arrive on the evening of the 6th.

It is intended for girls between the ages of 15 and 24 who have been recommended by the pastor, Sunday school superintendent, or teacher.

It will include a Standard Training School, each student being allowed to enroll for two courses, and credits will be given for satisfactory work done.

The following subjects will be taught: "The Principles of Teaching," Mrs. G. F. Winfield; "The Missionary Message of the Bible," Dr. W. W. Drake; "Worship in the Sunday School," Miss Pauline Wynn; "The Organization of the Small Sunday School" (Cokesbury Course), Rev. A. K. McLellan.

The devotional services will consist of morning watch, vespers and prayer groups.

Special features will include messages from Mrs. L. L. Harris, Misses Julia Reid and Dorothy Weber, Mrs. J. A. Stockwell, Dr. R. H. Wynn, Dr. W. W. Drake, and others.

The recreational attractions will be boating, competitive games, nature hikes, treasure hunt, track and aquatic meet, swimming, stunt night and camp fire programs.

There will be one adult counselor-advisor for each group of eight girls. The campers will form their own organization, as much like a young people's department as circumstances will permit, and will have practical experience under adult guidance.

The expenses of camp will be $22 for board and lodging, in addition to registration fee of $2.

Send for registration cards to Miss Pauline Wynn, Box 378, Lake Charles, La., by July 20 if possible.

Lake Arthur is on a splendid model highway, thirteen miles south of Jennings and forty-five miles southeast of Lake Charles. Bus lines run from Jennings and Lake Charles to Lake Arthur. Delegates coming from New Orleans save mileage by taking LaFitte Cut-off at New Iberia, which has recently been completed.

The Board of Directors comprises the following members: Rev. C. D. Atkinson; Rev. A. K. McLellan; Rev. R. H. Wynn, Dean; Miss Pauline Wynn, Camp Director; H. Wynn Rickey, Alexandria; Rev. J. H. Bowdon, Baton Rouge; Miss Elizaheth Langford, Monroe; R. H. Nelson, Shreveport; Rev. J. T. Harris, Rochelle; Mrs. M. S. Monk, Monroe; Rev. H. L. Johns, New Orleans; A. M. Mayo, Lake Charles; Mrs. W. M. Buchanan, Lake Arthur; Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., Lake Charles; J. H. Cain, De Ridder; Rev. T. F. King, Lake Arthur.

LOYALTY.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis.

In a small dictionary that I have on my desk I find "loyalty" briefly defined thus: Faithfulness; constancy; devotion. I call that analyzing loyalty. That's laying loyalty bare and looking through and through its meaning. I do not know what you think about that definition, reader, hut it gripps me and causes me to admire that word more; while it prods me and causes me to examine my own self to see whether or not I know anything about loyalty either to God, to my church, or to the other hig obligations of life.

Loyalty, My! what an exhilirating paradise of bubbling happiness this mundane world would be, if all of us were but loyal to the duties and obligations of life!

In my mind's eye I see a home wherein every inmate thereof is loyal. The parents are each loyal to the other. The husband and wife are faithful, constant and devoted to each other. Other husbands and wives may look askance at other men and women, while with heart yearnings they long for one other than their companion; but not either of these; they are faithful to each other even in thought. Their love is ever constant. Whether with each other, or separated by a thousand miles of space or months and years, each is as constant toward the other in thought, word and deed as is the constancy of the north pole to the north star. Each is devoted to the other. Each finds in the other that boon of conjugal love out of which grows the highest type of human happiness. Then the children are loyal to their parents and to each other. The parents are devoted not only to the physical and intellectual well-being and development of the children, but they are even more deeply devoted to the highest spiritual well-being and development of the children. it is a boon, a blessing, a joy and a privilege to be in such a home. Thank God we have many such on earth.

We have churches that are likewise loyal. Of course not all the members are loyal, but perhaps a majority of them are loyal. Nothing can swerve these loyal church members from their obligations and privileges in the church. Of course in the very nature of human events it now and then happens that even a loyal church gets a pastor who has sharp angles and is in many respects unlikable and non-considerate of others; but these loyal church members do not get huffy and desert their church while they are afflicted with such a minister, but, realizing that their loyalty, devotion and love are to Jesus Christ, and that their church is the only adequate vehicle through which they can express their loyalty to God and to Jesus Christ, they endure the hardship imposed upon them through their non-considerate pastor, while they work faithfully and honestly to help put over the great forward programs of the church.

Then last but not least, we have loyal preachers. It frequently happens that a loyal minister does not receive from his congregation the earnest, constant and devoted support that always makes the heart of a preacher glad and inspires him to his greatest efforts for service. More than one loyal minister, in all our denominations, has failed, not because of lack of loyalty and ability on his part, but because a worldly-wise church, under the leadership of one man or woman, failed to respond to spiritual leadership. Said minister preached the gospel with wisdom, earnestness and efficiency, but because of unbelief on the part of the leaders of the church, was unable to accomplish anything worth while, either in material or spiritual progress. More than one minister has sensed the fact that he was getting nowhere in his work, because of the fact that he was blocked in his efforts through the influence of one man or woman who was of the low-pressure type and who had no spiritual vision. It has also happened, more than one time, that according to worldly-wise wisdom, said minister knew just what to do to succeed apparently and win the support of the key man of his church, but loyalty to Jesus Christ kept him true to the gospel, with the result that he was supplanted by another who allowed the boss of the church to have his way. Thus the preacher's loyalty to Jesus Christ cost him humiliation; but what of that? Jesus was not only humiliated, but was put to death because of his loyalty to God. Jesus told his followers that it is enough for the servant to be as his master. Men have not been put to death in recent years because of loyalty to Jesus Christ, though there was a time when Christians were burned, thrown to the beasts and otherwise put to death. Why should a minister refuse to be loyal to Jesus Christ because of the little humiliation that comes to him through a mild sort of persecution? After all, it is not the minister to whom objection is made, for those who demand his removal often are free to admit that he preaches the gospel faithfully, and that there is nothing personal against him; therefore it is the same old story of being opposed to Jesus Christ and his lordship over their lives to which they are opposed.

Loyalty, most anywhere, cannot be had for the asking. Loyalty, like every other worth-while thing that comes to us, costs us something. It costs self-denial, self-sacrifice and sometimes the endurance of hardships and persecutions. But the dividends in blessings, whether in the home, in society, in the political and business world, or in the church, are always forthcoming. Loyalty always pays in the long run. Disloyalty may hand out an immemdiate pay-envelope, but the blessings thereof are temporary, after which the disloyal soul often must nurse the conviction that he is a cheat, a cad.

Judas was disloyal and received thirty pieces of silver as his price for delivering Jesus to the mob; but watch him as he throws the thirty pieces of silver on the ground and then hangs himself! Ananias was disloyal and kept back part of the price of his land, while he told the apostles that he was laying all on the altar. Watch him! See, yonder he goes, feet-foremost, to be buried as a liar.

The disloyal church, the disloyal church member and the disloyal minister are fast being drawn toward destruction and damnation, to which sad estate they will arrive, except they repent.

O God, let me be loyal to Jesus Christ and his gospel at any earthly cost!

CHURCH DEDICATION AND HOME-COMING DAY.

Dear Dr. Carley: Please announce through the Advocate that there will be a Home-coming Day at McAdams church, on the Sallis charge, July 15. We are to have our church dedicated, and we invite all former pastors, presiding elders, and members to come home and enjoy the day with us. We will have the dedicatory sermon at 11 o'clock, and other speakers in the afternoon. We invite you to be present. Come.

A. W. BAILEY, Pastor.

The boys and girls in the little Thursday school at Malines, Belgium, operated in connection with the Flemish Methodist church in that city, are full of enthusiasm for the work. There are many other children who wish to come to the school, but dare not because their parents have been terrified by the priests. At Christmas time the little children of the Thursday school made all the decorations for the Christmas tree, paying for the colored paper, the paint and the brushes, etc., themselves. "This is wonderful," says the pastor, the Rev. A. Miletes, "for the Belgians think it is more pretty to receive than to give."

AUTOBIOGRAPHY—ROBERT ANDREWS DAVIS.

Shortiy aftre this time I assisted my father to move to Opelousas, where they took charge of the boarding department of the Opelousas Female College. I boarded with them and attended the male college, preaching wherever I was called. I wrought in the shop and went to schooi pretty well through the winter; then I took charge of a school at Waxia, and preached up on Bayou Boeuff.

Joins Louisiana Conference.

I joined the Louisiana Conference on trial in the spring of 1866, at the Conference in New Orieans. I was ordained deacon by Bishop James O. Andrews. I was named for him.

I was appointed to the Big Cane and Evergreen circuit. Papa and mamma had moved to Evergreen to teach, so again I was able to stay with them.

In 1868 I was appointed to the same circuit, but Brother Fred White, the presiding elder, changed me to the Spring Creek circuit, which extended from Cheneyville to Calcasieu River, embracing the territory from Red River north of Rapides Bayou, to the Texas line west of Alexandria, down to Cocodria, and back to Bayou Boeuff. I continued to live with my father at Evergreen while on the Spring Creek circuit.

I was called on for the first time to baptize by immersion. We had a number of accessions to the church on the Sugartown circuit and the pastor couid not baptize them, being unordained, so he called on me.

I had bought me a splendid pony, so I rode down and assisted the preacher. All the candidates for baptism were wiiling to be baptized my affusion except one young lady. To gratify her I secured some clothing from a country brother. We found a beautifui place near a mili. As I stepped into the water I began singing, "We'li cross the River of Jordan," and as I went into deeper water, which I found very coid indeed, I was singing, "We'li—cross—the—River—," I said, "Brethren, you will have to sing, the water is too cold for me to do that." I led the young lady out pretty deep so I would have no troubie raising her up after I dipped her under.

I returned to my circuit, and at Brother Laird's was struck down with a severe type of fever, which iasted me quite a time. But a good doctor was near, and with his skiil, medicine and the biessing of the Lord, I got all right again.

Whiie on the Spring Creek circuit, toward the close of the year, I was called on to marry a couple. They iived in the pine woods about sixty or seventy miies from Evergreen. So I mounted my pony, rode up Bayou Boeuff, through Alexandria, up Bayou Rapides, and out into the hiiis. I stopped with a Brother Simms on Bayou Rapides, for that was home to me, being one of my preaching places. Then I went on to the piace where I was to marry the coupie. When I arrived I was astonished at the poverty of the people. But as it was a year of work for nothing, I went in and made myseif known.

I married the couple and then went into the dining room. All the floors were dirt, for the house was a mere four walls with a roof on it. The bride's cake was made with molasses. The funniest thing about it aii happened after dinner. The groom asked me to step outside with him. Then he said, "Let's take a waik." My suspicions were aroused. During the war some of our company had been detaiied to hunt jaw-hawkers in or near this section of country. I thought maybe this man had found out I was a member of the Eighteenth Louisiana Regiment and wanted to take the spite out on me. I noticed he kept iooking around each clump of bushes we passed. Then he examined the thickets on each side of the road for the mile or more we covered. I had ieft my pistol in my saddle-bags and I had no pocketknife, but I decided to use my fists if necessary and sell my life as dearly as possible.

Suddenly, he stopped, then turning into the thickest thicket we had passed said, "Come in here." As I took the next step he ieaned up close to me and said, "Parson, how much do I owe you?" I was so reiieved, I exclaimed, "Not a cent, not a cent." "Thank ye, sir; and when you are in this country come to see us and you wiii aiways be welcome," was his reply.

I was not iong in getting back to Sister Davidson's and Brother Simms. At Brother Simms, I married his stepson to a beautifui girl. He gave me a fine $50 broadcloth coat for my services.

During this year I repaired the wheels on my father's buggy and he let Brother Robert Randle and me drive to Conference in it. This Conference was held at New Iberia, and it was at this time I was transferred to the Mississippi Conference.

For the year 1869, I was appointed to the Clover Hill circuit. Here I taught school. The work extended from Clover Hill to Egg Point, on the Mississippi River, over the muddiest roads I ever saw.

At the end of the year, in December, 1869, I attended Conference in Jackson, Miss. Here is where I first saw young Charies B. Galloway, afterwards one of our bishops. Dr. John C. Keener, also afterwards bishop, preached as fine a sermon as I had ever heard, from the text, "Had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Giory" (I Cor. 2:8). The sermon made an indelible impression on me. I was returned to the Clover Hill circuit, where I continued my school.

During this year, I was attacked with a very severe pain in my right side and confined to my bed. My friends despaired of my iife, and my dear mother came up to see me in great fear and anxiety. But when she arrived at Uncle Lawrence T. Wade's she found me better and up. The good Lord had been with me and brought me through.

I bought me a fine $175 horse, which could take me throough the mud of these bad roads.

During the summer I made a visit to my father's house. He had been appointed to the Columbia circuit and had moved to Copenhagen Prairie, six miles from Columbia. A protracted meeting had been appointed, but my father was sick, so the conducting of the services devolved on me.

On Saturday, Aug. 20, I was in the puipit by 11 a. m., and looking over the congregation just before announcing the hymn, about midway I saw a pretty giri. I said to myseif, "If that young lady is not a widow or engaged, if I have a chance I'il make a speech to her."

The horse my mother was riding, a few days prior to this Saturday, stumbied and fell, and mamma feil to the ground, spraining her knee. Of course, this kept her in bed for some time.

This same Saturday afternoon, as mamma was lying in bed, the above-mentioned young lady came to see her. I came in and mamma introduced me to Miss Lizzie Day. She was quite a friend of my sister Eiia, and had come to see my mother, also to stay all night and take in the meeting.

We had quite a stir, penitents at the aitar, a number converted.

Whenever I couid, I was with Miss Lizzie. The parsonage was a miie from the church, or schoolhouse, where we preached. I walked with the young lady every night, until on Wednesday night, the 24th of August, 1870, we became engaged. You may believe this was a happy time for me.

Fifty conversions and forty accessions to the church were the resuit of the meeting; besides, I had found a sweet giri to love.

I went back to Mississippi, taking Sister Mollie with me, finished my years's work, and attended Conference.

The Conference was divided that year into the Mississippi and the North Mississippi. It was heid at Crystal Springs. Here, on Dec. 18, 1870, I was ordained eider by Bishop David Seth Doggett.

I transferred back to the Louisiana Conference and was married to Miss Lizzie A. Day, Jan. 1, 1871. The Louisiana Conference was heid in New Orleans. I was appointed to the Caldweii circuit and papa was superannuated.

This circuit consisted of fifteen appointments or preaching places. I received $50 for my year's work.

Conference met at Monroe in January, 1872. I was reappointed to the Caldwell circuit.

On our way back from Conference Brother Parvin was with me and preached for me at Columbia, and to my amazement took up a collection for me. In taking up the collection, in his talk he had occasion to speak of my horse. "Why, brethren, I saw his horse this morning lying flat on his back and could not get up. Why? The horse in failing had gotten between two potato rows, and whichever side he turned there was the ridge in the way."

During 1872 I received for my work $150 quarterage, includnig some home-made meat full of skippers.

In 1873 I was sent to Lake Charles, where we had a fine school during part of the year. Before its close the town decided to open a public school, and asked us to take it. My wife had to take the teacher's examination. The chairman of the board asked her to write out an application as assistant teacher, which she did. When he had read it he told her the English and spelling were perfect; so that was her examination.

With the school and circuit I received $500.

In 1874 we were given charge of Patterson and Morgan City. In Patterson we taught school for $50 per month. This was the combined salary of wife and self.

Here in July our first baby was born. We named her Eula. She was born July 17, 1874. We were returned to Patterson and Morgan City in 1875.

STORM THE THRONE OF GRACE.

"Storm the throne of grace," said John Wesley, speaking from much experience, "and persevere therein, and mercy will come down." "Let not the man who prays with a weak and wavering faith," says St. James, "think that he shall receive anything from the Lord." Prayer that seeks and secures power from on high cannot itself be a weak and impotent thing.

Writing of prayer as "the most powerful organic of efficiency," W. E. Doughty says: "The Bible often asserts and everywhere assumes that prayer has power to change things. Something really happens when we pray aright. In Christ's teaching prayer involves the putting forth of vital energy intended to secure definite and unmistakable results. Prayer is not passive; it is active. It is the kinetic energy of the soul applied to the highest tasks in the kingdom. . . . Prayer puts forces at the disposal of God to be applied by him to definite tasks. Prayer does not change the will of God, but it enables God to change the wills of men. Prayer does not persuade God, but it gives God a power to bring to bear on men to persuade them. All prayer is directed to him, and the putting forth of prayer-energy releases forces which God can and does use to accomplish dsfinite and practical ends."

But the thing that inspires a great faith and a prayer of power must be something spiritual and not something of trifling significance and merely material value, such as food and drink, and raiment and riches; after which things the Gentiles seek, and because it is such things as these that they pray for, the idea of power is never associated with pagan prayer.—W. F. Tillett, in "Providence, Prayer and Power."

Open-air services have been inaugurated by Methodists in Santa Clara, Cuba, in sections of the city where there are no churches. Although great numbers of people in Cuba would never think of entering a Protestant church, it has been found that a majority of this class will come to the open-air services and listen attentively to the singing, praying, and preaching. The preaching in Santa Clara has been done by an official of the Cuban Provincial Government, who is a member of the Methodist church in that city.

WHY JOHNNY FAILED.

Johnny had a little mind;
It was his very own,
And nothing could be put in it
Except by him alone.
It wasn't very big, it's true,
But there was room inside
For lots of things, chosen out
As Johnny should decide.

Mother and father gave him
All sorts of good advice;
But Johnny never put it in
Or thought about it twice;
But all the ugly things the boys
Upon the corners said,
Why Johnny picked them up at once
And put them in his head.

At school the teacher tried her best
To give him facts and rules
Of every useful sort—but no,
For Johnny hated schools.
He picked up brag and vulgar slang,
Dime novels, too, ten deep,
And filled his mind till it was like
A tainted rubbish heap.

So when the day of manhood came,
When Johnny searched his mind
For skill and power, it played him false,
And nothing could he find
But worthless trash and ugly thoughts
And lo, he failed, alas!
Is any other boy who reads this Coming to Johnny's pass?

THE LITTLE LOST CALF.

One summer morning, sixty years or so ago, something dreadful happened in the little village of Jason. Perhaps you remember reading how the cows of the village gathered together every morning in a little herd and went to and from the meadows of their own accord, feeding all summer on the rich grass and pure water, carrying these home every night in the form of sweet, creamy milk for the village boys and girls.

This morning, down in one of the cow pens after the cows had started on their early morning trip to the meadows, a little red-and-white calf stood and bawled lonesomely. His mother had gone with the rest of the herd; but he was too little, his owner thought, to follow her all that long way. So he was kept at home.

The little daughter of the house had a very soft spot in her tender heart for the gentle cows and the dear long-legged calf. She slipped out to the pen to pet him and keep him from being so lonesome. But alas—as she opened the gate to go in to him, he saw his way clear to freedom and mother. Before she could stop him, he had dashed past her out of the gate. With a flourish of heels and tail, off he went at a surprising speed.

He did not go out the front way, as his mother had gone. There is where he made his sad mistake. Instead, he was cut of the back gate like a flash and away across the fields.

Breathlessly the little girl ran after him. But try as she might, she could not keep up to him. By the time she was across the fields she found that he had disappeared in the woods that backed them—miles and miles of Jersey pines and underbrush, in which it was easy for a little red-and-white calf to hide and lose himself, and hard, too hard, for a breathless, tearful little girl to find him.

Straight back to the factory she ran and told father.

"Don't cry, Dolly," he comforted her. "His mother will find him and bring him home again."

But the meadows were in the opposite direction from the trail of the runaway. Evening brought the cows home as usual; but no little red-and-white calf came with them. The mother cow bawled sorrowfully through the night—and Dolly wept with her. Searching parties scoured the woods and fields the next day, but found no trace of the lost calf. Other parties and other days brought no better success. Dolly and the bereaved mother had about given up hope, when, down the village street one afternoon there traveled a strange procession. Several half-grown boys came walking very sedately for half-grown boys. In their midst they bore a rude litter, made of poles and leafy branches; and on the litter lay a very weak, very thin but still very much alive and hungry little red-and-white calf. They had found it lying exhausted in the woods, miles from home and the meadows.

Such tears of joy as Dolly shed—enough to wash away all tears of sorrow. Such petting and feeding and nursing as brought that returned runaway back to health and strength. It was a wonderful time; and it was hard to tell whether Dolly or the mother cow was happier to see him, and love him back to the life he had so nearly left.—Selected.

TOM'S LESSON.

Uncle Jack had taken Tom for a walk in the woods, and as they came through the grove, Tom idly brought his stick down upon a family of ants that were busy carrying into their home some crumbs that had been left by a picnic party.

"I am sorry that the woodland newspaper will have to report a tragedy," said Uncle Jack, soberly. "They will have to say: 'While busy storing provisions in their home near Long Pond, the ant family were struck by a terrible tornado, and nearly every one perished. This was an excellent family and was doing no harm. In the home were several little ones, who waited through the night for something to eat, but finding the house overturned and their parents missing, they strayed off into the woods and were lost. The cause of the tornado is unknown.'"

"Why, is it like that?" asked Tom, in surprise.

"Certainly. They have been at some pains to build that little house; see how ingenious they were fashioning it! Now it is laid waste and they must find a new spot. Some of the little ones are dead, too."

Tom looked down ruefully at the havoc he had made.

"I know what will make them happy," he said; "I will leave this piece of nut cake from my lunch box, and they will eat that." He laid the cake down carefully and was rewarded by seeing other ants swarm over it and carrying bits to another place, where he thought they meant to build a new home. "I think they will soon forget," he said; "don't you?"

"Probably, but if they forget, I am sure you will not," said Uncle Jack. And Tom found that he never did.—Youth's Companion.

A NEWSBOY PREACHER.

A bright-eyed, shabby little fellow was working his way through a crowded car, offering his papers in every direction in a way that showed him well used to the business and of a temperament not easily daunted.

The car started while he was making change, and the conductor, passing him, laughed. "Caught this time, Joe!" he said. "You'll have to run to Fourteenth Street."

"Don't care," laughed Joe in return. "I can sell all the way back again."

A white-haired old gentleman seemed interested in the boy and questioned him concerning his way of living and his earnings. There was a young brother to be supported, it appeared. "Jimmy" was lame and "couldn't earn much himself."

"Ah, I see. That makes it hard; you could do better alone."

The shabby little figure was erect in a moment, and the denial was prompt and somewhat indignant. "No, I couldn't. Jim's somebody to go home to; he's lots of help. What would be the good of havin' luck if nobody was glad? Or of gettin' things if there was nobody to divide it with?"

"Fourteenth Street!" called the conductor, and as the newsboy jumped out into the gathering dusk the old gentleman remarked to nobody in particular: "I've heard many a poorer sermon than that."—Presbyterian of the South.
